Geo. King, of Franklin, took a 12 mile sleigh ride to Auburn Tuesday, although the mercury was eight below quite early that morning. He had milling to do and paid the COURIER.

Mrs. Ira Bone, of Concord, was not kept at home by the severe cold, when she came up Tuesday to pay the COURIER. Such ladies ought to have the right to vote.

Uncle Jocob Becher sent in his subscription yesterday by his nephew, C. C. Kryder. He and his good wife are getting along in years, but we are glad to learn are in fair health.

Sunday morning Rev. J D. Brosy received a telegram from Dr. O. E Nusbaum, at Bremen, that Mrs. Nusbaum had died that morning. It was a great shock to their numerous friends here, for both had been very popular during their stay in Auburn. We did not learn the particulars.

Obituary.

Mother McNamara was born in Scotland, Sept. 8, 1816, and died at her home in Jackson Tp., Jan. 30, 1895, at the age of 78 years, 4 months and 22 days. She united with the Christian church at the age of 16, and lived a faithful devoted members, until the master called her to her reward. The funeral service were held in the Lutheran church at Spencerville on Friday, conducted by Rev. Gilbert.

Oft we'el think of thee, dear mother,
Long to see thy loving face.
But if Jesus thought 'twere better
We will bear it through Gods grace,

Whilst thou lived thou hadst like others,
Trials, crosses cares, to bear;
But the Savior sent the message
Thou art gone a crown to wear,

The Drummer Boy of Rappahannock

Major R. H. Hendershot, the original "Drummer Boy of Rappahannock," the most wonderful drummer in the world, and his son, J. O. Hendershot, who is one of the best fifers in America, will positively be here to take part in the camp fire entertainment to be given Feb. 23, by the W. R. C. at Armory Hall. Maj. Hendershot brings with him the original drum presented him by Horace Greely for gallant conduct at the battle of Fredericksburg the 11, 12 and 13th of December, 1862. He will be assisted by some of our best local talent. No one in Auburn but has heard of Mr. Hendershot and his wonderful powers as a drummer, as well as his brilliant record in the war. No one in Auburn should fail to hear and see him.

The Supreme Court of Connecticut has decided that Dr. Lee, who has been acquitted of the crime of murder by the verdict of a jury, shall be subjected to another trial. It is admitted that this decision is without precedent, but the argument is said to be that the reason for the old common law rule no longer exists. But how about the declaration in the Constitution of the United States that no person shall be "subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb?" This has always been understood to be an absolute bar to a second trial of a person who has been once acquitted of a capital offense. It is hardly conceivable that the five Judges of the Supreme Court of Connecticut should overlook or forget this, but it is hard to see how they could get around it.

Judging by the extracts from the Japanese papers, the Japanese seem to feel very bad about the accusations in regard to what was done by their army at Port Arthur. They are particularly touched, it would seem, by the charge that they had "lapsed into barbarism," from which, it is to be inferred by the language, they had emerged for just a little while. They will find, however, as they go on, that one of the elements of true civilization is to have in yourself such a robust confidence as to be able to be absolutely indifferent to all such accusations. They have not yet tied any enemies to the muzzles of their cannon, yet when England did this she was sure that she herself was the true and only type of civilization on the earth. What was done at Port Arthur was a trifle compared to what happened once in the city of Magdeburg in a certain religious war, and when the Japs read about the "Jacquerie" in France and the French Revolution they will be astonished at their own moderation.

The wheat yield of the United States last year is officially reported as 460,207,145 bushels. How the statistician at Washington managed to arrive at the fact with such extreme precision, when ordinary folks suppose he does not know to within many bushels how much wheat was produced in a single one of the immense number of townships in the United States, is something not easily explained in a manner that would be complimentary to the men who do the "work." It is a wonder that somebody has not ere this called the attention of Secretary Morton to the fact that somebody in his bureau is playing the fool with figures, since no man who knows anything of the subject thinks it possible to ascertain crop results to the claimed exactitude.

The partial overflow of the great Salton Desert in Southern California a few years ago was succeeded by a rich vegetation. The verdure-clad character of the depression soon gave way to an aridity as complete as that which had marked the tract for ages, but it lasted long enough to show the capabilities of the soil and demonstrate the possibility of converting it into a garden by means of sufficient irrigation. It was seen that enough of water for this purpose could be obtained at comparatively small cost, since the greater part of the desert lies below the bed of the swift moving Colorado River, the overflowing of which caused the flooding referred to. The region already is accessible, as the line of the Southern Pacific Railroad runs right through it, for a distance which takes the trains nearly half a day to traverse it. Hence it is not surprising to be informed by a dispatch from San Diego that a company with an authorized capital of seven million dollars has been formed for the purpose of irrigating this ancient lake bottom and making it blossom as the rose.

"UNCLE REMUS."

The Great Humorous Writer Down in Dixie.

The author of the famous "Uncle Remus" tales was born in middle Georgia in 1848. His early education was received at the printer's case in a country newspaper office, and there he laid the foundation for his future career as a journalist. He is editorial writer for the Atlanta Constitution, with which paper he is permanently connected. The writing of his folk-lore tales and other stories of Southern life has been incidental to his other work, or, to quote his own words, "as a sort of recreation from the pressure and grind of editorial writing." They are nearly all written at night. He is very domestic in his tastes, never going into society or to the theater. His family consists of his mother, his wife, four exceedingly bright boys and a girl.

JOEL C. HARRIS.

Solving a Difficulty.

The problem of comfortably housing the poor in crowded cities has been partially solved in London. Thirty years ago the condition of the tenement dwellers was most pitiable. Filth abounded, and there was little attempt to impose sanitary regulations. Squalor was everywhere, and the ghost of disease walked abroad at all times. A company organized by philanthropic men undertook a project of reform. Immense blocks were erected and subdivided into little apartments of two or three rooms each, sometimes more, each "self-contained." The rent was about the same as would have to be paid for filthy rooms in an undesirable quarter, and ranged from five to eight shillings a week. Owing to the advanced price of lots it has become difficult of late for the builders to keep within the centers of labor, as they have always tried to do, thus saving the tenants a long daily journey to work and return. The stairs and landings are on the outside of the building, thus giving no central shaft or elevator well to invite the flames should fire catch in them. This method also gives more privacy to the inmates than with the common central hallways. Forty-five estates belong to this company, comprising 5,368 separate dwellings. Nearly 30,000 people are accommodated.

New Era in Text-Book Writing.

Our best text-books, said a school teacher the other day, are getting to be more and more like the newspapers; they give a clear and comprehensive outline of the whole story in the opening paragraphs so that the student sees at once where he is going and what he is going for. We are all infants of a large growth. We are always asking: "What for?" When a child is taught to say that a State is bounded on the west by a river and on the north by something else, he says to himself, either consciously or unconsciously: "Well, what of it?" When he is told that a line is imaginary he inquires: "Who imagined it and what did he do it for?" All these questions the scientific writer of text-books endeavors to answer as far as possible.

About the only pleasure in this life is to have friends who "spoil" you.

THE MODERN ST. VALENTINE.

—Texas Siftings.

A MESSAGE OF LOVE.

Now, Mercury wears a suit of gray,
And his twisted stick he has given away
For a bag slung over his shoulder,
While the feathery wings have left his feet,
Yet he hurries along on his daily beat,
Though the weather grows colder and colder.

He brings me a letter from her to-day.
Now what in the world will my lady say?
My mind is in wild disorder
As I tear the dainty paper apart,
When out falls a blood-red velvet heart,
With a row of pins for a border!

Well, I pick up the pretty, useless thing,
And love it, for here did her fingers cling;
Yet I cannot choose but wonder
Is it an emblem, a symbol true;
Will she pierce my heart so, through and through,
Till its depths are torn asunder?

I think how a harsh word hurts and stings;
I think of a thousand hard, cruel things;
For one gains with love, and loses.
Then I think of my dear one's sweet, pure face,
And my heart again at her feet I place—
Let her plant there just what she chooses!

And her pin-cushion—why, without a doubt,
The pins were meant to be taken out!
How blind I have been, and stupid!
So this is the message she sends to-day:
She will take each sting from my heart away,
And undo the work of Cupid!

—Bessie Chandler in Harper's Bazar.

NETTIE'S PARTY.

"Stop! Stop! Wait a minute! I'm going to have a valentine party," shouted Nettie Small, to attract the attention of the girls and boys swinging their book-bags, talking and laughing on their way to school.

"Oh, oh! How nice!" from the girls.

"Hurrah! What fun!!" from the boys.

"It's going to be real cute! Mamma says we might try to make somebody happy on that day and all the year; and she's going to help us. She says that each one of us must write on a little piece of paper what he would be willing to do, real truly, you know, and send it to my house before the party, and—well, I'm not going to tell you any more about it."

But I'm afraid that the idea was not a pleasing one generally, for on St. Valentine's eve only four boys and three girls appeared at the party. But they made more noise and fun than a regiment, Aunt Patty said.

Mamma Small had prepared the party room, and a little later the door was thrown open.

In the center stood Grandma Small's great "Swifts" filled with eight skeins of yarn, the ends of which were held in grandma's hand, and on one side was a table with such tempting dishes of oranges, cakes and goodies as to make the hungry boys cast very longing glances toward it.

First the yarn must be wound, and Bob Murch, being the oldest, was invited to select one from the many threads held in Grandma Small's hand. Then he began to wind—backward, of course.

What awkward work he made of it! The girls laughed at him. The boys called him old Poky! He dropped the ball, and it rolled around all the table legs. Bob crawled after it, and bumped his head right under the orange dish. Off tumbled the yellow balls, and what a scurrying catch the precious things.

The "Swifts" were upset and there was danger of breaking up the party, but fortunately Mamma Small came to the rescue and helped Bob to the end of his skein, where was tied his "valentine." Mamma Small opened it, and read for him aloud:

"'I will do lame Sally Bonny's chores in the mornings!'"

"Oh, dear—if 'taint too cold!" cried Bob, rubbing his bumped spot and looking rueful, for he disliked to get up early.

"'If 'taint too cold!' No, no! you've got to, anyway, cold or hot, so there!" shouted Tom Parsons.

Then it was Tom's turn. He was deft of hand, and soon came to Valentine number two.

"I will learn to sew and knit and be handy, so to help mother. She has to work so hard for me!"

"Girl-boy! Girl-boy" shouted Bob.

"I don't care, I will—see if I don't!" declared Tom, stoutly.

Now Nettie took an end. Her skein was snarly, but her patience held out, and at the end was the promise:

"I will try to keep a soft tung!"

"Good! good" cried grandpa, pounding his cane on the hearth.

Nan White next whirled the Swifts and got:

"I will not quarrel at home and abroad, and keep my hands clean."

So the Swifts spun round, amid dancing and shouting, bringing to Sukey Allen's hand the valentine:

"I will wate upon gramma and grampa without grumbling."

To Tim Akers:

"I will lead blind Johnny Rich to church every pleasant Sunday."

To Milly Flint:

"I'm a-goin' to turn over a new leaf and be so good that nobody will know me no more."

"Stick down the corner, Milly!" cried grandpa, shaking off his glasses with laughter.

Then came the last skein, and fly-away Jack Mills began it. His ball was one-sided and "wobbly," the children said, but the promise was straight enough:

"I won't kick if another boy tries to crow over me!"

How they all shouted! Grandma clapped her hands softly, and grandpa drummed his cane harder than ever, making old Dan bark till the room rang.

With each "valentine" was given a present—a silk muffler to Tim, a work-basket with thimble, scissors and needles to Tom, perfumed soap and a nail brush to Nan, and so on.

I will not say that there were not some failures, for a year is a long time, but I do know that the children's hearts grew warmer, larger and more kindly in this loving, helpful service to others.—Youth's Companion.

VALENTINE'S PRANKS.

Carrie Careless' History of the Loving Saing—A Picnic for the Girls.

Valentines are provided for all. Like the rain, they may descend upon the just and upon the unjust. They are to be found in every style and every variety. Beautiful valentine souvenir spoons are seen, and they are out of the ordinary run of spoons, in that the end of the handle is in the form of a cupid, and cupids chase each other around the twisted wire of which the handle is formed. In the bowl of the spoon fancy letters give forth the legend, "The Saint of Love," and upon the reverse of the bowl there are engraved the initials of her who gives the spoon and her who takes it.

Very few people, writes Carrie Careless, go through with the old form of valentine sending, and there is little use, then, for the display of the fancy colored paper with the pretty verse within and figures done in fancy paper work upon the outside. But ever so many people who have not permitted themselves to grow hard and unsentimental love to remember the day by some little token, to indicate that St. Valentine has left traces of his love in their hearts.

Perhaps you have heard the legend of St. Valentine, but if you have not, here it is in as small a nutshell as such a saint could be well condensed: St. Valentine lived long ago. An emperor ruled him, and the emperor, whose name was Claudius, became very jealous of St. Valentine, or Fr. Valentine, as he was then called. And one day Claudius cut Fr. Valentine's head off, and banished his remains, so that nobody should know that he had been beheaded.

"Now, why did Claudius do this?" you ask. Well, he did it because Fr. Valentine became so great a favorite with young people that Claudius was not in their affections at all.

"But how did Valentine make himself such a favorite?" you still query. Why, how, indeed? How do you suppose? How does any man, or woman either, for that matter, become solid with young people? Why, by helping along their love affairs, to be sure, and by giving them every opportunity to be alone and talk it over. Now, Fr. Valentine was a born match-maker, and he was always busy making matches. If he saw two young people looking at each other with sheepish eyes, he cast his toga over his head and sat still, never stirring for five minutes.

And so Fr. Valentine got himself disliked by the Emperor Claudius, and after Claudius had cut his head off the young people canonized him, and, upon the good old saint's birthday, would exchange little love tokens, just to keep his memory green. The people who had known St. Valentine when on earth told their children about him in after years, and their children told their children's children, and so it has come down to us through many children of children.

Do not, then, despise the little bit of sentiment which prompts people to remember each other on Valentine's Day, because of all the festivals of the year it is the one which plays most sweetly upon the heartstrings of all. In the postoffice one sees many a maiden and many a matron, many a young man and many a banker stopping for a moment in front of the parcel window to drop in a package, all too precious to be intrusted to the careless hands of messenger and office boys.

It is the girls in this progressive age who do much of the giving. The young men do, of course, the greater part of it, but it is not considered unwomanly for a girl to make her admirers presents of small mementos, and, therefore, the girls go to the full latitude which is allowed in this direction.

In sending valentine mementos, the dear girls prefer to disguise their handwriting, because a valentine gift is a love gift, and no mistake about it. And so, with papa's stub pen in hand and one of Jack's big plain envelopes, they direct the little token which carries with it the pretty little message which no man, who is a man at all, would misconstrue or take advantage of.

Cupid's Day.

Sing ho! sing hey!
For Valentine's day,
When birds their mates are choosing;
When maidens fair
With furtive air
Fond missives are perusing.

The jolly saint
With pen and paint,
Sly Cupid's work is doing;
His skill he shows
In verse and prose,
To help along each wooing.

The postman groans
With aching bones,
And thinks it quite a blunder,
That love-sick swains
Indite such strains
For him to stagger under.

But maidens gay
And widows gray,
And lonely bachelors forlorn,
Still own his power
And bless the hour
When good St. Valentine was born.

—Good Housekeeping.

To Avoid Colds.

There is one very simple way of avoiding colds—keep your mouth shut while out of doors. The man or woman who comes out of an overheated room, especially late at night, and breathes through the mouth, will either catch a bad cold or irritate the lungs sufficiently to cause annoyance and unpleasantness. If people would just keep their mouths shut and breathe through their noses, this difficulty and danger would be avoided.

Chills are often the result of people talking freely while out of doors just after leaving a room full of hot air, and theater goers who discuss and laugh over the play on their way home are inviting illness.

It is, in fact, during youth that the greater number of mankind contract habits of inflammation which make their whole life a tissue of disorders.

Modern Catches.

Wonderful are the ways of the street "fakir." A friend told me that a fellow tormented him to buy a book of three hundred and fifty songs for a dime. After having paid the money it struck him that the songs rather fell short of the number mentioned. He counted them. There were just forty-seven. So he turned back and demanded the balance of three hundred and three lyrics and an explanation. "That's all right," said the ballad seller; "I didn't say three hundred and fifty; I said three under fifty. See?" This evidently being a case where one should not believe what one hears, my friend submitted meekly to the imposition.

Boo, the exclamation used to frighten children, is a coruption of Bob, the name of a famous Gothic general. It has been used as a terror word for many centuries.

VALENTINE'S DAY.

Oh, Jennie, run! I hear the postman's knock,
And if, my pet, the letter should be mine,
Hide it from mother, darling, in your frock;
It may be some one sends a valentine.

You've got one for me? Good! Now sit right there;
Perhaps I'll read it—if you'll never tell;
Oh, my! From him! How could the fellow dare!
And poetry! He really does write well.

The saucy man, to send me such a note!
He says: "Dear maid, I love you best of earth;"
And this: "Upon your charms I ever dote."
I wonder how much love the fellow's worth?

"A thousand kisses!" Really, I must use
Strong measures with my gentleman, I see.
What's this? "A pretty and bewitching muse;"
And this: "My muse, my dear one, is but thee."

I won't read one word more! Now, Jennie, go,
That's a good child, and put this in the grate.
Hold on a moment. Don't let mother know;
I'll keep it now, though really I would hate

To have one think I cared for him a bit,
Though he's so complimentary in ink;
I just pretend to love him—he's got wit.
And that's his one good quality, I think.

You think he's not good looking? Jennie, dear,
He isn't pink-faced, like some girlish boy;
But, say, now, isn't he handsome? It's so queer
Some girls choose lovers like a pretty toy!

Who's that just coming up the steps? Let's peek!
Just draw the blind a little; turn the shutter;
It's he! I wonder if he'll dare to speak!
Run, dear, away; my heart is in a flutter!

—Cenawen Langstroth Betts.

CUSTOM DYING OUT.

Not as Many Valentines Sent Now as There Were Ten Years Ago.

The postoffice gentlemen tell us that they can now look St. Valentine in the face without apprehension. They find it possible to take sustenance on the day dedicated to the saint, and the letter-carriers do not fall down exhausted on the mail bags. Ten or twelve years ago the day was a continuous struggle on the part of all concerned to perform impossibilities.

At present St. Valentine's is a very busy day, indeed, but the work can be done without distress. As the custom of sending valentines has declined, that of sending Christmas cards has amazingly increased, until the largest postoffices receive and distribute millions of them during the twenty-four hours preceding Christmas noon. The mighty London office has had to deal with fifteen millions of Christmas parcels, packets and letters, including three tons of registered merchandise.

It is supposed that much of the loving correspondence of St. Valentine has been transferred to Christmas, which comes two months earlier. This is the opinion of the postoffice clerks, who seem to think that the mail-producing faculty of man is limited, and that what Christmas has gained must have been subtracted from St. Valentine.

It is more probable that the abuse of the privilege of being silly on the day consecrated to that saint has caused a reaction and made people ashamed to join the throng of valentines more foolish than fond. True lovers, however, will know how to avail themselves of the opportunities the day affords, and we may be sure that St. Valentine will continue to be one of the most popular saints in the calendar.—Philadelphia Times.

His Valentine.

(She'll expect a valentine
Me, to write it—well—here goes;
Let me think.) Oh, maiden mine,
If I should to you propose—
(No—hold on—that's too like prose).

(This may better be.) Sweet Kate,
Could I to your fancy climb
As—a monkey scales a gate—
(That won't do—it's not sublime,
And I'm wandering for a rhyme).

I might breathe a poet's lay
And pour forth my passion thus—("Well, why don't you?" she may say.
Oh, great Caesar! this is "wuss"
Than the task of Sisyphus).

Fairest Kate, the rose is red—
(Poets sometimes steal a line)
And the pink is sweet. (I'm dead!
Ere I'm buried let me sign,
Seal and send my Valentine.)

—Madeline S. Bridges.

Valentine Vignettes.

A little valentine often goes a long way.

The tailor's valentine is never short and sweet.

The bills we get in valentines are not legal tenders.

The postman has more valentines than he knows what to do with.

The valentine is very lively, considering that it has been dying for so many years.

We have all seen the $500-dollar valentine, but we never knew anybody who bought it or received it.—Judge.

In 1736, when he was 69 years old, Dean Swift was disabled by frequent attacks of deafness and vertigo. His infirmities rapidly increased, and in 1740 oft-repeated fits of passion ended in violent mania. This continued for two years, when it left him, and the last three years of his life were spent in speechless torpor. For many years he seems to have anticipated madness. Once when walking with friends he lagged behind, and when they returned in search of him he was found gazing at a tree whose top branches were dead. "I am like that tree," he said. "I shall die first at the top."

The Legislative Grind.

An omnibus bill for the payment of Southern war claims to the amount of $718,663 was defeated in the House Monday. A rule setting apart Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday for consideration of the currency bill was adopted by the House. Hawaiian correspondence submitted to the House shows Great Britain has not interfered with affairs of the republic. The Senate passed the bill to establish a national military park at Gettysburg, Pa., and it now goes to the President.

The District of Columbia appropriation bill was passed by the Senate Tuesday, after amendments to coin the silver seigniorage and to issue bonds were ruled out. Messrs. Mitchell and Harris had an altercation in the Senate, in which the words "ungentlemanly" and "contemptible" were used. Debate on the currency bill was begun in the House. Mr. Reed, who offered a substitute, said the trouble was caused by insufficient revenue.

The Chicago post office bill passed the Senate Wednesday without objection, owing to very clever work by Illinois members. The Democratic majority in the Senate has been eliminated by the entrance of Clarence D. Clark, of Wyoming. The attention of the House was occupied with the bill to authorize an issue of $500,000,000 gold bonds. No vote was taken.

The administration currency bill was defeated Thursday in the House, the vote being 134 to 161. Reed's and Cox's substitutes were beaten by larger majorities. The joint resolution for a survey for a ship canal to connect the headwaters of the Wabash with Lake Michigan will be favorably reported to the House. Senators debated the item in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill providing for the laying of a cable to Hawaii. A report giving the correspondence with European countries regarding the tariff law was sent to the Senate by the President.

By a vote of 36 to 25 the Senate Saturday decided to lay a cable to Hawaii and appropriated $500,000 to begin the work. The Senate passed the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and listened to eulogies on the late Senator Stockbridge. The House Ways and Means Committee debated the President's bond message. Much opposition to the stipulation for payment in gold was manifested. In committee of the whole the House voted to place individual clerks of members on the annual salary roll.

The Eagle, Nevertheless.

Some one tells the little anecdote regarding the almighty silver dollar:

When our first silver dollars were to be coined, it was proposed to place an eagle on the reverse side of the coin. The adoption of the eagle as a national emblem was strenuously opposed by Congressman Lyon on the ground that the king of birds ought not to be made the emblem of a nation that had repudiated kings. Judge Thatcher, Congressman from Massachusetts, then proposed the goose as being a very humble republican bird, and suggested further that it would be advantageous inasmuch as the goslings might conveniently be placed on the dimes and other small coins. The merriment that followed at the expense of Mr. Lyon was greater than his choleric temper could bear, and he at once sent his page to Judge Thatcher with a challenge to a duel. The Judge declined.

"What!" shouted Mr. Lyon, "will you be branded as a coward?"

"Yes," replied the Judge, "I always was a coward, and you knew it or you would never have sent me the challenge."

Another volley of laughter followed, and Mr. Lyon wisely concluded that there was no use trying to fight an enemy who fired nothing but jokes. They became warm friends afterwards. But the eagle was placed on our coins.

Worthy of a Position.

In the office of the Chicago police commissioners a few days ago a number of gentlemen were discussing the answers of policemen found in some of the papers secured under the new civil service rules. The discussion brought to the mind of one of the commissioners a story he had heard in connection with one of the civil service examinations for positions as letter carriers in Chicago.

One of the applicants was a negro, who, on account of an injured hand, was being given an oral examination. He stumbled along in a way, finding some kind of answer to all the questions until he was suddenly asked:

"What is the capital of Texas?"

The darky was in a quandary. He didn't know. But he did want the position. He studied for an answer for fully a minute. Then his face brightened.

"G'long," he exclaimed. "You'se foolin' me. I doan wan' to deliver letters in Texas. I wants to deliver letters in Chicago."

Wandering Stones of Peru.

Near the little village of San Jose, Peru, on the shores of the great Lake of Titicaca, the most lofty lake in the whole known world, are three pillars of stone of unequal height. On one of these huge blocks the rude features of a human being have been cut, and the other two are covered with designs of various kinds—all believed to have some mysterious reference to sun worship. Who the engraver of these monoliths was, or at what age of the world the engraving was done, is not known, but is highly probable that it was done long before the Americas had ever been seen by white men. The stones are so large as to prelude the idea of their having been erected by human beings, the best explanation being that they were deposited by glaciers where they stand. That the natives have some legend to this effect is proved by the fact that they call them "wandering stones."—St. Louis Republic.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

DIRECTIONS for using CREAM BALM.—Apply a particle of the Balm well up into the nostrils. After a moment draw strong breath through the nose. Use three times a day, after meals preferred, and before retiring.

CATARRH

ELY'S CREAM BALM Opens and cleanses the Nasal Passages. Allays Pain and Inflammation. Heals the Sores. Protects the Membrane from Colds. Restores the Senses of Taste and Smell. The Balm is quickly absorbed and gives relief at once.

A particle is applied into each nostril and is agreeable. Price 50 cents, at druggists or by mail. ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren Street, New York.

OUR FARMERS FAST BECOMING TENANTS.

Contemptuous Republican Views of Democratic Institutions—Solid Position of the Court of Appeals on the Bounty Question.

Tenant Farmers Increasing.

Mr. Fred Perry Powers, in Lippincott's Magazine for February, writes of "The Fate of the Farmer." Though Mr. Powers scarcely mentions "protection," yet his conclusions do not support the McKinley theory that "protected home markets" are a paradise for farmers. He arrives at the conclusion that tenant-farmers are being substituted for owning-farmers, and that "The American farmer is following the English yeoman into extinction, and the creation of landlord and tenant classes has already made considerable progress here." He says that "evolution in agriculture is giving us, instead of one class of farmers, who were simultaneously landlord, tenant, and laborer, farmers of the three classes, permanently distinct." "Sometimes we find the American farmer slipping away from his acres, and sometimes we find his acres slipping away from him; as a result of both tendencies, there is a separation, widening with the lapse of time, between ownership and cultivation." "The substitution of tenant-farmers for owning-farmers has made considerable progress in New England, but much less than in the West and South, on account of the nature of the soil."

He bases his conclusions largely upon the following statistics: "Between 1880 and 1890 the number of owning-farmers decreased in every New England State, and the number of tenant-farmers increased. In each of these States there was a marked increase in the percentage of farmers who plowed the fields of another man, and in the sweat of whose brow somebody in Boston ate cake. In the six States, in the ten years, the owning-farmers diminished 24,117, and the tenant-farmers increased 7,246.

"In each of the four Middle States the number of owning-farmers decreased, and the number of tenant-farmers increased. * * * In the South farm tenancy is largely the result of the emancipation of the slaves. * * * The process of the creation of landlord and tenant classes may be observed in any Western State. * * * In Iowa the number of owning-farmers increased 3,521, while the number of tenant-farmers increased 16,563. In Kansas the owning-farmers increased 2,121, and the tenant-farmers increased 30,463. In forty-seven States and Territories the number of owning-farmers increased 158,951, and the number of tenant-farmers increased 599,337. In 1880 25.62 per cent. of the farms were cultivated by tenants; in 1890 34.13 per cent. of the farm families hired."

Mr. Powers also concludes that the overwhelming majority of the people who are flocking into cities "are and must be tenants." "Must be," he says, "because the concentration of population has made the land too expensive for people of small means to buy. It may be premature to say that there is a concentration of agricultural landholding, but so far as our information goes it points in that direction. For many years down to 1880 the average size of farms was diminishing; in 1890 it showed an increase, pretty generally distributed over the Northern States."

He reaches, apparently in a logical way, the startling and disheartening conclusion that "Whether you look at the city or at the country, the Americans are destined in the near future to be a nation of tenants, as the English and Irish are already. That rent absorbs the savings of a community is eagerly and even hotly denied by the orthodox economists generally, though not universally. But as the return secured by capital is steadily going down, as the return made to labor has not increased in proportion to its increased efficiency, and shows symptoms of resuming its downward course, checked less than a century ago by the introduction of machinery, there is no other factor in the industrial triumvirate to whom the increasing wealth, or at least the larger and only constantly increasing part of it can go, except the landlord."

"Protection" and "home markets" with reciprocity attachments does not appear to be the farmer's solution. It might be well for those who have been voting the McKinley ticket to experiment in another direction.

McKinleyism Vs. Protection.

Hon. John A. Kasson, who will be favorably remembered as a Republican member of Congress a score of years ago, writes a letter to the Washington Post to protest against the use of the phrase "McKinleyism is dead." That is, Mr. Kasson objects to that phrase if it is to be understood that McKinleyism means "national protection," and inferentially he conveys the idea that if it doesn't mean that, but something else, then he doesn't care a continental cuss what becomes of it.

Mr. Kasson is justified in feeling some anxiety on that point, and in order to relieve his mind the Times assures him that McKinleyism doesn't mean "national protection." What it means is the robbery of the many to enrich the few, impoverishing the millions to add to the plunder of the trusts, and reimbursing the manufacturing barons for the millions of dollars they contributed to the Republican corruption fund in 1888 and 1892 in order to debauch the ballot and corrupt the voters of the country in the interest of the Republican plunderers.

That is what McKinleyism means, as distinguished from national protection. When Mr. Kasson represented an Iowa constituency in Congress the government was under the policy of national protection, and he was among those Republicans who protested against the increase of the tariff taxes for the reason as they then said that higher duties would be burdensome and unjust. Subsequently such Presidents of his party as Grant and Arthur recommended a reduction of the duties. But McKinleyism doubled them in nearly every particular, and established not protection but prohibitive rates.

The consequence of the substitution of McKinleyism for national protection was the formation of a sugar trust, a steel trust, a cordage trust, a barbed wire trust, and various other trusts, the business of which was to plunder the people, and they did business with great earnestness and assiduity until the election of 1892 knocked them silly. Then the new tariff bill was enacted, and, though the advocates of McKinleyism denounced it as a free trade measure, it provides for duties a trifle higher than those which existed when Mr. Kasson was in Congress.—Kansas City Times.

Jefferson's Fantastic Notions.

A recent number of Scribner's has a very interesting article on "The Beginnings of American Parties," by Noah Brooks, in the course of which it is asserted that when Thomas Jefferson returned from France "he was deeply imbued with the most fantastic and radical notions of democracy."

As the life of the American people and of the world has been deeply affected by Mr. Jefferson's notions it is a matter of importance to ascertain wherein they are radical and fantastic. Perhaps Mr. Brooks may tell us that later on, but as he has not done so yet we are obliged to try to find it out for ourselves.

The most radical and fantastic of all the views of democracy held by Mr. Jefferson are reducible to two notions—that no man is born with the right to rule or own another, and that every man has a natural right to all the property he can earn by his own labor.

Mr. Jefferson's entire system of political ethics is built upon the foundation afforded by these two principles, and it is a remarkable fact that the conclusions he deduced from them are nearly always identical with those Herbert Spencer in his work on Justice has deduced from the scientific investigations of the great thinkers and workers with whom he has been associated.

Mr. Jefferson's notion that the ownership of one man by another is opposed to the law of nature is not considered so fantastic now as it was a generation ago, and perhaps in time his second notion of the property right of every man to his own earnings may seem less fantastic than now.—New York World.

The Australian Income Tax.

It may be interesting to the opponents of an income tax in this country to learn what is proposed in the way of an income tax by the Ministries of Victoria, New South Wales, and South Australia, colonies of Great Britain which are neither monarchistic nor populistic.

The Victorian proposition, which, in the language of the Economist, "embodies the spirit of all the direct taxation enactments and proposals in the Australian colonies," includes the following income-tax provisions:

On all incomes over £200 derived from personal exertion, a tax—

At the rate of 3d. for every £1 sterling of the taxable amount thereof up to £1,200; and

At the rate of 4½d. for every £1 sterling of the taxable amount thereof over £1,200 and up to £2,200; and

At the rate of 6d. for every £1 sterling of the taxable amount thereof over £2,200.

On all incomes over £200 the produce of property, a tax—

At the rate of 6d. for every £1 sterling of the taxable amount thereof up to £1,200; and

At the rate of 9d. for every £1 sterling of the taxable amount thereof over £1,200 and up to £2,200; and

At the rate of 1s. for every £1 sterling of the taxable amount thereof over £2,200.

The Australian income tax will begin with incomes of $1,000. It will be a graduated tax, increasing with each $5,000 of income, and incomes which are the produce of property will pay twice as much as incomes derived from personal exertion.

If any opponent of the income tax should contemplate emigrating from the United States we should not advise him to emigrate to Australia.—New York World.

The Sugar Bounties.

The recent decision of the Court of Appeals at Washington to the effect that the sugar bounty section in the McKinley tariff is unconstitutional, has hardly received the attention its importance would seem to merit. It covers the whole subject of bounties in the following sentence:

"If Congress be conceded the power to grant subsidies from the public revenues to all objects it may deem to be for the general welfare, then it follows that this discretion, like the idea that this is a government of 'delegated, limited and enumerated powers,' renders superfluous all the special delegations of powers contained in the constitution, and opens a way for a flood of socialistic legislation, the specious plea for all of which has ever been 'the general welfare.' It is a doctrine that we cannot subscribe to."

This is not the decision of the United States Supreme Court, which is the only one that can be final in the case, but a similar opinion has been given in that body, and by a Judge who was a member of the Republican party.—Boston Herald.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie might as well step clean and clear out of the protectionist ranks as to take a middle ground and insist that he is in favor of adequate but not of excessive protection. Who is to be the judge of the adequateness—the man who pays the tax, or the man who gets the bounty?

If adequate protection means enough protection to prevent the importation of taxed commodities, it becomes, under the pretense of an intent to get revenue, a means of extortion. On the contrary, if adequate protection mean nothing more than tariff duties sufficient to cover the difference in the cost of labor in this and in other countries, the latter-day protectionists in the United States will have none of it. The present tariff more than provides the measure of protection needed to make good the difference in wages; but it is denounced from one end of the country to the other as a free trade measure.

During President Harrison's administration $82,000,000, being all but $8,000,000 of the gold surplus above the reserve, disappeared from the treasury. That was the first stage of the panic. It was Republican in its origin, the result of Republican quack legislation on the coinage and the tariff.

EARLY SUSPENSION BRIDGES.

A Primitive Form Was in Use Before the Alphabet Was Invented.

The towline is doubtless the earliest, as it is still the simplest, application of a rope for the removal of material. Hitched to a floating log, the genesis of all water craft, canoe or sledge, it was used before history learned the art of writing, or mankind the art of reading.

The towline was combined with the suspension cable as a means of crossing streams in the mountains of Hindostan at a remote period. This suspension cable, says a writer in Cassier's Magazine, often several hundred feet in length, was made of twisted fibers or slender stalks of climbing vines. This was solidly secured to large trees or masses of rocks on the banks of the chasms to be crossed.

On this cable a wooden block, grooved underneath, was placed, suspended from which was a small, rude platform, or, at times, a simple loop of rope, for the passenger or baggage. The wooden block with its attached load was pulled across the chasm in either direction by a towline attached to the block. This rude contrivance is the genesis of the most refined aerial ropeways of the present day, and of the suspension bridge also, which is, in a crude form, of very great antiquity.

When the Spaniards first visited Peru they found suspension bridges which could be traversed by men and burdened animals. Some of these bridges were over 200 feet span and were formed of half a dozen cables of twisted osiers, stretched from bank to bank, and passed over wooden supports. These cables were bound together by smaller ropes and were covered with a layer of bamboo, which formed a support for the roadway.

Desirable Carpets.

Imported Irish linen is the component material of a new sort of carpet recently manufactured in the West. No wool is used in the weaving of the product. The goods are cut to fit any room, and then finished in designs and colors to suit the taste of the purchaser; rugs and mats being included among the fabrics. It is asserted that not only are the colors guaranteed to be fast, but that the cost of the carpets is not only about one-half as much as ingrains, the wear being also two to one in favor of the new article as compared with the best ingrain. A not unimportant advantage claimed for these productions, in addition to those of economy and wear, is that of healthfulness, medical authority being cited in favor of their superior character from a sanitary point of view.

Verbal Vagaries.

Down East there is an ethnologist who amuses himself by noting the peculiarities of dialect and provincial speech. He cannot understand why, among the English, St. John, St. Mary's Axe, and St. Leger are pronounced Sinjun, Simmery Axe, and Silliger. Down in New Orleans there is a street named Tchoupitoulas, commonly pronounced Chopitoulas. Pass Christan, in Louisiana, is a corruption of the French phrase pas cretien. D'Aubigny has been corrupted into Dabney, Enroughty into Darby, Taliaferro into Tolliver, and Geoghegan into Gaygan. Corruptions from the French have twisted De Saussure into Dessiso, Mainigault into Manigo, and Gourdin into Gridine.—Kansas City Star.

Like a Sieve.

The chief function of the kidneys is to separate from the blood, in its passage through them, certain impurities and watery particles which make their final exit through the bladder. The retention of these, in consequence of inactivity of the kidneys, is productive of Bright's disease, dropsy, diabetes, albuminuria and other maladies with a fatal tendency. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a highly sanctioned diuretic and blood depurent, impels the kidneys when inactive to renew their sifting function, and strain from the vital current impurities which infest it and threaten their own existence as organs of the body. Catarrh of the bladder, gravel and retention of the urine are also maladies arrested or averted by this benign promoter and restorative of organic action. Malaria, rheumatism, constipation, biliousness and dyspepsia also yield to the Bitters, which is also speedily beneficial to the weak and nervous.

Concealing His Record.

By some chance a member of Congress, not in Washington, had fallen into the clutches of the policeman.

"Do you know who I am?" he asked with the same manner he would have employed had he been in Washington.

"I can't say that I do," replied the policeman, willing to please.

"I am a Member of Congress, sir," and the statesman's chest puffed out albeit he was rather unsteady on his legs.

"Sh—sh—!" exclaimed the officer warningly. "Don't give it away and you'll get a lighter sentence."

No Bar to Dinner.

In a Western court, not long ago, a tiresome lawyer had been trying for more than two hours to impress upon the jury the facts of the case, as they appeared to him. At last he glanced at his watch, and turning to the judge, asked: "Had we better adjourn for dinner, or shall I keep right on?"

"Oh, you keep on," answered the judge; "keep right on, and we will go to dinner."

Fewer Hat-Pin Holes.

The hat-pin which prods dozens of holes into felt and straw has seen its day. The inventor has turned his attention to the matter and the result is a fixture which guides the direction of the pin and at the same time fastens it so securely that no sudden breeze can dislocate it. The pins are made with a small, almost imperceptible groove near the base, over which a little plate of silver or steel fastens. This sheath is fastened on after the pin is stuck through one side of the hat and thus acts as a sort of lock. The pin cannot come out until the plate is removed and if the pin is stuck through at the proper angle in the first place there is no necessity for its frequent removal. In this way the ruin of the hat by pin pricks is prevented. Gold, silver, and ordinary wire pins are now made with this improvement.—New York World.

Billy Goats Not Appreciated.

The relations of the goat to mankind are in certain ways peculiar. The creature has long been subjugated, probably having come into the human family before the dawn of history. It has been almost as widely disseminated among barbarians and civilized people alike, as the sheep. It readily cleaves to the household and exhibits much more intelligence than the other members of our flocks and herds. It yields good milk, the flesh is edible, though in the old animal not savory, and the hair can be made to vary in a larger measure than any of our animals which are shorn. Yet this creature has never obtained the place in relation to man to which it seems entitled.—Scribner.

Among the stores carried off were 9,000 cases of Rotterdam gin.

A Pertinent Paragraph.

"Our country, if right, should be kept right; if wrong, should be put right," is a political maxim which, paraphrased, applies to other conditions of life, thus: our health, if right, should be kept right; if wrong, should be put right, especially in bodily ailments, such as pains and aches, which St. Jacobs Oil promptly cures. Many out of work should heed to give it a chance to cure and it will give them a chance to go to work cured. Another adage is: "He doeth best who doeth well." Well, of course, you want to be well from all sorts of aches, and the best thing to do is to use the great remedy. He who does so is doing well indeed.

Back with Rich Trophies.

Last spring we made note in these columns that Mr. Henry A. Salzer, of the John A. Salzer Seed Company, La Crosse, Wis., America's leading Seed Growers and Merchants, was in Europe in search of rare seeds and novelties for the American farmer and citizen.

Judging from their new catalogue, his trip was an eminently successful one. It is brim full of rare things. Of especial merit we name the Bismarck Apple, bearing the second year; the Giant Flowering Star Phlox; the German Coffee Berry; and for the farmer the Victoria Rape; Germanica Vetch; the Lathyrus silvestris; the Giant Spurry and Giant Incarnate clover; Sacaline; and dozens of other rare things.

Would Have to Learn Over Again.

"I believe it would be harder to learn to use the weed again than it was the first time. I shall always be ready to say a good word for No-to-bac; I have no more desire for tobacco," is the text of a letter written to the Sterling Remedy Co., of Chicago, by D. J. McMullen, of Larkin, Kansas, after taking No-to-bac, purchased of his druggist, and being cured of the tobacco habit.

ONCE USED—ALWAYS IN FAVOR.

YOUNG SPIRITS,

a vigorous body and robust strength follow good health. But all fail when the vital powers are weakened. Nervous debility and loss of manly power result from bad habits, contracted by the young through ignorance of their ruinous consequences. Low spirits, melancholia, impaired memory, morose or irritable temper, fear of impending calamity and a thousand and one derangements of body and mind, result from such pernicious practices. All these are permanently cured by improved methods of treatment without the patient leaving home.

A medical treatise written in plain but chaste language, treating of the nature, symptoms and curability of such diseases, sent securely sealed in a plain envelope, on receipt of this notice, with 10 cents in stamps, for postage. Address, WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N.Y.

Obituary.

Elsworth Smith, son of Philander and Caroline Smith, was born at Newville Ind., October 18, 1869. Died Jan 15, 1895, aged 25 years, 2 months and 27 days. He leaves a mother, four sisters, and one brother to mourn their loss. He was ready and willing to go. Shook hands with his friends and bid them good bye. Said he was all right.

Yes, he is gone. Life's flickering lamp
At last has ceased to burn.
The fearful sentence has been passed:
Dust must to dust return.

That form which seems but yesterday,
We met arrayed in youth's bright bloom,
Now lies in death's sad cold embrace,
Beneath the flint tomb.

His life was like a summer rose
That opened to the sky
Ere half its beauty could unfold,
'Twas doomed to fade and die.

But oh, it seemed as though that shock
Had broken that mother's heart,
When with a tearful eye she took
A last look ere they part.

We'll plant the myrtle; and the rose
Shall bloom to deck the spot,
Although long years shall pass away,
He will not be forgot.

Obituary.

Rebecca Weirich was born in Lebanon Co. Penn., on August 9, 1812, where she grew to womanhood. About the year 1831 she emigrated with her parents to the then far west, stopping in Stark, Co. Ohio, where she about two years later was united in marriage with David Reincehl with whom she lived in holy wedlock for 36 years. He preceded her to the spirit world Feb. 16, 1869, nearly 26 years ago.

In 1853 they came to Indiana and settled on the old homestead in Fairfield township DeKalb Co., Aug. 23, of the same year. To them were born 7 children, all of whom grew to manhood and womanhood, two of them have preceeded her to the other shore; five are left to mourn there deepfelt loss. Mother Reincehl has lived to see her family live and prosper to the third generation, 33 grand children and 23 great grand children. Mother Reincehl was converted, and joined the Evangelical Association in the year 1842, since which time she has lived a consistent christian life up to her death which occured Jan. 31, 1895. Aged 82 years 5 months and 22 days. Her remains were laid to rest in the Fairfield Center cemetery Feb. 5, attended by a large concourse of people; services by Rev D S. Ockes of Kendallville. May we all imitate her christian example.

Curtis Bunton, President St., Brooklyn, N. Y., spent $1,000 with doctors, and at famous Springs, in the effort to cure a bad case of rheumatism; but to no avail. Rollie Moffit and wife, Jennie, are snugly housed on O. W. Widney's farm.

It is no use to try to tell Gerry Wasson by his horses, for he is selling and buying or trading almost constantly.

Victims of measles as follows: Calvin and Eugene Brown, Curt Watt, Gay and Fred Hay, Flossie Buchanan and Geraldine Ricketts. Mumps: Bertha Hennessey, Martha Scott and Alice Draggoo.

The 29th of January was Mrs. S. G. Brown's 75th birthday. Fifty-one of her friends gathered at her home, surprising her with several nice presents and $3.00 in money.

On the evening of January 31, twenty-five of Lewis Howey's friends played a trick on him. One fooled him down to the store while the others prepared a fine oyster supper.

Tuesday evening Mr. and Mrs. H Baker had an oyster supper at their home in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Brenton Phillips, who will shortly leave for their eastern home.

CORUN. A.

There are several cases of measles in town.

Howard Calkins is working over on the B. & O. Ry.

Huber Fried, of Hudson, was in town one day last week.

Milo Thomas made a trip to Goshen last Tuesday on business.

Delbert Harding is very sick with kidney trouble and dropsy.

Billy Shaffer went back to Kendallville again to work in the factory.

Mel. Reynolds has taken in a new boarder. A little baby girl came last Thursday night to stay with them.

Emmet Stearns and Frank Hall are much laying off, on account of having got hurt in coupling cars.

Charley Hosler swapped his gray mare off one day last week for a black one, and now has a match team.

All west-bound trains on the Lake Shore road were late last Friday and Saturday. No. 3 was abandoned.

The fellow who predicted an open winter and would have wagered his life on it, must surely have gone off and stuck his head in a snow bank. Leastwise he don't come around any more.

ASHLEY.

LAST WEEK.

Ashley is still the liviest infant in Indiana.

Ashley New Mills beat them all for fine flour. Try them.

Austin the grocer received a car load of salt.

Ed. Smith has been running 25 teams filling his large ice house.

Mr McClure our merchant tailor died very suddenly last Friday night.

James O. Blake will move to Ashley in the spring. Jim knows a good thing when he sees it.

Manager Gary will build a fine residence on Wabash Ave, as soon as the weather will permit.

The new M. E. church is ready for plastering. The Trustees purchased a Monroe furnace.

The Play Uncle Josh last Friday night in Clark's hall was a grand success. Ashley amateurs are coming to the front.

Wm. Liberenz is getting the brick on the ground for the hotel. This structure when completed will cost $10,000.

Frank P. Seiler report two sales of real estate last week at advanced prices. Are there any other towns in the country selling property these hard times?

Dr. Ott purchased a lot east of Stoner's drugstore, and will put up a two story business room as soon as the weather will permit.

A man from Grand Rapids has rented the Allen building in which he will place a large stock of furniture and miscellaneous goods.

W. W. Wyrick has purchased the Rose Law Library, of Angola; and will go into the practice of law in connection with F. P. Seiler's Real Estate Insurance & Loan Agency. They have fitted up a large and commodious office over the postoffice.

CONCORD.

Baby Walter Baker is sick with lung fever.

Fred Jenkins has been very sick a few days past.

Mrs. D. W. Morr entertained her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. James Ferrell, of Hilleville, Penn., a few days.

Tell Elson says he is awfull glad that people would not have the measles more than once.

The attendance was slim at Sunday school and church last Sunday, owing to so many having the measles.

It has been so cold the boys and girls could not sleigh-ride until Sunday evening.

The farmers are complaining the Trentman has not advanced their money on hub timber, and are now hauling to the Zimmerman Co, in Auburn.

G. W. Reed, of South Haven, Mich., is here looking up his financial affairs and visiting his many relatives and friends.

G. W. Wade, P. A. Shurts and Raymond Rhodes drove to Auburn last Thursday. Rhodes had to cling to his spirited horses, getting all the benefit of the bracing breeze, while the other men could walk and keep warm. They reported an extremely cold day.

MADE HIM A CRIMINAL

AN OPERATION THAT HAD AN UNFORTUNATE EFFECT.

A Boy's Bump of Acquisitiveness Grew Abnormally After He Was Trephined—But the Surgeon Stood All the Blame and Corrected the Error.

"Do you think criminality is a disease?" asked the drummer of the hotel clerk.

"Course not," said the clerk. "It is an acquired habit, and there wouldn't be any criminals if children were trained right."

"That's what you think, but sit down there where you will be comfortable, and I'll tell you something."

It was after midnight, and as the clerk hadn't anything else to do he accepted the invitation and sat down.

"Not a great while ago," went on the drummer, "I was in an eastern city, and it happened that I had a package of samples stolen by a boy on the street. I caught him in the act, and a policeman being on the spot, for a wonder, I turned the thief over to him and agreed to appear against the boy, just to teach him a lesson. The next morning I was in the police court on time, and there I was met by a physician, who told me something which led me to leave the case to him. When the boy was called, the physician appeared with him and desired to make a statement to the court. It was granted, and he said:

"'May it please the court, I want to assume responsibility for this offense and for a number of others of a similar character, which I understand the accused has committed within the past year.

"'Your honor,' he said, 'until something more than a year ago this boy was as correct a boy as any I ever knew. Of good parentage and excellent training, there is no reason why he should not have been so. Two years ago he sustained a severe accident by being thrown from a bicycle, in which his skull was fractured directly on that spot which phrenologists have designated as the bump of acquisitiveness. I was called in to treat the case, and upon examination discovered that the only thing to be done was to remove a part of the skull and trephine the fracture. This I did, exposing a considerable area of the brain. The trephining, however, was quite successful, and I had the pleasure in a few weeks of seeing my patient once more on his feet, and to all intents and purposes as well as ever, or very likely to be soon. At this time, and until several months later, nothing unusual was noticed about the boy, but after several months it was observed that he began to purloin small things about the house. He was not suspected at first, but one day his mother caught him in the act, and he was punished. I may add that at this time he was perhaps 13 years old. His parents were greatly grieved over this discovery and afterward kept a close watch on him. The habit, however, seemed to be growing on him, and all their efforts to check it were in vain. They even went so far as to have their pastor talk to him, but that did no good. One day they were painfully shocked by his arrest for a theft of trifling character. The matter was settled as quietly as possible, and it was hoped that this would be a lesson to him. It made absolutely no difference, and the boy went from bad to worse. What he has stolen no one can tell, for he is as cunning as a fox in his work, as a rule, nor is it known what he does with his stealings unless he has hidden them somewhere. Ten days ago the case came directly to my notice by a theft from my own house. I had heard, of course, of what the boy had been doing, but it did not occur to me to think I had anything to do with it.

"'The parents came to me when the theft occurred at my house, and in the talk about their boy the suggestion struck me that perhaps I could offer an explanation. I said nothing to them, but sent for the boy and made an examination of the trephined fracture and discovered that while I had saved the boy's life I had also given his bump of acquisitiveness an opportunity to develop abnormally, and that it was growing greater every day. I did not reach this conclusion definitely until a day or two ago, and this is the first opportunity I have had to make an explanation of what, to those who knew the boy previously, is a remarkable case of moral retrogression. Having made this explanation, I wish to assume the responsibility for the boy's acts, and as the prosecuting witness is willing not to appear against my patient I would ask to have him discharged. His parents have agreed to let me perform another operation on him, and I feel assured that I can render him a service which will make an honest man of him. As he now is he will continue to grow worse, and there is nothing before him except a prison, for steal he will until his offense becomes such that he will go to the penitentiary, where his opportunities may be minimized, but his desire to steal will continue to grow.'

"Well," concluded the drummer, "this sort of thing knocked out the court and everybody else, but the prisoner was turned over to the physician as his patient, and he took him away with him to a hospital, where he said the operation was to be performed at once. That was a year ago. Today I met the physician on the street here, and the first thing I asked him about was the boy. He smiled all over and told me that ever since the operation the boy had been steadily improving, and for two months past he had stolen nothing, although the temptation was constantly put in his way by his orders.

"'I think,' he said as we parted, 'that the boy is entirely cured, and hereafter when I have any trephining to do I shall keep an eye on the bumps and not make a patient either better or worse than nature intended.'"—Detroit Free Press.

Much for Little.

We cannot refrain from further mention of that most beautiful of all monthly publications, Sarony's Living Pictures. It is so highly meritorious and so fitly calculated to afford to its patrons the greatest amount of entertainment for the smallest outlay, that we are desirous of our readers a kindness in again calling their attention to it. Compared with its real worth its cost, 25 cents, is trifling.

Heart Disease 30 Yrs!

Short Breath, Palpitation.

Mr. G. W. McKinsey, postmaster of Kokomo, Ind., and a brave ex-soldier, says: "I had been severely troubled with heart disease ever since leaving the army at the close of the late war. I was troubled with palpitation and shortness of breath. I could not sleep on my left side, and had pain around my heart. I became so ill that I was much alarmed, and fortunately my attention was called to

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure

I decided to try it. The first bottle made a decided improvement in my condition, and five bottles have completely cured me."

G. W. McKINSEY, P. M., Kokomo, Ind.

Dr. Miles Heart Cure is sold on a positive guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. All druggists sell it at $1, 6 bottles for $5, or it will be sent, prepaid, on receipt of price by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

A Battle Scarred Veteran.

Nearly every one in Medina Co., Ohio, knows Stephen Rolph, of River Styx, the one legged veteran, who lost his leg at Winchester, Va., March 23, '62. In all probability the exposure and privations of army service, the effects of which are felt as they grow older by nearly all old soldiers, were the cause of the serious nervous prostration and sleeplessness of which Comrade Rolph complained. He says: "people hereabout know me pretty well, but you can tell others that I was down for about six months with nervous prostration and sleeplessness for which I tried various doctors and medicines, but Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer has done me more good than all the doctoring I had done. The first bottle gave me such great relief that I have used several and feel almost restored to my former good health." Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer can be relied upon by any who are suffering from nervous troubles, sleeplessness, etc. If all tried out and run down, you need a reliable nerve and system tonic and health restorer as this remedy is. Sold in Auburn by F. E. Davenport. 6 9

Chronic Diarrhœa.

The experience of Geo. A. Apgar, of German Valley, N. J., is well worth remembering. He was troubled with chronic diarrhœa and doctored for five months and was treated by four different doctors without benefit. He then began using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, of which one small bottle effected a complete cure. It is for sale by Robbins & McCord. 6 9

Cures Colds.

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner, with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. WHAT WE HAVE TO SAY ABOUT MNOEY.

The Indiana Mutual Building Loan Association, which we represent in this part of the state, have again reduced their interest, which has always been from 2 to 5 per cent less than any other Building Loan Association Do you know that if you are about to borrow money and give a mortgage on your home, you should take the time and trouble to investigate the plan of different associations, so that you may know, regardless of what any agent may tell you, which is the cheapest andthe best!

There are three items which should also be considered and thoroughly understood, especially by the borrower, before he makes his application for a loan:

First: The rate of interest and premium he is charged per annum.

Second: What the earnings of the Association are

Third: How economically the Association is conducting its affairs.

We are prepared always to compare our company with any other, and can prove to your entire satisfaction that we are the cheapest, and

REMEMBER

That in our company you have no membership fee to pay, no advance payments to make and there will be no delays, so that should your loan for any reason be declined, you will lose no money. We are prepared to make loans where the security is sufficient; for any amount from $2.00 to $25,0

If you have a loan in any other company it will pay you to call on us and get our figures and

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

The Day We Celebrate is To-Morrow. And Everybody is expected to Bury The Hatchet.

GEORGE Washington has for several years been quite a conspicuous figure in history, partly on account of his prominence in a little trouble we had with England several years ago, but more especially on account of an unreasonable, and very unfruitful little item that early found its way into fireside stories, and eventually into print, and last but not least into the old McGuffey Readers. It would make George open his eyes to read that story, and it is fortunate for his eternal rest, that he has gone where there is no possible chance for him to see it or hear it. It is recorded of G. W. that he never swore but once, and that was when he met his advanced troops flying before the first British onslaught at the battle of Monmouth. But he only swore mildly and in a gentlemanly way then. Just what sort of swearing he would do if he could get out of that stone coffin, in that brick vault at Mt. Vernon, and crawl out through those grated iron doors, and get at that old Reader and read that old story about his cutting down that cherry tree, the COURIER does not pretend to know. For generations people believed that little story, and wondered how any boy mean enough and thoughtless enough to cut down a bearing cherry tree, could at the same time be good enough and wise enough to, first refuse to lie out of it, and, second, to enter into such a wise discussion with his father, as to the sin of lying and the beauty of honesty. And all the neighbors who knew George's father, declare that is George had never done such a thing, the "old man" would have "swatted" him within an inch of his life And there are several other ridiculous little stories about him and his father in that old Reader, especially the one about planting the garden seeds so as to spell George's name. It has perhaps done the world some good to pore over and use as a lesson, such stories as these, and the one about William Tell shooting an apple resting on his boy's head. But the world is now ripe enough to drop such "food for babes," and listen to the truth in history, only, for history contains a plenty of truths as interesting and as valuable as these child stories of Washington and Tell We have alluded to this in the matter, so as to show what a ridiculous figure the future "father of his country" would have made, had he been caught by a snap shot camera in the act of cutting down a cherry tree. The above picture, while substantually correct, would take all the romance out of it. There are other stories about George, that are at least as probable, and that go to show he had at least a few of the weaknesses of other men. He went to the polls, when ever there was an election, and voted just as he pleased, and as they had no "secret ballot" in those days, it sometimes happened that G W. had a row on his hands. If he took a notion to vote for 'John Smith" he had to do so, by calling out the name of his choice so the election clerks could hear it and record the vote. But this also enabled John Smith's competitor to hear a prominent voter casting a free untrammeled vote, squarely against him. And it is told that on an occasion of this kind, the offended office seeker squared himself off and knocked the father of his country down. This also proves that in his life time G, Washington had enemies as well as other people. He dont however, seem to have any now. Times have changed, and we have changed with them So to morrow, as we celebrate, or read this story, let us think of George Washington as he was, a real man, but one with an unusually clean record for ability and honesty Our present congress has not furnished many of his type.

BOTH FEET AMPUTATED.

The Windup of a Big Drunk in the late Cold Snap.

ABOUT two weeks ago, Chris, Waltz was cutting just this kind of figure and thought he was having a glorious time. To-day, he is lying on a bed at the county home minus both feet, or at least minus a good part of both.

Last Wednesday Dr Swarts and Drs F. M. and W. L. Hines and Dr Sebring went out to the County Home and amputated portions of both feet for him Chris had been indulging in too much red liquor almost any time when he could get it, and one of the coldest days of the cold snap, he was in that line of business too deep for his health. He wanted to stay in the Wabash passenger station, but that being against the rule, he went out and tried the coal shed. The coal had'nt got hot yet, not as hot as it gets later on, and Chris being a sound sleeper, didn't feel the cold beginning at his toes and industriously working its way upward. The result was two frozen feet. Dr Swarts and the others named worked at him about two hours, for it was an extensive job pruning off all the limbs affected The right foot was cut off diagonally from the instep to the point of the heel, only the two upper bones of the heel being saved. The left foot was not frozen up so far, but a part of the toes had to be taken off. He is doing well, and may still be part of a man if he will brace up. It is a sad case, and he no doubt regrets his reckless course. We hope that when he gets well, he will try to have taken a different picture from that at the head of this article.

Since writing the above, we have received a more complete account from Wm. McKinley, who resides just north of town, on the Sommers place. He says that Chris had been an inmate of the County Home, but left and came to town, complaining that he did not get enough to eat. This part of it all know is false for Gus Bartels and wife, are extra good providers, and give the inmates as good fare, as that enjoyed by the hardworking taxpayers who pay the poor house expenses. So of course no one believed Chris. He evidently wanted to get out where the red-eyed tiger could get at him He had a good two-foot rule he had stolen from the Home This he pawned for drinks and 25 cents in money, claiming he wanted to pay his fare to Garrett He left about seven that evening going toward the south part of town. He probably spent the 25 cents at the south end saloon, and when it was shut up for the night, he probably tried to sleep in the Wabash waiting room but was ordered out. At least he went out to sleep in the coal shed. He afterwards remembered waking up and feeling something wrong with his feet, then went to sleep again. When he awoke again, his feet were still wrong but he managed to get up town. He got as far as G. W. Stahl's and asked the way to Garrett, Mr. Stahl told him, but he came on up town instead, That morning he came up to Wm. McKinley's about 9 o'clock, and told a part of this story, and Mr. McKinley learned the rest from other sources. It was plain he had frozen his feet and frosted his nose. Mr. M. had a hard job to get his boots off of him and found the socks frozen to his feet. He got a tub of ice cold water and put his feet in, but later on Waltz was discovered warming them at the stove—the very thing he should not have done. When McKinley found what he had done he wrapped his feet up in cloths saturated grease, camphor, etc. to help save them if possible. He staid at McKinley's till Wednesday of that week, and was then taken back to the County Home But after working to save his feet for a week or two it was found they could not be saved and Feb 14, the operation was performed

Marshal Baker's Runaway

Marshal Baker started out Monday afternoon to try a new team on the hose cart. But they proved fractious, and as they came hurrying west on Ninth street those who saw him, felt there was danger of an upset as he would turn on the icy street onto Main unless he could check their speed But he could not slow down enough and as he turned, the wheels of the hose cart slipped and over he went, his foot getting fast in one of the wheels. He was dragged for a distance, but got loose, and ran up North Main Mr. Baker got up and managed to reach the sidewalk. He was then helped into Ed Eldridge's saloon, and later carried to his home Here his injuries were examined by Drs F. M. and L. A. Hines, and it was found he was pretty severely hurt. There was blood flowing from a cut on the side of his head. His left leg was badly bruised and at first it was thought it was broken. But an examination showed that one bone was probably cracked, but not bad enough to break it apart. He was properly cared for and is now doing well. The team ran as far as Ira Brandon's grocery, and were stopped. They were not hurt, but the hose cart had three spokes damaged.

A. O. U. W. ANNIVERSARY.

The Popular and Worthy Organization Have a Pleasant Annual.

THE most ancient order of workmen originally occupying the territory of De-Kalb county, was of of the sort shown in his picture. They were the pioneers who cut away our timber to buy necessaries and to build dwellings and barns. But that is now largely a thing of the past and their descendents are following up their good work and supplementing it by keeping alive a benevolent order with a suitable name and worthy purpose.

Among the many social events of this season of the year is the anniversary exercises of the Ancient Order United Workmen, Lodge No. 12, which event took place Thursday evening of last week. The anniversary meeting was somewhat early but it was thus arranged on account of a visit being made among the different lodges of the state by Grand Master Workman, T. D. Neal, of Frankton, and Grand Recorder, Fred Baker, of Evansville, and they so arranged to be here on the above date Their coming has been looked forward to by the members of the lodge for some time and nothing was left undone to make the evening an enjoyable and fraternal one The Armory was secured and more than two hundred invited guests assembled there and listened to the program. The first selection was music by the Wilcox orchestra after which Rev. Hart of the Baptist church led in prayer and was followed with a solo by Morris Widney. R. C. Baxter then made the welcome address on behalf of Auburn Lodge No. 12, and citizens and friends and very cordially welcomed Messrs. Neal and Baker, to our beautiful town. Music was again listened to and following, Grand Recorder Baker, made some remarks concerning the order, presenting clearly the advantages over similar fraternal beneficiary orders offered by the A. O. U. W. Mr Baker thoroughly understands the workings of the order in other states as well as in our own state and presented facts which should interest every able bodied man, and induce him to become a member of the order, and at the same time secure protection for his widow and family. Master Pres Wilcox then gave a cornet solo, which was appreciated by all present It was a difficult piece but well executed. Master Workman Neal was the next to be heard and he spoke a brief time concerning the order, and presenting many reasons for men to secure protection. He has a strong voice and is an easy talker and the entire audience listened attentively.

After the exercises were closed in the Armory the entire audience was invited to the A O U. W. lodge room where an luncheon was served, consisting of sandwiches, chicken, cake, pickles, candy and coffee. The remainder of the evening was spent in conversing with each other. The lodge here is probably as enthusiastic as any in the state and have reasons to boast of the protection they give to the families of deceased members. The cost is nominal and within the reach of any who are at all interested in insurance. We wish them success in the future as they have been in the past.

FEBRUARY 22D.

February 22d will be appropriately celebrated by the schools of Auburn by putting up a new flag at the school buildings. The trustees have procured a fine pole 66 feet high which has been peeled and painted and this will be a more suitable way to arrange for the flag than to attempt to keep it on the top of the building. And besides we now have two buildings. The board has procured a fine, new flag, 8x16 feet and it will be raised to the top of the new staff with appropriate ceremonies. The Auburn Rifles will be present and assist and the friends and patrons of the schools expect to be there generally. Besides the flag raising there will be suitable exercises by the schools, as each department will have something to do

To Our Advertisers.

Now is a good time to speak of several things that concern both the COURIER and its advertisers. Copy for new ads. or for a change of ad, should be brought in as early as possible, even if it comes in the next day after the paper is out. Do not put it off till we are in a rush at the last moment. Whenever the copy is prepared bring it right in. Then if for any reason it is absolutely necessary to change a meone's ad at a late hour, it can be done, whereas if all wait till late someone will get left. It takes no more work or thought to prepare an advertisement on Friday than it does on Tuesday.

Again each advertiser should keep watch of his advertisement, and see that it is in proper shape. Sometimes it happens that the advertiser forgets to state how many times he wants it inserted in its present form, and as the printer may not know, an unseasonable ad will be running that is of little or no value. There should be constant care on the part of both advertiser and paper, but the advertiser is the one most interested and who best understands just his wants.

COLD WAVES, GOOD BY!.

The Backbone of the Hard Winter is Broken and the Courier and all its Friends Rejoice.

COLD wave flags like this, have been very fashionable for about six weeks—a white flag with a big black square in the middle. When this was flung out to the wintry breeze our people began to shiver.

It was a signal to inspect the woodpile and the coal bin for the authorities that sent out orders for a black flag to be hoisted generally knew their business. And the cold wave generally got here. The first came with fourteen inches of snow and after that had run its course and given way to the seductive power of a south wind, there was a break of a few days. Then came the coldest season for many years and made the "coldest inhabitant" curl up like a spring chicken. The mysterious melted metal, mercury, a silvery thread in our thermometers went down to the "naught" figure and seemed satisfied to stay there. But the sun has kept getting higher and the impossibility of staving off spring much longer seems to have at last penetrated even the thick fur cap of the weather clerk and recently a gradual letting up in the severity of the season has been noticed. We are writing this weather essay for Dan Hale, J. P. Ensley, D. S. Cochran, John Rinehold, John Ludwig, Stephen Masters, D. McNabb, David Dilgard, John and Sam Pepple, S. B. Mottinger and other COURIER readers, who have been fanning themselves with their straw hats in milder climates. The COURIER is bound to give all the news.

ALMOST ANOTHER FIRE.

John Robbins come near indulging in the unwelcome luxury of a first-class fire Sunday evening. They had just entered the house on their return from church, when the smell of smoke or fire was noticed Not seeing any fire in the lower rooms, Ralph was sent up stairs to see if all was right in his sleeping room As he opened the door of his room, a dense gust of hot smoke came full in his face and he called for help. Mr. Robbins tried to get into the room to throw water on the blaze, but was driven back. A. J. Ralston, who lives across the street had hurried in, and by his presence of mind, and knowledge of the nature of smoke, gave the first effective check, by crawling flat on the floor and dashing some water where the fire was worst. They soon got it under control, when it was found that an oil stove used to keep the room warm had evidently blazed up, and set fire to some bed clothing, and so it had started, spreading to the casings, etc. The damage will not be serious. The fire department was called out, and were on hand in fine shape, but fortunately were not needed.

The Maccabee Entertainment.

The Ladies of the Maccabees of the North section gave a pleasant entertainment Thursday evening, Feb 14, at the home of of Mrs. A. P. Small, on North Cedar street. The program was as follows: Prayer by Rev. Brice; singing by quartet; recitation by Miss Ollie McClure, "John Burns of Gettysburg;" recitation by Mrs Small, "Smiting the Rock;" instrumental music by Mr. Greenman and Miss Trover; select reading by Mrs. Clara McClellan, "Home Comforts;" recitation by Mrs. Grover, "Over the Hills the Poor House;" recitation by Mr. Grover, "Over the Hills from the Poor House;" singing by the quartet. After this, supper was served to seventy some guests. All report a good time.

The Drummer Boy of Rappahannock

Major R. H. Hendershot, the orignal "Drummer Boy of Rappahannock," the most wonderful drummer in the world, and his son, J. C. Hendershot, who is one of the best fifers in America, will positively be here to take part in the camp fire entertainment to be given Feb. 23, by the W. R. C. at Armory Hall Maj Hendershot brings with him the original drum presented him by Horace Greely for gallant conduct at the battle of Fredericksburg the 11, 12 and 13th of December, 1862. He will be assisted by some of our best local talent. No one in Auburn but has heard of Mr. Hendershot and his wonderful powers as a drummer, as well as his brilliant record in the war. No one in Auburn should fail to hear and see him.

HISTORY OF A WEEK.

PEOPLE, PLACES, AND THINGS OF THE WORLD.

Bodies of Chinese Officers Sent Home by Japanese—Parents Danced While Their Children Burned To Death—Serious Railroad Wreck.

A Generous Act.

Chefoo (China) special: The steamer Kangdhi, loaned by the Japanese for the purpose, has arrived here with the remains of Admiral Ting, the Chinese naval commander, who committed suicide after surrender of his fleet to the Japanese at Wei Hai Wei. The steamer also brought the bodies of Commander Liu and Capt. Yang, of the Chinese flagship, Chen Yuen, and Gen. Chang, commander of the military forces at Wei Hai Wei, all of whom killed themselves rather than suffer the punishment that would have been meted out to them by the emperor for the failure of his forces to repel the Japanese. The Japanese paid the greatest respect to Admiral Ting's remains, Capt. Yang shot himself as the Japanese went over the side of his flagship.

Denied by Matthews.

Gov. Matthews denies that he has been offered the Mexican mission, made vacant by the death of Minister Gray. He stated also that he had not sent a message to Lieut. Gov. Nye, warning him that he might be called upon at an early day to assume the office of Governor. It is understood that the dispatch to Lieut. Gov. Nye was sent by a personal friend, who was aware of the movement to make Gov. Matthews the successor of Minister Gray. Gov. Matthews would not commit himself on the question whether he would accept the appointment if it were offered. He stated that he had been elected by the people to the office of Governor, and he presumed it would be the proper thing for him to discharge the duties of the office to which he had been called.

Three Firemen Injured.

Three firemen were severely injured at a fire at Akron. A defective flue in the residence of Dr. Eli Conn started the fire and it was over half an hour before water could be secured on account of frozen hydrants. While half a dozen firemen were working on the second floor a large chimney fell, burying three men under the brick. The list of injured is as follows: Harry Townsend, cut severely about head and bruised about the body; George Button, head cut, back hurt, hurt internally; Frank Nieswanger, right leg broken, head and shoulder cut. None of the injuries will prove fatal. The house and contents were destroyed, loss $6000.

Shot Her Sister

While the family of James Wise, a farmer residing five miles north of Alliance, Ohio, were cleaning house, his fourteen-year-old daughter undertook to handle a shotgun that hung on the wall of the sitting room. The hammer caught on a nail and the weapon was discharged, her eighteen-year-old sister, was standing near by, and the full charge of shot struck her in the right temple, blowing both eyes out and tearing away most of the forehead. The girl is still living, but cannot recover. Her sister is crazed with grief.

Serious Wreck.

A serious wreck occurred on the Norfolk and Western railway, seven miles west of Huntington, W. Va. Train No. 2, south bound, was runing at a rate of thirty-five miles an hour when the engine jumped the track followed by two coaches. John Adkins, of Wayne county, was killed outright; an unknown lady from Petosky, Mich., was struck on the head and is dying, and Engineer Jackson and Fireman Ganze were seriously hurt. The track is torn up badly and traffic impeded.

Missionaries Rescued.

Washington special: The Navy Department has heard from Admiral Carpenter under even date from Chefu to the effect that the Charleston arrived there after having rescued fourteen missionaries, and that he had directed the Yorktown to go to the south coast of Shantung, China, to the assistance of missionaries there. He also stated that the Chinese still hold the island forts at Wei-Hai-Wei.

Children Cremated.

Three boys, aged 4, 7 and 9 years, were cremated at Lewiston, Montmorenci County, Mich., while their parents were attending a dance, just outside the village. The victims were children of Eli Seymour, a shoedealer. The origin of the fire is a mystery. Some think the house was set on fire, while others think an accident happened to the stove while the children were asleep.

Rebellion at Musat.

A London Central News dispatch from Bombay says: "A serious rebellion has broken out in Musat, the Arabian seaport on the Indian Ocean. The rebels have seized most of the forts commanding the town. No more details are obtainable."

In Need of Food.

Gov. McKinley is in receipt of another appeal for aid for the destitute miners of the Hocking and Sunday Creek valleys, Chairman Coultrap asserting that there is immediate need of provisions and clothing at all the points of distribution.

Went Down With His Ship.

Berlin special: The Bremerhaven pilot writes to the Weser Zeitung that Capt. Von Goessel of the North German Lloyd steamer Elbe declined Pilot Hardes' offer to get him a lifebelt. He remained alone at his post and sank with his ship.

Frost Ruins Oranges.

Half a million boxes of oranges awaiting shipment at Alcira, Spain, have been destroyed by intensely cold weather.

Horrible Explosion.

A terrific explosion of mine gas took place in West Bear Ridge Colliery, belonging to the Reading company and located at Mahoney Plane, Pa. Five miners have been taken out seriously and probably fatally injured.

Superintendent Morris Dead.

Jacob S. Morris, for the past twenty-two years superintendent of the Pennsylvania lines, and one of the most widely known railroad men in the United States, died at Toledo from grippe.

Attempted Assassination.

A dastardly attempt was made at Wheatland, Ind., to take the life of John H. Niblack, junior member of the firm of Niblack & Son, dealers in general merchandise. Niblack sleeps in the store building. At 10 o'clock at night he was called to the door by two unknown men who said they desired to purchase some goods. They entered the store, and, after purchasing a large bill of goods, one of them drew his pistol and fired, the ball entering Niblack's left shoulder just above the heart. Niblack, being a cool-headed man, reached and got his pistol and began firing at the assassins, in the meantime turning the lamp over, leaving the room in darkness. The assassins fled, and Niblack ran to Dr. Dukate's office to have his wound dressed. He is in a critical condition.

Sherman Yerk, a farmer boy, was arrested on charge of implication in the affair. The town is the scene of excitement and if the assassins are caught they may never see another sunrise.

BUSINESS.

Trade by no Means Satisfactory Though All Hope for Improvement.

Dun's Weekly Review of Trade says: Another week, and exports of gold and withdrawals from the theasury have been almost entirely stopped by contract for purchase of gold from Belmont & Morgan. For the moment business only waits to know whether the sales of American securities and withdrawals of gold from the treasury have been lastingly stopped by the remarkable increase of confidence. Two obstacles which block the path just at the present time, are the exceeding cheapness of all kinds of farm products and the restricted operation in industries. There has been no gain in the price of farm products on the whole; corn is nominally ¼ a cent higher but with insignificant movement, while wheat also with a movement hardly half of last year's is ¼ of a cent lower for the week. Cotton, with continuing large receipts, remains unchanged. These few words tell the old story: The corn crop is undeniably short, although probably a much larger supply than official reports indicate. The wheat and corn supplies so far are behind the the world's demands and that extreme low prices are natural and any speculation for advance is greatly hadicapped. Restricted purchases by the West and South naturally result.

THIS IS GOOD.

Congress Resolves to Monkey No Longer with the Financial Machine.

Washington special: There will be no further financial legislation attempted by the House this session. The defeat of the two banking bills and one bond bill in quick succession satisfies the Democratic leaders that the majority of the House cannot be brought to the support of any measure. There was talk in the House that some measure of financial relief might be engrafted upon the general deficiency appropriation bill when it is taken up in the Senate, but it is not definitely known if this attempt will be seriously made.

The members of the House are now looking forward with impatience to adjournment, and the committee on rules is constantly importuned for special orders for certain important bills that have not yet received consideration by the House, but which can be rushed through the Senate, it is believed, if they can reach that body during the last week of the session. One of these is the naval reorganization bill, and another is the Nicaragua canal bill. All talk of an extra session has ended, and it is believed that when Congress adjourns on the 4th of March next it will not be asked to convene again until the regular meeting day in December.

Terrific Explosion.

A fearful natural gas explosion occurred at Elwood, Ind., entirely wrecking the central portion of the new block occupied by the city offices, seriously injuring three men and causing about $10,000 damage. The explosion was the result of a leak in the gas mains under the building. The gas was ignited by a stove in the office of A. G. Tebbs' fruit store where the force of the explosion was greatest. Three men, who were in this room, were hurled into the street, amid the crashing of plate glass and fruit boxes, and were seriously injured. A. G. Tebsh and J. M. Graham, propietors of the store were badly bruised, but will recover. David Miller had his right leg broken in two places, and was buried in the wreckage. The loss to the stores will amount to $5,000. The city offices were badly wrecked, as they were on the second floor over the fruit store. The force of the explosion was so great that houses a dozen blocks away were shaken to their foundations.

Fatal Fire.

Fire was discovered in the basement of the hardware store of William Henry Hutchinson, on Monroe street, Lynn, Mass., a wooden structure, four stories high. After fighting the fire for three-quarters of an hour the flames suddenly appeared through the roof, and almost simultaneously the building collapsed like an egg shell. The front wall on Monroe street fell into the street and a sidewall into an alleyway toward the adjoining building. A few minutes later three bodies were pulled out, placed in the police ambulance and taken to the hospital. Then a hose wagon backed up and another firemen was placed inside and taken to the hospital. The work of rescuing went on rapidly and in half an hour or more eleven firemen had been taken out. Three of them were dead or died in a few minutes after being taken out.

Amicably Adjudicated.

City of Mexico special: Mexico's conditions have been peacefully accepted by Guatemala, who guarantees their fulfillment. The conditions will be published officially next week. Both sides have made concessions. The Guatemala question is at last settled upon an equitable basis between the two republics. The boundary between the two countries, will be definitely determined upon and the war indemnity is accepted by Guatemala, who will also pay damages for Mexican property destoyed. Guatemala's official acceptance of Mexico's conditions will arrive here next week and will be immediately published in the Diario, the official organ of the Mexican government. This will permanently terminate the famous imbroglio between Mexico and Guatemala.

Attempt to Blow Up a Ship.

Two large sticks of dynamite were found in cotton bales recently on the wharf at Southport, just above New Orleans, that would have gone aboard the British steamship Floridian had it not been discovered. The dynamite, with the method in vogue of screwing the cotton in the ship's hold, would have been exploded and blown the ship to atoms. Thomas Oakes, a white man, who was seen loitering around the vicinity, was arrested by U. S. Deputy Marshals and lodged in jail. The officers are confident they have the right man. For some time past there has been friction between the white and colored screwmen, which culminated some months ago in several riots on the levee. The Floridian belongs to a line running between this port and Liverpool, which is loaded exclusively by colored men. Whether the man arrested is a screwman or not is not known.

Started Home.

City of Mixico special: President Diaz and his Cabinet, two sections of military under command of Gen. Cabrara, and two other Generals, all the Diplomatic Corps and many distinguished persons of all nationalities, accompanied Minister Gray's body to the Mexican Central Railroad Station, where it was deposited in an express car, amid military salutes of cannon, at 9 o'clock Sunday morning, and started to the United States. Flags on all Government buildings and foreign legations are at half-mast. Minister Gray's death is universally regretted in the Foreign Office. It is said that his relations with the officials here have always been most harmonious.

Gored by a Bull.

James M. Geer, aged 79, a wealthy farmer living near Bourbon, Ind., while feeding stock was attacked from behind by an enraged bull. The ferocious animal pinned him to the earth by standing on his open overcoat on either side, and began slowly bunting the life out of him. Drawing his only weapon, which was a pocket-knife, Geer prodded out the eyes of the maddened animal, which was his only means of escape. He was taken to his house, and is in a precarious condition. The animal was afterward killed, but not until nine bullets were buried in his brain.

Cars Burn.

An extra freight train going north on the Central Hudson River Railway, jumped the track two miles south of Rhinecliff, N. Y., near Astor's tunnel, the five rear cars next the caboose sagging over the southbound track. Shortly afterwards train No. 32 going south, consisting of five express cars, four mail cars and a coach, ran into the wreck and the locomotive jumped the track and landed on the ice in the river. Two of the express cars were wrecked and seven of the freight cars were knocked into splinters. The wreckage caught fire and burned. John Donahue of New York, engineer of the express train, had his spine injured and an arm broken, and the fireman, named Reed, of New York, had his skull fractured. The two men were taken to Vassar Hospital, Poughkeepsie, and Donohue died while being taken there. Reed cannot live.

Investigators Handicapped.

Word has been received from Erzeroom, the city from which the European delegation has recently set out for the scene of the late massacre in the Sassoun district, that the delegates were not allowed by the Turkish government to take Armenian interpreters with them. The Sassoun Armenians know only Koordish and a little Armenian, but not Turkish. It will be impossible for these delegates to obtain any definite information from them through an official Turkish interpreter, who does not understand their language. The delegation thus equipped has gone to do its work.

Ex-Queen Lil. Found Guilty.

San Francisco special: The Mariposa brings news from Honolulu that the trial of the ex-Queen had just been concluded when the steamer left, and the prevailing opinion was that she would be found guilty and sentence would be pronounced against her.

The feeling in Honolulu against the conspirators is very strong, and it is the general desire that the executions be carried out, but President Dole, who is more conservative in the matter, is said to oppose this. Martial law is still in force.

A Rich Find

A special from Deadwood, S. D., says. Messrs. Ingram and McEatchron, who were building a cyanide plane plant at Keystone, one-half a mile from the Holy Terror mine, struck a body of ore while grading for the plant. Development work has been pushed on the find, and a streak of ore has been encountered which is so rich in gold that armed guards are kept during the time that the mine is not worked. The ore is extremely rich in free gold and the vein is growing wider as the shaft is sunk. The find is a second "Holy Terror."

Street-Car Magnates and Strikers Indicted

The grand jury of Kings County, New York, has reported in the Court of Sessions that they had jointly indicted President Benjamin Norton of the Atlantic avenue railroad and Superintendent Quinn of the same company on two charges of violating the ten hour law. The charges are misdemeanors, punishable by one year's imprisonment, or a fine of $500, or both. The grand jury also returned twenty-seven indictments against strikers for rioting, throwing bricks, and for other acts of violence.

The Curse of the Labor Cause.

The other morning a bomb was thrown into the office of the Buckeye Glass Works, at Martin's Ferry, Ohio, deing considerable damage. Manager Humphrey was supposed to be sleeping in the office at the time. This is the second attempt on his life, as he was shot at about ten days ago. A strike was inaugurated in this factory some months ago, and early in January operations were resumed with non-union men. Since then there have been frequent outbreaks.

Killed By a Train.

Henry Johns, a wealthy farmer, 50 years old, who resides near Wilkinson, Ind., was killed by a passing train on the Peoria and Eastern division of the Big Four, within a few rods of his own house. His wife and children saw the train strike the buggy and brain the victim of the accident. The railroad runs along the road in front of the Johns house, and the collision occurred on a diagonal crossing.

Gas Explosion.

An explosion of natural gas at Meadville, Pa., wrecked the store and dwelling of George H. Cutler, killed one man and seriously injured three others. The houses were completely demolished and the ruins, taking fire, were completely destroyed. The explosion was caused by a leak in the main, the escaping gas igniting from the office stove.

Strange Fatality.

Mrs. William Ripple of Youngstown, O., and Mrs. Laura Murphy of Champion, O., sisters, died recently within an hour of each other. Messages announcing the death of each to the other's family passed on the road.

Killed Instantly.

The boiler in the saw-mill of Conklin & Peterson, at Lumberton, south of Xenia, Ohio, exploded, killing instantly Howe Street, son of Harrison Street, aged 19, who was at the time the only occupant of the mill.

Two Killed.

A large boiler exploded in Cobb's saw-mill, two miles west of Towanda, Pa. Theodore Pencil, fireman, and John Mack, a teamster, were instantly killed, and Frank Myers, a mill hand, fatally wounded.

BUSINESS PICKING UP.

COMPTROLLER ECKELS GETS ENCOURAGING REPORTS.

Bankers Throughout the Country Assert that Confidence Is Returning and Prospects Are Brightening—Cleveland Averse to an Extra Session.

Eckels Is an Optimist.

Washington correspondence:

COMPTROLLER Eckels, who is in touch with the bankers throughout the country, reports an improvement in business. This improvement, he says, began some time ago and is going steadily on. His information warrants him in expressing the belief that it will continue to go steadily on, until the normal condition has been once more reaghed. He is not discouraged by the present financial situation. He does not believe that the country is going to the "demnition bow-wows" or that it is anywhere near that place. Though of a naturally optimistic nature, Mr. Eckels is sufficiently conservative to refrain from expressing any opinion under which he has not a good solid ground for foundation.

He is in daily communication with the national bankers, and it seems as if every one of them felt called upon to give his opinion as to the condition of affairs in his particular section of the country, all of which is very agreeable to the Comptroller. His correspondents are the ablest men of the country. They have carved their own way in the world, and have achieved a prominent niche. They do not give their opinions for the purpose of publication or to achieve any ulterior end. They merely write them as bits of gossip, thinking they will interest the Comptroller. These national bankers, receiving their information from business men of their respective communities, who come to them for loans, probably probe more clearly into the very heart of the trouble and condition of the general public than any other class of men. It is their knowledge, given with the honest purpose of supplying the Comptroller with accurate information of national affairs, which forms the basis of Comptroller Eckels' opinion.

The chief trouble which the present condition of affairs is causing the country is the spread of fear in Europe that our national credit is in a shaky condition. The report has gone abroad that we are not to maintain gold payments, and American securities, held in such enormous quantities by foreign investors, will be paid for in silver or some depreciated currency. This naturally creates apprehension and distrust. The President's message has had a wonderfully reviving effect on Europe, according to private information received at the Treasury Department. And many men and corporations of great wealth seeking investment, and who a month or so ago were doing their best to realize on their American securities, are now perfectly willing to hold them. There are plenty left, however, who fear that this Congress is not to be trusted, and that some legislation dangerous to the stability of our national credit will be inaugurated ere the final adjournment. This feeling possesses, in a slight measure, a few American bankers. They are, however, of the timid class, and though their feelings may be extended to their customers, the damage will not be so very great.

President Cleveland appreciates this feeling, both here and abroad; at a recent Cabinet meeting he expressed himself as being strongly opposed to an extra session; so strongly, in fact, as to warrant him in informing his associates that there would be none, unless some unforeseen emergency should arise. The President does not believe that the prospect of securing party advantages alone would warrant him inflicting an extra session of Congress upon the people. The situation must take on a much darker hue. It is his belief, based on communications from people in all parts of the country, that what the country wants is a rest from Congress. He further believes that the recovery of business will be more rapid if members of Congress are at home, instead of at the national capital in session. He shares Secretary Carlisle's belief that the revenues will soon be sufficiently large to meet the Government expenditures, and when that is proved to the general satisfaction confidence will strengthen and the need for further issues of bonds disappear. Such is the situation to-day.

Employes of both houses of Congress are spending a good deal of time on their knees, praying that an extra session will not be called. No particular love of country actuates them in their desire. It is purely personal with them, though they may possibly think that their own personal benefit will indirectly add to the benefit of the country. The fact is that an extra session means the cessation of their present jobs. If there is no extra session their terms of employment will continue until Congress meets in regular session next December. That means the loss or gain of just about nine months' salary to them. Should the Fifty-fourth Congress convene in session immediately after the close of this Congress, new officers would doubtless be elected by the Senate, which it is expected will reorganize, inasmuch as the Democrats are no longer in the majority, and the employes now enjoying soft positi s at remunerative prices will have to seek other employment. And the seeking of other employment to a man who has enjoyed a few years in the service of the United States Senate is about as disagreeable a job as ever confronted a politician.

The day after the last election Logan Carlisle, Chief Clerk of the Treasury, received applications from nine-tenths of the employes of both Senate and House. They had hoped for Democratic success at the polls, and had gone to bed the night before wondering if their hopes were to be realized. They were up before daybreak and read the answer in the stars. These told them they must seek other places ere the incoming of the Congress elected the day before; and ere the sun had risen their applications were prepared for positions in one of the Government departments. Some of these applicants will be provided for, of course, but comparatively few, because the departments are already choked. If the prayers of these supplicants are answered there will be no extra session. But even when the next Congress convenes in December they will be just as reluctant to go, and, moreover, they will be all the less able to secure employment.

The report that the President is once more suffering from ill-health has gone abroad again. This report will doubtless be repeated with more or less frequency after the adjournment of Congress and news at the national capital is scarce. But whatever the condition of the President will be after the adjournment of Congress, it can, and should, be said positively now that it has never been better during the present administration. The President is naturally a man of action. He likes work. He thrives on worry. His step is light and his gout has disappeared. His cheeks are ruddy, his eye clear and his hand-clasp firm. He seems well, eats well, works well. He sees everybody who calls on him on public business, and his information shows that he keeps in touch with pretty much all that is going on. The President may not live fifty years longer, but a great many who are now predicting his death will leave him on earth a firm, vigorous man of affairs when they are climbing the golden stairs.

A strong effort is being made by the friends of General Casey, Chief Engineer of the army, to have him placed in charge of the construction of the new Chicago post office building. It is to be hoped that their efforts will fail. No one doubts the engineering ability of General Casey. But the long time it has taken him to build the Congressional Library is a monument to his lack of energy, and should be a warning to all who hope for the erection of the Chicago building in Chicago time. General Casey will soon retire from the army on account of the age limit. He will retire at a good salary, but he would like the fat berth of superintending the construction of so large a building as the new post office in Chicago is to be, and like especially the comfortable stipend he would receive for such superintendence. The General, as an army officer, has been brought up in that life, and a man who goes to him for information, in the event of his succeeding in his earnest wish to be placed in charge of the Chicago building, or who ventures to make a suggestion, would do well, if he seeks to preserve his self-respect, to take a club along with him. Chairman Sayers, chairman of the House Appropriation Committee, is particularly desirous of having General Casey placed in charge of the Chicago building. Apropos is the fact that Mr. Sayers is very desirous of so prolonging the building of the new post office as to spread the necessary appropriations over a long series of years. If General Casey should be appointed Chairman Sayers will be content.

SCHEME TO DEFRAUD.

Mother and Daughters Conspire to Beat a Railroad.

Mrs. Freeman and her two daughters, Fannie, aged 19, and Jennie, aged 22, were arrested in Chicago, the specific charge made against them being that of attempting to defraud the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company out of $2,000. The three women tried to work a new dodge on the company, but it is one which, it is said, has been successfully used by the same practitioners before. Miss Fannie, by much practice in stoicism, passed herself off as a paralytic, claiming that she had been injured in an accident on the railroad, and had become paralyzed in consequence. She feigned the part so well that the company came near paying the claim presented. The smallness of the amount asked for, however, created some suspicion, and detectives were put to work on the case.

The Freemans lived in a flat at 66S West Twelfth street, but the flat above them was unoccupied. Detectives rented the upper flat, made small holes in the floor and through these watched the proceedings that took place in the sick room below. Whenever the family was alone the paralyzed young woman would leave her bed and walk around the room just as well as her mother or sister could. When the doctor called, the mother, before admitting him to the chamber of the "paralytic," would immerse Miss Fannie's limbs in cold water, and as soon as they were half frozen she was put to bed and the doctor called in. He found her limbs icy cold, as they should be if really paralyzed. On his final visit, however, he amused himself for a few moments jabbing pins into them, but Miss Fannie had been schooled to stand this sort of thing since childhood and never winced. When the doctor raised one of her legs a look of consternation overspread the young woman's face. What should she do? No doctor had ever raised her leg before. It was not in the program. The leg remained raised and the doctor smiled, while the mother swore. A few hours later the place was pulled and Miss Fannie sprang out of bed. The women objected seriously to being taken into custody, and loudly protested their innocence, but they were quieted down a trifle when the peep-hole in the ceiling was pointed out to them. They were taken to the police station, where they broke down and made a complete confession.

Mutilated Bank Notes.

Quite frequently a mutilated note is presented at the bank for payment, burned perhaps half through, with marks of burning on the fringes. Nor is the damage always accidental. The men who indulge in the luxury of lighting their pipes with a bank note are not always, as some may think, millionaires or recognized lunatics of society. The spoiled notes are more often than not presented by workmen or laborers, who confess without hesitation that they have intentinally lighted their pipes with them from mere braggadocio. It may not be generally known that bank notes have an odor so characteristic that an expert with good nose can detect by this alone their presence in a sealed envelope. It is said that there are several employes engaged in the engraving and printing of notes who can select from a pile of letters all that contain bank notes. The matter of odor of notes was first called attention to by a convicted letter thief. He was blindfolded and given a batch of four hundred letters, seven of which contained money. He held the letters to his nose in repid succession, and unerringly selected those that contained the notes.

A HANDSOME new Masonic temple for Logansport is assured. It is to be located at North and Fourth streets and will probably contain an auditorium that will seat 1,400 people.

CLOYD MEENELEY, the 9-year-old son of J. V. Meeneley of the Frankfort Times, was run down, by a cab, the wheels of the vehicle passing over his head and inflicting what is thought to be a fatal injury.

EXTENSIVE preparations are being made at South Bend for the entertainment of the Indiana teachers, who will hold a three days' session there the first week in April. One thousand teachers are expected.

FRED STOCKENBARGER, Mishawaka, killed a freak in the poultry line, the other day. The chicken had three legs, one growing out from the back. The peculiarity was not noticed until after its death.

CHARLES, the 6-year-old son of John Zipp of New Albany, was left alone at home and was burned to death. The child's clothes caught fire from a grate and he was horribly burned before neighbors could render assistance.

RHINEHEART SMITH of Elwood, was out gunning, and by some unknown means his gun was discharged and the load passed through his right wrist. The wrist was so badly shattered and mangled that amputation was necessary.

ELWOOD has so far this winter had no need of a charity mission of local citizens to care for the poor, as there are very few cases of destitution reported, and these are being cared for by the different churches and fraternal societies.

A FEW weeks ago Albert Frazier of Muncie, was married, and in the delirium of his joy he treated all his friends to cigars. Two of the recipients happened to be minors and the grand jury indicted him. He was released upon a petition signed by the citizens.

SUIT has been entered for damages against the Alexandria natural-gas company, by Jean Grenier, Anderson. He claims that while his child was sick the company shut off the gas and the change in the temperature of the house caused the child's death.

PHILIP LYKENS, of Cowan, who was believed to have been murdered, has turned up all right visiting old comrades in the Soldiers' Home at Marion. His failure to tell of his departure and the fact that he had just been paid his pension led to the report.

THE firm name of Wadsworth & Kessler, publishers of the Laporte Argus, will undergo a change in the near future, the latter having sold his interest in the paper to D. L. Wadsworth, son of the senior member of the firm. The transfer, however, will not occur until April 1.

THE little town of Jonesboro, Grant County, some time ago, struck mineral water similar to that at Martinsville and now has a new phenomenon in the shape of a hot water well. The water is too hot to drink and on striking the cold air sends up a great volume of steam.

AT Jeffersonville, Judge Gibson granted a divorce to Mrs. Anna Fineberg from her husband Abraham. The proceedings occupied just seven minutes. The court officials claim that is the shortest time on record in which the proceedings of a divorce suit were consummated and the divorce granted.

THE Nelson Glass Company at Muncie, which has been engaged for several months changing the factory to a flint-glass from a green-glass works, has resumed operations with 175 hands. Muncie now has not a single idle factory, and the Whiteley Malleable Castings Company wants 100 moulders to add to their list of 400 hands.

THE business center of Anderson was startled recently by an explosion of natural gas, which took place in the basement of the saloon owned by Louis Biest. Hundreds of persons rushed to the scene to find a half dozen persons mangled in the debris. Henry Dittmer, a bartender, was the only person injured. His head, face, and hands were pretty badly burned. Dittmer went to the cellar and, upon striking a match, the explosion followed, although no trace of gas had been previously noted. The plate-glass front was shattered to pieces and blown across the street, the floor ripped open, bottles broken and pieces of plastering loosened from the walls and ceiling. A half dozen persons were at the bar, all of whom were slightly stunned by the concussion, but none injured.

WEBSTER DOUGHERTY, one of the best-known and brightest Fort Wayne newsboys, was killed recently. He attempted to run across Lafayette street between detached parts of a train and was caught between the cars.

FREDERSCK NIPPLE, a prominent farmer living three miles south of Delphi, was hunting rabbits with his 13-year-old boy. Both were armed with shotguns, and both discovered a rabbit at the same moment. As the boy, in his excitement, brought his gun to his shoulder his finger accidentally touched the trigger too soon, and the contents of his gun were discharged into the body of his father, causing instant death.

JOHN RIPLEY, of Burlington, Ia., a brother of Superintendent Ripley, of the Cosmo Buttermilk soap factory, of Valparaiso, was seriously injured by the falling of the factory elevator. He was on the third floor and took the freight elevator to descend, when the mooring gave way, letting Ripley and the platform drop to the first floor, a distance of fifty-five feet

THE will of Gen. M. D. Manson has been admitted to probate. He absolutely gives to his wife all his property, personal and real, with power to do as she desires with it. In case she dies without disposing of all the property it is to be divided equally between his children, taking into consideration what sums he has advanced to them. Mrs. Manson is named as the executrix.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

IN the House Monday the regular order of business was bills on second reading. There was some discussion over House bill No. 348, for an act regulating the dog tax. The bill was passed to third reading. Among the other bills passed to third reading were the following:

Touching the duties of township trustees; reorganizing the board of trustees of Purdue University; relating to the running at large of all kinds of animals; concerning the dimensions of gravel roads on which tolls are collected, providing that such roads shall be twelve feet wide and shall have gravel twelve inches deep; to authorize common councils to license vehicles; to regulate teaming and hauling over turnpikes; relating to the employment of teachers by township trustees.

The Miller-Bowers contest from the joint representative district of Dearborn, Ohio and Switzerland counties was decided in favor of Miller.

The following bills were introduced in the Senate:

To prohibit the sale of pernicious literature; a fee and salary bill; to provide for a waterway from Lake Michigan to the Wabash River, and to drain the Kankakee swamp lands; to protect persons who have been injured and have recovered a judgment therefor; to amend the laws concerning civil cases.

The Senate passed the following bills Tuesday:

Providing that fencing and drain tile shall be a lien on property; authorizing trustees of religious and charitable institutions to receive donations; providing that auditors of counties from which cases are sent on change of venue may make inquiry into bill of expenses charged; providing for the apointment of a food and dairy commissioner; declaring a road that has been used five years a public highway; requiring railroads to build their tracks to a grade with the streets; placing the keys of the jury box in the hands of the jury commissioner of opposite politics to the clerk; providing that the salaries of county commissioners in counties of 60,000 or over, shall be $1,200 a year; appropriation $10,000 annually to enable the State Board of Agriculture to pay premiums.

The House adjourned at 3:30 o'clock to give the Republican Representatives an opportunity to attend the Lincoln League meeting. The bill prohibiting football and baseball on Sunday was engrossed.

The bill requiring farmers to take out license before selling produce in cities and towns was referred to the Committee on Rights and privileges, and thereby killed.

The bill prepared by the Ways and Means Committee providing for the exemption of mortgage indebtedness from taxation to the amount of $500 was amended to read $1,000, and was ordered to engrossment. The bill exempting $500 indebtedness on personal property was also engrossed.

The House was engaged all day Wednesday on committee reports. The anti-railroad pass bill of Representative Robinson was before the House for an hour, and an effort was made to refer the bill to the Committee on Railroads, which would have meant its burial. The motion to refer was defeated by a close vote, and the bill was ordered to a second reading.

The senate was engaged all day with bills on third reading. The most important bill passed was the bill creating a firemen's pension fund. The following bills were passed: Providing for an attorney's fee of not less than $5, to be paid by the defendant, where any citizen, mechanic, laborer, servant, or other employe has to sue for wages; Requiring township trustees to keep record of all persons to whom aid is granted from public funds; providing that prosecuting attorneys may administer oaths in certain cases; providing that upon the petition of fifty-three holders the question of the construction of gravel or macadamized roads shall be left to a vote of the locality interested; authorizing county commissioners to purchase and hold for fair purposes fair grounds that have become encumbered with debt; providing for the issue of bonds for the purchase of lands and the erection thereon of school-houses.

The Nicholson temperance bill was favorably reported from the House Temperance Committee, Thursday. Representative Nicholson wanted the constitutional rules suspended and the bill placed upon its passage. This caused a wrangle, and an attempt by Representative Holloway to stave off discussion until next Thursday. Representative Robinson's amendment to postpone until Tuesday finally prevailed.

Representative Moore's bill giving councils the power so say where saloons shall be located and likewise the power to prohibit winerooms was also favorably adopted and the report adopted.

The Railroad Committee made a favorable report on Representative McCaskey's bill reducing the rate of railroad fare to two cents a mile.

In the Senate there was a discussion over Senator Shively's bill, which permits a wife to become surety for her husband, and to make contracts, &c. There were two reports. The majority report was adopted and the bill killed.

Senator McDonald's Iroquois Gun Club bill, to amend the present law so that men can hunt on the marshes in the north part of the State, which is prohibited now, was reported favorably.

There were two reports from the Committee on Education on Senator Newby's bill requiring instructions in public schools concerning the effects of stimulants and narcotics. The minority report, favoring the passage of the bill, was adopted.

Mr. Wray's anti-pass bill was done to death in the Senate Friday. The majority report of the Committee on Railroads was against the passage of the bill. The report was adopted.

The county seat relocation bill was ordered to engrossment.

A number of bills were introduced in the Senate, among which the following were the most important:

Making 4 per cent. the legal rate of interest; regulating the liability of common carriers; appropriating $25,000 for the erection of a school for the deaf and dumb at Evansville; to regulate the sale of convict made goods.

The Committee on Reformatory Institutions made a report of its visit to the Reform School for Girls, Women's Prison and Reform School for Boys. The reports commended the management of these institutions, and an appropriation of $9,000 was recommended for the purchase of 160 acres in addition to the land owned by the Boys' Reform School.

The bill providing that a diploma from the State Normal School shall entitle the holder to a license to teach in the public schools, was indefinitely postponed.

The bill to prevent the pollution of streams by straw-board companies was recommended for indefinite postponement by the Judiciary Committ

It was hard, very hard; but Silence was neither hurt nor offended. "Faithful in one thing, faithful in all," she murmured. Clasping both her hands around his arm, she crept still closer to his heart, all the truer and dearer because even its love for herself had failed to deaden any other lawful tenderness.

"Forgive me, my wife. You must not think that——"

"I only think of you and of your pain."

"It must be conquered, and shall by and by."

"Or else the tide may turn; who knows?"

"No; I have little hope of that. My mother has strong prejudices. In one sense she is, as they called her, a thorough Scotch woman, a warm friend, a bitter enemy. No, no, do not give me hope of things changing. Better let us submit to the inevitable. It is inevitable now."

They walked a little way in sad silence, then Roderick broke out again.

"Did you hear what they said about Bella's husband? Poor Bella! I knew it would come to that; I told her so, but she would not believe me. She was dazzled, blinded, overpersuaded. Girls often are, I suppose. Perhaps I ought to have spoken out more thoroughly; but I hated speaking—they never would understand me. And then they worried me so. Still I should have done my duty to them, whether or no. I have not liked to vex you, my darling; but sometimes I have vexed myself for days together with the doubt if I had really done my duty to them all. I cannot forget them. My dearest—my very dearest always—you would not wish me to forget them?"

"No."

"Thank you!" And then, with another half sob, he recovered himself. "Now we understand one another quite, so let us put it all aside. What is done we can not undo; we would not if we could. Blood is thicker than water—especially with us Scotch—but love is beyond all and stronger than all."

"When it is a righteous love. Ours would not have been such if it had made us do wrong. We did not do wrong. We had a right to marry if we chose. It made us happy and harmed no human being."

Firm and fearless, holding the balance even, and as just to herself as she would have been to any other woman, Silence spoke out. Her voice soothed and strengthened him as if it had been the voice of his own conscience.

"You are right, as I think you always are. After all, if it comes to the point, a man must 'leave his father and mother and cling unto his wife,' and she will cleave to him—even though he may try her a little. Do I?

Man-like, he might have wished this fact denied; but Silence was too honest.

"Yes, dear," and just then, as they came out of the dark wood into the moonlight, her pale face seemed to gain a sort of Abdiel-like look, angelic sternness mingled with its sweetness. "Yes, dear, you do try me very much sometimes, as no doubt I do you—as all married people must, more or less, try one another; but I love you—I love you!"

"Do you? I often wonder why," Roderick answered, with that almost child-like humility and doubt of himself which was so pathetic, so winning.

"I love because I honor, and therefore I am afraid of nothing; because nothing could make me cease to love, except ceasing to honor. Me, myself, you might forsake, wound, torture, and if it were for conscience's sake, I should accept it all. But if I ever came to despise you—as some women have to despise their husbands—pity might last, and duty; but love would go dead out, and no power on earth would light it up again. But now—but now——"

She turned to him, her eyes shining with perfect trust—the very heart of love, love rooted in righteousness. He turned, too, and clasped her in his arms, with a passion such as even his lover days had never felt. Then it was the restless craving after uncertain bliss. Now it was the deep content of satisfied union, each finding in the other more and more every day a perpetual refuge and rest.

"My mother told me I would soon get over my love for you—and marry some other woman, who would do just as well. If it had been, and I had lost you, and had to live all my life without you! But now—oh, Silence! what in the world should I do without you now?"

Without answering, she looked up at him, a sudden, strangely earnest look. Roderick, who had begun with a laugh, as if anxious to get back into the light commonplace of life once more, put his arm round her.

"Are you tired? Let me help you. I think I could almost carry you. Lean on me, darling."

"Yes. I always do."

And so, half led, half carried—for she was evidently very weary—they came to their own door.

"What a pleasant door it seems!" Roderick said, as they watched the long gleam from the parlor window across the dark lawn. "I enjoyed Symington. I like luxuries, as I like all pleasant things, but I can do without them. Now, there are certain things I could not do without."

"What are they?"

"A peaceful, sunshiny, orderly home, and a wife to love me."

She laughed merrily. "Yes, it is a dear home, if we could only get into it." For they had found the door fastened—a rare fact—and had been ringing and ringing, till at last Janet appeared, scared and flurried.

"Have you been asleep, Janet? Nothing wrong? No ghosts frightened you?" said Roderick, kindly.

"Na, na, but the leddy, she bode me steek the door."

"What lady?"

"She came in a carriage, and said she was come to bide here. She's been waiting in the parlor these two hours."

Roderick went hastily in, his wife following. There, still bonneted and shawled, dressed richly in velvet and fur, but with a face so haggard that it was no wonder even her brother did not at first recognize her—sat the "leddy."

"Bella!"

"Yes, it's me! You didn't know, I suppose?"

"Dear Bella! so glad to see you." And he went over and kissed her affectionately. But Bella made no response.

"Stop a minute," she said, in a hard, dry tone. "Don't be too glad to see me. Ask your wife first. I'm not respected. I've run away from my husband."

Roderick started.

"Not with a man—oh, no, thank you! I've had enough of men"—with the ghost of her old laugh—"only with a baby."

She opened her fur cloak and discovered the white long clothes of a tiny—such a very tiny—infant, with such an old, withered, ugly little face. Nevertheless, Silence sprung to it and took it in her arms.

"Oh, you're quite welcome, if you want it. I don't, though it's my own," said Mrs. Thomson, with another laugh. "A month old, when it was born, I hated the very sight of it, it was so like its father. Now—well, I endure it, that's all! Isn't it a miserable scrap of a thing?"

It certainly was; but in an instant Silence, throwing off her wraps, had sat down to warm its skinny, stone-cold legs by the fire, with a look on her face that even her husband had never seen before.

"She seems born to be a mother, which I'm sure I never was; I always hated children. They look exactly like young frogs or toads. No doubt this will turn out a toad, and spit in my face like—only it's a feminine, not a masculine, article, thank goodness! It can never grow up a man like him."

"Do you mean your husband?" said Roderick, gravely.

"To be sure. The man I was fool enough to marry. Why didn't my mother prevent me, as she tried to prevent your marriage? But mine was all right—or she thought so—as she thinks still. I've got a handsome house, horses and carriages, butler, three footmen and a page. Didn't I dodge them all cleverly? Crept out in the dark of the afternoon and took a tram—me, Mrs. Alexander Thomson—a common street tram—to the railway. What would Mr. Thomson have said? Ha! ha! ha! I wish he knew it, if only just to vex him!"

Roderick sat down by his sister, grieved and sad. She was in such an excited state that he did not attempt a single question, but she went on rapidly talking.

"What a hunt there'll be. Not that he cares for me, not two straws, but it isn't respectable to have one's wife running away. And they will think I have gone mad and killed the baby—he knew I hated it. But I am not mad, I am quite in my sober senses, Rody—is that a noise? I told the girl to bolt the front door, somebody might come after me, though I don't think it. And they never would imagine I had come here to you."

"No," said Roderick, with involuntary bitterness. "Nevertheless, I being still your brother, and you having chosen to take refuge with me, you are safe. Be satisfied."

He laid his hand on her shoulder—she was shaking from head to foot; then untying her bonnet and cloak, he made her lean back in the arm chair.

Tears started to Bella's eyes "Thank you; you were always kind to me, Rody, and you have got used to woman's ways, I see. But don't be uneasy, I shall not faint—I never do. I'm tough, like mamma, or I should have been killed long ago. He was such a brute—you've no idea. That is, when he was drunk. Sober, he is—well, only a fool! I must have been blind—many silly girls are"—passing her hand wearily over her eyes—"but, oh, Rody, fancy to wake up after a week or two and find yourself tied for life to a drunkard and a fool! A brute, too, as I say. Roderick"—clutching him by the arm—"you, a man with a wife of your own, and—yes, I know!—would you believe that the very day before that poor little wretch was born, he—he struck me?"

Roderick sprang to his feet.

"Don't get furious, you can do nothing, nobody can. It's only the drink. He's decent enough, just a fool at most, till he drinks, then he's a devil; and I hate him as I hate the devil. It's right."

"Right or wrong, you must keep quiet," said the brother, himself making a violent effort at quietness and self-control. "My wife"—the instinctive appeal which had become habitual now—"my wife, come here."

Silence came, with the small bundle, so piteously still, as if only half alive, in her arms. She had been going in and out of the room with it while they talked.

"Your bed is quite ready. Come, sister."

Bella, occupied with herself and her brother, had apparently forgotten her brother's wife. When Silence stood before her—the young mistress of the house, the woman with the womanly heart, which that forlorn babe seemed already to have found out, for it was fast asleep on her warm breast—this other woman, the miserable fine lady, the mother with the unmotherly soul, was struck with a mingled feeling, half surprise, half compunction.

"Yes, of course we are sisters. But I thought you would hate me—hate us all. It was Roderick I ran away to. I never thought of you."

"That was natural. But now, all that are his are mine—as is also quite natural. Come."

Bella grasped the offered hand and rose, saying, with a feeble laugh, "Rody, your wife must be an exceedingly good woman."

"Cela va sans dire, I hope," said he, trying to laugh as he hurried them away up-stairs, and sat down over the fire, thankful to be alone.

Most men dislike scenes, he more than most. The sight of his sister, the sound of her familiar voice, even down to the old boyish pet-name, which belonged exclusively to those early days—his wife had never used it—affected him deeply.

Then, too, he was a man, with all a man's feeling about marital rights and duties. To find himself sheltering a runaway wife, though even his own sister, was very distasteful. Still every brotherly and manly emotion blazed up into righteous indignation at thought of Bella's wrongs.

"To strike her—actually strike her! Poor, poor girl! If I had been at hand—if she had had a brother to stand up for her!" And again his tender conscience smote him, as if he had not done half enough, as if his passive acceptance of fate had been of itself an error. Should he resist now? Seeing that his sister had come to him for refuge, should he not hide her—that was impossible, nor, had it been possible, would he have stooped to any concealment—but openly protect her against her husband, her mother, and all the world?

His head dropped in his hands to "think it over." But he had grown unused to solitary thinking now. Wearily he looked round for the second self, always beside him, ready at least with the sympathy which is often almost as good as counsel, sometimes even better still.

But it was almost an hour, quite the middle of the night, before Silence came in. She looked very pale and tired; but there was a deep joy in her face. With her light curls dropping over her white dressing-gown, she stood beside him, a vision of peace.

"Dear, you put me in mind of one of Fra Angelico's angels."

"But I have been doing no angel's work. I have been washing baby. She looked so sweet, though she is so very, very small. Then I put her to bed beside her mother, who said she 'felt quite safe and comfortable.'"

"Poor Bella! And you—I fear you are terribly worn out, my darling."

"Oh, no; I like looking after people. And you—you are glad to have one of your 'ain folk' under your roof? Is it not strange, after our talk to-night?"

"Very strange. And," with a kind of sad apology, "you will be good to her? You don't dislike her?"

"Dislike her?"

"No; there are likeable points about her, poor girl! And she has suffered so much! What shall we do with her? I have been wearying myself with thinking. Can she stay here?"

"Of course she can. We have contrived admirably; I rather like contriving. She brought no clothes for herself, but she does not forget her baby. She had a great bundle of all things needful. I do not believe she cares for it after all. She laughed, actually laughed, when she saw it so happy in its bath, which was our wash-tub. Only think! neither she nor I have ever washed a baby before; we were quite afraid; but Janet, who has had little brothers and sisters—six, I think—came to the rescue and helped us. Poor Janet, she was so proud!"

The simple, wholesome, domestic details—comedy neutralizing tragedy—Roderick laughed at them, and felt more comforted than he could tell. Then, turning to his wife, he pressed his lips on the small right hand, so soft, yet so busy and so strong.

"Coals of fire—coals of fire," he murmured, much moved.

Silence did not at first understand the allusion, then she said, "Yes, coals which melt and purify all sterling ore; that was how my father always explained the text. And who knows?—she may be softened yet."

"My mother?"

"I have been hearing all about her, how good she is, how generous and warm-hearted. And she was always so proud of you. She thought you ought to marry a countess, at least, and you married only me! It really was a little hard for her."

Roderick drew his wife down upon his knee—a "Fra Angelico," but a mortal woman still—and buried her head on his shoulder. He did not speak, or nothing that she could hear, but she felt his tears.

The said "coals of fire," when duly heaped up, warm others besides those they are meant to melt. Seldom had there been a brighter breakfast table than that in the little parlor at Blackhall; even though Bella kept it a long time waiting—"which must never happen again," said the young master to the mistress. But for once both forgave, and when Mrs. Alexander Thomson sailed in, her splendid clothes contrasting strangely with her piteously white face, knelt with her brother and his wife around the family hearth, and then took her seat at the simple family table, all the misery outside, the dreary past, the doubtful future, could not take away a certain sense of peace.

But the simple breakfast of porridge and tea, bread, butter and eggs, which always satisfied Roderick, had, to confess the truth, its difficulties with the guest. Despite her condescending smile, it was evidently not exactly what Mrs. Alexander Thomson was used to, and she felt that she was condescending. Also, after the first warm pleasure of meeting, both brother and sister became conscious of that curious sense of strangeness which, notwithstanding the closest tie of blood, rises up after awhile between those whose lives have drifted wide apart, never to be united more. So much so, that by and by conversation flagging, it was quite a relief to hear a feeble wail overhead.

Vernacular of the Chase.

There is no more discerning class than the sportsmen. The vernacular of the chase as they have invented it is oddly appropriate to its objects. There is a smack of the soil and a breath of the salt water in the terms employed. Usually there is something quaintly appropriate to the habits of wild animals in the phrases with which they are lumped together. Here is a list which gives very adequate suggestion of the vernacular of the open season:

A covey of partridges.
A hide of pheasants.
A whisp of snipe.
A flight of doves or swallows.
A muster of peacocks.
A siege of herons.
A building of rocks.
A brood of grouse.
A plump of wild fowl.
A stand of plovers.
A watch of nightingales.
A clattering of doughs.
A flock of geese.
A herd or bunch of cattle.
A bevy of quails.
A cast of hawks.
A trip of dottrel.
A swarm of bees.
A school of whales.
A school of herrings.
A herd of swine.
A skulk of foxes.
A pack of wolves.
A drove of oxen.
A sounder of hogs.
A troop of monkeys.
A pride of lions.
A sleuth of bears.
A gang of elk.

Buried Loaf Twenty-five Years Old

Twenty-five years ago Timothy Monahan, of Bath, Steuben County, purchased a farm near Portage Bridge. He has lived on the farm ever since. On part of the property was a piece of heavy timber, which Monohan cleared off twenty years ago. In a field where this timber stood Monahan was digging a ditch a few days ago. To do this he had to dig through a deposit of gravel four feet deep. At that depth he uncovered what he at first thought was a big stone nearly round, but on striking it with his pick to loosen it he was surprised to see the pick pass clear through it without meeting any resistance. Monahan then picked up the supposed stone and his amazement was great to find it to be a loaf of bread. The loaf was in perfect condition, even to the crisp, brown crust. It was as soft, light and moist inside as if it had just come from the oven. The loaf broke in two as he was removing it from its bed in the gravel. He fed half of it to his dog, who ate it greedily. The other half of the loaf Monahan carried to his house, where it is now, a wonder to the neighborhood. Monahan declares that the ground where the loaf was found had never been broken during his quarter of a century on the place.—Buffalo Times.

Killed by Railroad Accidents.

During 1891 1,168 persons were killed and 5,060 were injured by railroad accidents in Great Britain and Ireland.

Dr. Westbrook Farrer, of Biddeford, Me., is said to be a physician in active practice, though 98 years old, and, still more remarkable, to be in the habit of visiting his patients regularly on a bicycle. He attributes his exceptional vigor at the advanced age to the use of wintergreen tea, of which he is said to be an ardent advocate.

WASHINGTON IN CAMP

QUAINT OLD MANUSCRIPTS AND ORDERS.

First Year of the Continental Army—General Washington's First Instructions to His Officers and Enlisted Men—Against Waste of Powder.

Record of Daily Life.

There are in the possession of David Prescott Hall, of the New York bar, a series of quaint old manuscript volumes which look as if they had seen rich service. As they were written in the camp of the Continental army during the war of the American revolution, sometimes on the knee of the writer, sometimes on a drumhead; as they were carried about from place to place, borne off in hasty retreats or in forced marches, it must be confessed that their looks do not belie them. Nevertheless, the clever eleven short, stout, sturdy books are in a very fair state of preservation and are easily legible, save occasionally at the corners, which are in some places frayed and worn. When I add that these orderly books contain the general orders of Washington to his army it will be seen that their interest and value are very great. These orderly books are in the handwriting of Colonel Grosvenor.

On their yellow, time-stained pages one can trace the record of Washington's daily struggles to organize and discipline the army, from the day when he first took command of it under the spreading elm at Cambridge. They abound with the most minute details of the situation, and give us a photographic picture of the army and its surroundings, all in the quaint language and peculiar spelling of that bygone time. One cannot help smiling at these at times, but one hardly knows whether to smile or weep at the forlorn condition of our little army, which is here so vividly revealed.

The loftiness and nobility of Washington's character shine out in these pages. But he often gives expression to his surprise and sometimes to his just indignation at the conduct of officers and men, who found it very difficult and distasteful to submit to discipline.

Washington's early experience as a soldier had taught him the absolute necessity of discipline and obedience, and he gradually enforced both in the little army of raw militia, who had to learn that bravery is not the only qualification necessary for a soldier.

Washington's First Order.

"Headquarters, Cambridge, July the 3d, 1875.

"Parole lookout.

"Countersign sharp.

"Field officer for the day to-morrow, Colonel Gerry.

"Field officer of the mainguard to-morrow, Major Poor.

"Adjutant of the day, Gibbs.

"General orders of his Excellency General Washington, esq., commander-in-chief of the forces of the united colonies in North America. That the colonel or commanding officer of each regiment is ordered forthwith to make two returns of the number of men in their respective regiments, distinguishing those who are sick, wounded, or absent on furlough, and also the quantity of ammunition each regiment has."

On the next day an extensive series of orders was given.

Returns were to be made by the proper officers of all military and other stores, including "working tools of all kinds, tents and camp kettles."

The wise father of his country thus urged upon his troops the laying aside of all sectional spirit:

"The Continental Congress having now taken all the troops of the several colonies which have been raised and which may be hereafter raised for the support and defense of the liberties of America into their pay and service, they are now the troops of the United Provinces of North America, and it is hoped that all distinctions of colonies will be laid aside so that one and the same spirit may animate the whole and the only contest be who shall, on this great and trying occasion, be of the most essential service to the great and common cause in which we are all engaged."

The seventh order of this day's series urges the officers to keep their men in good condition.

"All officers are required and expected to pay diligent attention to keep their men neat and clean, to visit their men often at their quarters * * * they are particularly to see that they have straw to lie on if to be had and to make it known if they are destitute of this article."

And the tenth shows that smallpox, which in those days, before the discovery of vaccination, was a terrible scourge, was not far distant:

"No person whatever is to be allowed to go to Freshwater a fishing or on any other occasion, as there may be danger of introducing the smallpox into the army."

Scarcity of Powder.

The scarcity of powder was one of the most distressing wants of the little army, and we find it ordered in this first Fourth of July of our national struggle "that there be no pieces of cannon or small arms fired from any of the lines or elsewhere, except in the case of necessary defense or special order given for that purpose." Our men could not afford to waste a single round of shot or powder, and this order had to be repeated more than once.

Notwithstanding all Washington's caution, however, it was found a little later that the powder was almost exhausted. The committee of supplies had made a strange mistake. They had made a return of all the powder collected by the province, more than three hundred barrels, but had forgotten to say how much of it had already been used up. There was only enough to furnish nine cartridges to each man.

On the 4th of August Washington wrote to the President of Congress, telling them of this distressing state of things, and on the same day he issued this order:

"It is with indignation and shame that the General observes, notwithstanding the repeated orders which have been given to prevent the firing of guns in and about the camp, that it is daily and hourly practiced contrary to all orders; that straggling soldiers practice to pass the guards and fire at a distance, when there is not the least probability of hurting their enemies, and by which no other end is answered than to waste their ammunition and keep their own companies in pregnant and continual alarms, to the hurt and detriment of every good soldier, which is thereby disturbing his natural rest, and at length will never be able to distinguish between a real and false alarm." After forbidding all persons to pass the out guards without proper authorization, and declaring that any one offending in this way will be considered as a common enemy, to be fired upon as such, the order continues thus: "The colonels of regiments and commanders of corps are ordered to see to it that the rolls of every company be called twice a day and every man's ammunition examined at evening roll call, and such as are found to be deficient are to be confined."

In other words, some of the soldiers of the continental army needed to have their stock of powder examined, just as a boy's pockets need a nightly overhauling by his mother.

To Respect Private Property.

Two days after he attained command, Washington issued the following order:

"The General most earnestly recommends and requires of all the officers that they be exceedingly diligent and strict in preventing all invasions and capture of private property in their quarters or elsewhere. He hopes and indeed flatters himself that every private soldier will abhor and detest such practices when he considers that it is for the preservation of his own rights, liberty and property and those of his fellow countrymen; that he is now called into service; that it is unmanly and sullies the dignity of the great cause in which we are all engaged to violate that property he is called to protect, and especially that it is most cruel and inconsistent to thus add to the distress of those of their countrymen who are suffering under the iron hand of oppression."

Thus, with an eye for detail which reminds us of Napoleon, did Washington day after day inspect, exhort, chide and praise his little army, until the feeble crescent of his forces grew to be a circlet of steel about the British army as it lay in Boston Town, forcing the proud General Howe to a precipitate retreat.

Early in March Washington seized upon and fortified Dorchester Heights (now South Boston), riding among his troops, animating and encouraging them, and reminding them that it was March 5—the anniversary of the Boston massacre.

The forts poured a heavy cannonade against our breastworks, but in vain.

We were masters of the situation, the power of the British received a severe blow, and Washington took possession of Boston amid general rejoicings.

Often in the days of my childhood I played among the remains of the old fortifications on Dorchester Heights; now the hills have all been dug down in the march of progress.

On the birthday of the father of his country it becomes us all to look back to those times of early struggles, poverty, and patriotism, and to remember that ours is the work to keep the path of progress still the path of patriotism.—Florence Marion Howe Hall.

ONE OF GENERAL WASHINGTON'S GENERAL ORDERS.

IN WASHINGTON'S DAY.

A Dinner at Which a Toast Met with No Applause.

A venerable physician describes an incident in which his father had taken part. The first blood of the Revolution had been shed at Lexington; each colony had voted to raise its poor quota of men, and in the Colonial Congress, George Washington, a young member from Virginia, had been appointed to lead them to the field.

On the evening of the same day he was invited, with Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Charles Thompson (surnamed Truth by the Indians, and probably the last white man whom they would have so named), and one or two others to join a dinner party, given in a "House of Call" at Gary's Ferry, a picturesque suburb of the town.

The dinner was discussed with gusto and merriment until the host called upon his guests to rise, and proposed "the health of General George Washington, Commander-in-Chief of the Continental Armies." Instead of applause there was a sudden death-like silence. The Continental Armies were a handful of undisciplined, unarmed men; opposed to them was the most powerful nation on earth.

It was the first time that Washington's position and the desperate venture on which they had entered had been formulated into words. Washington, who had risen smiling, stood silent and pale; one by one the glasses which had been raised were set down untouched. Not one of the startled men, who held at that moment the destinies of the continent in their hands, remembered to drink the toast.—Philadelphia Times.

GERMANY and France are both talking in favor of a monetary conference of nations to see if we cannot agree on an international basis for using silver money. That is the proper plan.

CHICAGO had a new kind of trotting match last week, using very light, skeleton sleighs instead of sulkies. There was not quite enough snow for sleighing till they had a force of men carrying snow enough to cover the track. The plan is likely to be adopted in parts where there is more snow fall.

Ex-Governor Gray Dead

On our 6th page will be found the sad news of the death of this eminent leader and statesman, whose life of honor and public service came to a sudden and untimely end Feb. 14.

Gov. Gray had for many years been clearly the leader of the Indiana democracy, for he possessed those qualities that democrats all admire, courage, ability, integrity of purpose, and above all a loyal friendship for all with whom he came into contact. No leader since Hendricks had so many warm personal friends, for he made friends among the people, and what was more, he kept them. There are those who claim he was not a man of extraordinary ability We feel sure they are mistaken. His political enemies have long since ceased this kind of talk, and the impress he made on his party—a party always well equipped with strong leaders, argues eloquently as to his strength of character. We shall miss him from our councils and the state and the nation will feel his loss.

Why Gold Is Exported.

Indianapolis Sentinel.

In an article in the February Forum Mr. Heidelbach gives some interesting estimates of the causes of exportation of gold from this country to Europe. His opinion as to the cause puts much stress on several lines of expenditure outside of mere commerce, a summary statement of their annual amount being as follows:

1 For money spent by American travelers abroad about	$100,000,000
2 For freight carried in foreign ships, about	100,000,000
3. For dividends and interest upon American securities still held abroad, minimum	75 000 000
4. For profits of foreign corporations doing business here, and of non-residents, derived from real estate investments, partnership profits, etc., about	75 000 000
Total	$3 0,000 000

This is a startling presentation, and yet it is questionable if it is far from the truth Mr. J. C. Cross, a London banker, published an article about one year ago in which he estimated the annual expenditure at $325 000,000 Certainly the money sent abroad in these lines is very large, for the countries to which most of it goes are creditors of this country to a large extent. There is also to be included in the fourth item money sent home by citizens of foreign birth to their friends and relatives abroad, which amounts to a large sum yearly. Mr. Gladstone estimates that the foreign investments of Great Britain alone were not less than a thousand million pounds sterling and more, probably twice that amount. Of course this is spread throughout the world, but the United States owes a large share of it. English capitalists have invested heavily here, as well as loaning money in this country and buying our securities of all kinds

There is, however, another cause of exportation of gold that is very potent and that is largely ignored in this country. It is the export of gold for mere money use which results from a difference in interest on demand loans It is a matter of common note that whenever sterling exchange goes up to a certain point gold is exported. This has been made familiar to most business men by actual experience in the last few years, and the market quotations of sterling exchange are probably more closely watched now than they ever were before. The cause of advance in sterling exchange is usually an advance of discount rates by the great notional banks of Europe, though at times it is due to a scarcity of money that does not affect those banks. It is, however, due to the drawing influence of conditions abroad In this country the general tendency is to explain movements of gold by conditions here alone. This covers but a small part of the ground. Gold is international money and is necessarily controlled by international influences.

FAIR AND HIS WORKMEN.

The Millionaire Miner's Free and Easy Way of Getting Information.

Senator Fair was rarely known to discharge a miner. A parent could not have been kinder to them. Smoking was forbidden in the mines. Fair had a free and easy way of dropping down the shafts at unexpected hours and making himself agreeable. One night he smelled tobacco smoke in a crosscut. Smiling and paternal, the senator seated himself on a chunk of ore and chatted with his boys. "Dear me," he said presently, "it's really a treat to get down here among ye an away from all the business bothers on the surface. D'ye know, I'd jist like to have a smoke? Do any o' you chaps happen to have a pipe wi' you?"

Miner Smith, a new hand, eagerly drew a pipe from a hole in the rock, and his millionaire friend and employer puffed away at the cutty, and when he departed left his blessing behind him.

"Brown," said the senator to the superintendent half an hour later in his office, "discharge that man Smith who's workin in crosscut No. 3 on the 2,400. He's been smokin."

A body of rich ore was struck in a drift, and speculative reasons made it necessary to hide the news from the public for a few days. The senator, in his flannel shirt and oilskin hat, sat down with the resting miners in the drift, and picking a piece of rock from a passing car remarked:

"That's pretty good stuff. Don't you think so, boys?"

There was a murmur of respectful assent from a few.

"What do you think of it, Johnson?"

Miner Johnson, who was acquainted with Fair's ways, examined the rock critically, shook his head and said it looked barren to him. Several others did the same. Miner Murphy, a comparative tenderfoot, saw an opportunity to distinguish himself. "That rock, sir, will go all the way from $150 to $300 a ton."

"Ah," murmured the senator admiringly, "you're a miner, Murphy. You understand your business." Then to the superintendent in the office presently: "Brown, discharge Murphy from that drift. He knows too much."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

TENNYSON'S FLOWERS.

The Poet Makes Many References to Beautiful Blossoms In His Works.

Tennyson speaks of "a skin as clean and white as privet when it flowers," and truly the privet, with its prim leaves and small, white flowers, looks like a very Puritan for neatness and simplicity. References to the flowers of our gardens, of course, abound, and many will occur at once to the Tennyson reader. The rose and the lily play more than a commonplace part in "Maud," where indeed all the flowers are interested spectators of the drama. Passages such as from the "Idylls," might have been written by many others, and bell flowers, though we may be grateful to Tennyson for preserving the old fashioned name "Canterbury bells," are easily paralleled from many poets. Perhaps the beautiful line, "Love, like an Alpine harebell, hung with tears," deserves an especial mention. He has written a poem to the snowdrop, which is styled "February Fair Maid," and it forms a fitting part of his picture of "St. Agnes' Eve," which, as W. E. Henley has pointed out, is so dazzlingly pure in its whiteness and a contrast to Keats' brilliantly colored poem on the same subject.

A walk of roses ran from door to door,

Of the early spring, with its violets, primroses and crocuses, our poet is never tired and has avowed his especial love for April, being an Elizabethan in this, as in many other things, so that it is surprising to find comparatively little mention of the daffodil. It is hardly to be found anywhere, except in "Maud" and the "Sonnet to the Nineteenth Century," "Here in this roaming moon of daffodil and crocus." Perchance Tennyson felt that it had been so fully celebrated elsewhere as to become hackneyed in spite of all its beauty.—Good Words.

Heat of Incandescent Lamps.

It has been shown that cotton wool, cotton cloth and black silk would be set on fire in two to six minutes if saturated with india rubber and packed around an electric glow lamp of 32 candle power, but would not take fire if not saturated with india rubber. Captain Exler has now found that a 16 candle lamp, sunk in paraffin, reaches a maximum temperature of 94 degrees C., and a 25 candle lamp 101 degrees C. (213 degrees F.). A layer of gunpowder, ecrasite or pulverulent pyroxylin was not set on fire, but when spread on wood or other material opaque to heat rays the ecrasite melted, the gunpowder lost its sulphur, and its niter melted, the pryoxylin darkened and the wood charred With two lamps in a cavity of wood the temperature rose to 215 degrees C., still without igniting the explosives, however. The breaking of a lamp did not explode pryoxylin or gunpowder, but fired an explosive gaseous mixture.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Eggs.

When choosing eggs, apply the tongue to the larger end of the egg, and if it feels warm it may be relied on as being fresh. Another mode of ascertaining the freshness of an egg is to hold it to the light, and if the egg looks clear it will be good; if thick, it is stale, and if there is a black spot attached to the shell it is worthless.

Michigan's Buried Wall.

The mysterious buried wall in Evergreen township, Sanilac county, Mich., is still attracting a great deal of attention. It has been traced about five miles so far.

According to the old church canons, the Christmas festival lasted from Christmas eve to Feb. 1, by which date all the decoration must be removed from the churches.

SCOUT SHAVE HEAD.

AN INDIAN DUEL AT THE STANDING ROCK AGENCY.

It Grew Out of a Quarrel Over a Quarter of Beef—Crooked Neck Made a Bluff and Was Called Down—Rifles at Thirty Yards and Fight to a Finish.

"A duel which I witnessed in 1876 at Standing Rock agency, Dakota," said an old scout, "between Scout Shave Head and Chief Crooked Neck of the Hunkpapa Sioux was a performance that would have called for applause from the most critical audience that ever witnessed a Spanish bull fight. Shave Head, it will be remembered, was one of the Indian police who was killed while attempting the arrest of Sitting Bull in the fall of 1890. In 1876 I was interpreter and chief of scouts at Fort Yates, near Standing Rock agency, where I had 30 Sioux Indian scouts under my command, who were selected from the friendly bands and quartered at the military post with their families. The military authorities issued rations only to the scouts, while their families drew from the Indian agent. The beef was slaughtered on the east bank of the river, the Indians crossing in boats.

"I usually accompanied the scouts when they went for their beef. About 150 Texas steers were killed every two weeks. These were parceled out to the several bands, beginning with the larger, who would receive 12 or 15 head as their share, the next 10 or 12, and so on to the smaller bands, who would get two or three, according to their number. Lastly, single families, not members of bands, were given beef by themselves, one steer to four families, or a quarter to each. The scouts, half breeds and squaw men were among this number. The trouble which terminated in the duel between Shave Head and Crooked Neck began over the issue of beef.

"Shave Head, Crooked Neck, Charley Pappan, a half breed, and the Widow McCarty, a squaw who had been married to a white man, were given a quarter each in the last beef issued. Shave Head, Pappan and the widow immediately began skinning the beef, when Crooked Neck approached the scout, and placing his hand on his shoulder pushed him violently aside, saying: 'You belong to the soldiers. You have no right here. Go to the fort for your beef.'

"I stood not more than 50 feet away. Shave Head cast one look of defiance at his assailant and then came to me and said, pointing at Crooked Neck: 'That man has driven me away from my beef. If I was not under your command, I would know what to do, but now I await your orders. If you leave me free to act, he is not man enough to keep me away from my beef.'

"I answered that since the agent had given him a quarter of that beef it was therefore his, and he had a perfect right to take it.

"'Then,' said he, 'tell that man to keep away from me.' I answered that Crooked Neck did not belong to my company, and I had no authority over him.

"'Very well,' said the scout. 'I shall take my beef,' and rejoining the others he again offered to assist in dressing the beef, only to be again thrust away by Crooked Neck. This time he gave utterance to that savage growl which, once heard, can never be forgotten, and climbing out of the slaughter pen on the north side, and taking his rifle from his wife, he turned to the left, coming out on that side of the corral facing the river. Crooked Neck, seizing his rifle, went out of the corral on the south side, and turning to the right the two combatants met face to face on the west side of the corral. Between them was the agency wagon, which was backed up to the fence to receive the beef. The first shot was fired by Chief Crooked Neck over the rear end of the wagon. The driver, supposing that he was the object of attack, frantically whipped up his mules, leaving a clear field between the two enraged warriors, who were not more than ten yards apart. Talk about an Indian war dance! Here was executed a dance that surpassed anything of the kind I ever saw. Shave Head was the more agile of the two, jumping from side to side, rearing high in the air and again bending low down to the ground, all the time keeping his eye fixed on his foe and his gun ready for use. The corral had been surrounded by not less than 1,000 Indians, men, women and children, but when the firing began they had surged to one side, leaving the space in the rear of each combatant clear.

"The second shot was again fired by Crooked Neck, but he again missed his mark, and during the instant required by him to throw another cartridge into his piece Shave Head, who was still as a statue, took aim and fired. The ball struck Crooked Neck in the hip, which crippled him so that he had but one leg to dance on. As soon as Shave Head fired he resumed his dancing, keeping it up until his antagonist fired again, when he repeated his former tactics, pausing in his dance while he took aim and fired. This time he brought Crooked Neck down with a bullet through his breast. He fell forward on his face, his gun under him. His friends pressed forward, holding up their hands and calling upon the scout to desist. He had killed his man.

"But Shave Head was determined to make it a sure thing. First pointing his gun toward the crowd to warn them back, he advanced to the prostrate Indian, and holding the muzzle of his gun within two feet of his victim fired three shots into his head. He then resumed his dancing, and facing the crowd he moved backward to the river, and leaping into a boat was rowed to the west side, where I found him later away out on the prairie performing the Indian rite for purification after shedding blood."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A family at Michigan City the other day had some friends with them for dinner and after the repast had been partaken of and the company left the table, a terrible report was heard in the dining room. An investigation revealed a badly demolished state of things The dishes had been swept from the table and scattered about the room. A large mirror in the sideboard was broken, and there was a hole in one of the windows that you could throw a cat through. Besides everything, whether digestible or not, was literally covered with tomato catsup. A large bottle of catsup that was on the table exploded. The bottle was blown to atoms and the force of the explosion had created havoc with the dishes and other articles.

The saw filer at the Davis corner has been doing a lot of work. Saturday we saw eighteen crescent saws waiting for filing, at one time, besides a number of smaller ones of various sorts. This is his second trip here, and we conclude he must do good work or he could not get so much on his second trip.

W. S. Dove who has been absent from this county about twenty years, has been spending the winter with his father Dennis Dove in Wilmington township. His father's health has not been very good lately. Mr. Dove has resided in Chicago several years, he being a carpenter and contractor.

The Huntington Democrat, in a recent issue, makes the following observations: "In the court room a lawyer may call a man a liar, scoundrel, villian or thief and no one makes a complaint when court adjourns If a newspaper prints such reflections on any man's character there is a libel suit or dead editor. Can it be that every one believes the newspaper man and no one believes the lawyer?"

DAILY PAPER FOR AUBURN.

Beginning March 4th, this office will publish a daily paper to be called the "DAILY COURIER." The matter has been under consideration for two or three years but the great risk to run, the vast amount of continuous and severe labor and close care required, have made us hesitate. But Auburn is a live town. Its people are readers, its business men are advertisers, and there has grown up a feeling among us that we ought to have a daily, and that it will be fairly well supported. Mr. Lochner, foreman of this office, has canvassed a part of the business houses, and finds them willing, and even anxious to help. And their help is very necessary and very welcome. Much advertising space has already been taken and more can, no doubt be had. The rates have been put to the lowest possible limit in order that no one may be left who can possibly patronize us in any way or at any time. The subscription price will be 10 cents a week, and will be collected weekly by the carriers. This part of the business is wholly in the hands of Harry Trentman, who has shown himself a thorough newspaper dealer. He will canvass the city at once. We hope all who can, will help to swell the list and thereby help us. The venture carries some risk with it, but we shall do all in our power to give a fair paper, and believe Auburn's citizens will come up to our help and the help of the town, as they always have done. It might be added, that we shall give on page of the latest daily news leaving Chicago four hours later than their dailies. The "DAILY COURIER" will be an evening paper.

Goes to Albany, Indiana.

We learned last week that W. D. Rickel, of the firm of Rickel & Sprott, real estate dealers here for a number of years, will go to Albany, a new town in the gas belt in Delaware county, this state. He will be in substantially the same business there, only on a larger scale, for the new town is to be boomed and put on a business basis, They will find Mr. Rickel a valuable man to do this and they will never regret their success in securing his services and his experience. We feel like commending him especially to the newspapers there or in that section, for the firm of Rickel & Sprott is solid with the fraternity up this way. They are not only liberal and judicious advertisers, but they are "spot cash" and no grumbling. We hope to hear of the best possible success for him The real estate office in Auburn will be continued as heretofore, and in the same rooms, Mr. Sprott remaining in charge here.

Jackson Tp. S. S. Institute.

The 36th Sunday School Institute of Jackson township will be held at Grove Bethel, Saturday March 2, beginning at 10 a. m. A RESOLUTION was passed in our state senate last week, in favor of electing U. S. senators by the people. All democrats and five republicans with Lieut governor Nye supported it.

Dr. Henry Johnson preached at Cincinnati Sunday, in one of the leading Presbyterian churches in that city Tuesday he came back to this place and joined his wife, when they returned to their home at South Bend.

Supt. Merica has nearly completed visiting the schools of the county. The country schools have all been reached, and only one or two towns are to be visited. It makes a big winter's work to go over the county.

Mrs. Mary Boyer was sick all last week, being confined to her room. Her mother, Mrs. Wm Walsworth, came and staid with her till she was able to get about again. Her daughter, Nellie, has been down with measles.

Some of our finest home talent will assist at the Hendershot entertainment Saturday evening, including the Mandolin Orchestra. There will be recitations, and other music to occupy a part of the time. No one can afford to stay away from so fine a treat.

The Zion's Classis of the Reformed Church in the United States convened in a special session last Thursday, in the Reformed Church at Auburn. Twelve pastors and nine elders were present, and were accommodated by the members of the church, After a prolonged debate the business of the program was brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

Irvin Hoffman who has traveled over the most picturesque portions of our country, taking views of scenery for illustrations, will likely do work of this kind here for a time this spring. We have many lovely homes and beautiful streets, fine trees and other things that would show well in pictures. It would be a good idea if our people would take advantage of this chance.

German merchants—some of them at least—are aggrieved because of the introduction into Germany of "bargain sales," and they have appealed to the government to suppress them. Their demand is that the state shall define what constitutes "unfair competition" and prohibit it. Probably the merchants who united in this request would, most of them, strenuously deny socialistic proclivities, but their request is in the line of pure socialism. It would be only another step in the same direction to ask that the government prohibit one from underselling another. We do not read that as yet any customers of the German shopmen have joined in the demand for the abolition of bargain day.

It has come! It was generally conceded that it would come, but no one knew exactly how soon. Bloomers are to be regulated hereafter by the fashion plates. Up to the present time every woman who wears bloomers has been a law unto herself. Her bifurcated garment was made according to her own ideas as to beauty and modesty. It was short or long, tight or loose, according to her fancy. It was worn with or without leggings and with jacket or waist, as she might choose. But all that is changed now. There are to be fashions in bloomers as there are in other articles of women's attire. The bloomers of the spring will be out of date in the fall, and new ones will have to be secured. The progressive habit-maker will have bloomers in his or her catalogue, and there will be the same striving to keep in style. It will be hard on the pocketbook, but of course that has nothing to do with the case where fashion is concerned. Let us hope, however, that it will at least be another year before Easter bloomers take their places with Easter bonnets.

It is the duty of all persons who receive an income of more than $3,500 a year to make specific report thereon to the Collector of Internal Revenue. If the income exceeds $4,000 the 2 per cent. tax is to be collected thereon. There are exemptions, however, all of which appear in the blanks that are prepared by the department. Some interesting data may be gathered from these returns. If a public officer has received extraordinary profits he must account for the same as part of his income. Unfortunately such returns cannot be made public. It is a remark of Blackstone, in substance, that the ingenuity of man in devising legislation has never been equal to the ingenuity of men who had direct personal interest in circumventing it. All the good people who wish the mass of the people to take their guidance in all public affairs will exert their ingenuity for the purpose of representing their incomes to be less than it in reality is. This class might take the course gleefully pursued by a well-known lawyer, now deceased, who, when income tax was formerly collected, returned his professional income as $60,000, but as he did not appear to pay the tax thereon a deputy collector waited upon him for the amount, informing him that he was delinquent. "You are mistaken, my friend," said the attorney. "I was required to make correct return of my income. I have done so. You are obliged to collect it. Do so if you can." Intimation has been made that there would be some tall swearing with reference to incomes, but the appearances also are that there will be some very thorough investigation upon the part of the United States with reference to returns.

Every year sends us new histrionic stars from over the seas. They come here after our large, round American dollars and get them. And in return for them sometimes we get their value, sometimes we do not. But in any event the foreign actor always is an interesting object of study because his methods of keeping himself advertised are as novel as they are effective. Recent press dispatches contained a column of free advertising, all about a single New York hotel which contains a galaxy of foreign stars at present. First, Mr. and Mrs. Kendal "extended a hearty welcome to Beerbohm Tree in behalf of America." How charming, don't you know! If Mr. Tree understands advertising he undoubtedly will reciprocate by "extending a hearty welcome" to those who came after him in the next steamer. Then "Mrs. Langtry was snubbed by Mrs. Kendal in a hotel elevator," presumably because Mrs. Kendal is the wife of her own husband. Next "Sibyl Sanderson espoused the cause of Mrs. Langtry." This is a very important indorsement. Miss Sanderson will be recalled as the young woman who, when interviewed at quarantine said that she had "come to America to sing in three operas and to marry Antonio Terry, a wealthy Cuban, just as soon as he can get a divorce—for unfortunately Mr. Terry has a wife living, a woman whom I have never met, but who I understand is a very charming person, indeed." Afterward Mr. Terry "took Mrs. Langtry to dinner, leaving Miss Sanderson to hug her Japanese poodle and to nurse her wrath." This is even more important. Further bulletins are anxiously awaited. And in the meantime America expects every advertising agent to do his duty—and the public.

With the arrest of Queen Liliuokalani the Hawaiian episode may be considered closed, and no matter what may be the fate of that lady the young republic in the Pacific is now probably safe from domestic revolt. Hawaii is a sort of an American stepchild which we do not want anybody else to abuse. There is a feeling that is half responsibility and half dissatisfaction in all of our dealings with the new state in the south seas. The people who have erected the new republic are all Americans. The deposed queen comes of a long line of more or less cannibalistic ancestors and is herself wholly impossible.

The sinking of the Elbe teaches the lesson of the impossibility of guarding against all the manifold forms and causes of disaster at sea. The great vessel had water-tight compartments that would have kept her afloat had she been struck a few feet forward or a few feet aft of the point of collision. But by a chance that may not be repeated for a hundred years the Crathie struck her right at the point of the intersection of one of her bulkheads. The separation that was to have kept one compartment water-tight in the event of a leak in the other was smashed to pieces, and the ill-fated ship filled as quickly as any vessel of ordinary construction would have filled. The only self-evident feature of culpability is that of the neglect of obedience to the maritime "law of the road;" had each ship kept to the course prescribed by the law of sea travel the collision would not have occurred. When it did occur it became fatal by reason of the impact of the colliding vessel against the one fatally vulnerable spot of the Elbe.

"IGNORANT VERMIN."

That Is How Artist Gerome Characterizes His Critics.

In a sketch of his life recently written by himself, the artist Gerome severely attacks the critics, among them some well known writers, styling them "ignorant vermin." He was born in 1824 at Vesoul, Spain, and graduated at the age of sixteen with the degree of "Bachelier es Lettres." His first studies in art were under the instruction of M. Paul Delaroche, a friend of his father, whom he accompanied to Rome a few years later. He has traveled extensively, especially through the Orient. This famous artist is his own critic, and a very severe one. He considers "The Gladiators before Caesar" and "Pollier Verso," his best works. His latest picture of importance is "Prayer in a Mosque at Cairo," and is owned in this country. Lately Gerome has announced his intention of abandoning the brush and devoting himself entirely to sculpture, in which line of art his fame is almost equal to that he has gained as a painter.

General Hancock's Firmness.

General Hancock was in command of the train which brought General Grant's remains from Mt. McGregor to New York. He and his staff were in the coach next to the last. In the rear car was a party of Pennsylvania militia officers, who were popping an occasional bottle of champagne and smoking quite sociably. General Hancock saw through from his car what was going on in the rear. It did not comport with his ideas of the proprieties of so solemn an occasion, and, calling the conductor, he said:

"Will you present my compliments to those gentlemen, with the request that they cease smoking and drinking?"

In a few moments the conductor returned with the announcement that the convivial officers returned their compliments with a peremptory declination to relinquish their cigars or wine.

"Where is the next switch?" asked Hancock.

"About five miles below," replied the conductor.

"When you reach it, if the smoking and drinking in that car has not ceased, switch in on a sidetrack and leave it. You may tell the gentlemen what I have said."

In two minutes cigars and wine were not to be seen in the rear coach. Its occupants knew that Hancock meant just what he said.

Photographing on Textiles.

As a substitute for printing or the use of engraved rollers for producing figures or patterns on cloth, photography is coming into use, and promises much more satisfactory and artistic results than any process hitherto employed. The fabric is immersed in a vat of boiling liquid containing primuline and salt, after which it is treated to a bath of one-fourth per cent. of nitrate of soda made strong with sulphuric or hydochloric acid. It is then thoroughly washed, and while still damp is exposed under negatives containing the desired designs. Half a minute's exposure to the clear, bright sunshine, or, in cloudy weather, a longer exposure under the arc-light gives the pattern. There is then a process of development and fixing that brings out tints and tones that are unapproachable by any other method. A wide range of shades and colors is possible by this means. Red is produced by an alkaline solution of naphthol; yellow by an alkaline solution of phenol; browns of various shades by naphthol-sulphonic acid; and orange by resorcin. When one considers the resources of the photographer and the exquisite half-tones that are the charm of fine work, the application of this art to cloth printing is suggestive of gratifying results.

ELI'S IDIOTIC DRIVEL.

PROTECTIONISTS HARD PUT FOR ARGUMENT.

Bucolic Judge in Florida Laments that People Now Wear Cheap and Warm Woolen Garments Instead of Being Compelled to Shiver in Cotton.

Cursing Cheap Wool.

The American Economist, organ of the Protective Tariff League, has an editorial on the sugar bounty question in a recent issue. It is headed, "In the Interest of Honesty." The same number contains a letter from Eli Perkins purporting to give a recent interview with Judge Hunt, of Palatka, Fla., on the cotton and sugar question. It can hardly be said that Eli has become famous for truth-telling. Those who know him by reputation will doubt first, the existence of any such person as Judge Hunt; second, the fact as to any interview, and third, the accuracy of the report if any interview occurred. In fact, Eli's reputation as a fabricator of interviews would suffer materially if it should ever be known than any part of any one of his alleged interviews had not been manufactured "out of whole cloth." It would indicate that he lacked imagination and was incapable of fabricating the entire interview.

With this preface and after noting the fact that Eli has always posed as the champion of McKinleyism—probably because it offers greater opportunities for his genius—let us see what this particular interview contains which makes it so valuable to the protectionists. In the alleged interview the alleged Judge Hunt is disgusted with himself and with Southernors generally because they voted for free wool. In his agony he says: "Cheap cotton was substituted for wool, but now cheap wool is a substitute all over the North for cotton. Cheap Thibet, Asiatic and Australian wool used to cost from 10 to 25 cents. We Southerners thought it was smart to stab the wool farmers and take the 10-cent tariff off of wool. We did it, and now that same wool is being sold to Northern knit shirt and cloth factories for from 6 to 15 cents. With 6-cent wool the mills are throwing back our cotton. Who would not give 2 cents a pound more for woolen shirts or cloth than for the same things made of cotton?"

The Judge does not question the good sense of those who prefer to "give 2 cents a pound more for woolen shirts or cloth than for the same things made of cotton." He is only kicking himself for having given the people an opportunity to wear cheap warm woolens instead of "cheap and nasty" cotton or shoddy goods. He says cheap wool "will reduce the demand for cotton a million bales," and that it is "hurting the South more than the North." Perhaps Eli's Judge may not know that there are millions of people in the North who don't object to being "hurt" by cheap woolen shirts. If the Judge had read his Democratic newspapers more carefully in 1890 and 1892 he would have learned that his party favored free wool for the very reason that it would enable the farmers and laborers of the whole country to wear cheaper, warmer and healthier clothing.

Then the Judge laments the fact that "we Southern men voted solidly against the bounty on sugar." He says that "in five years this (bounty encouraged) sugar would have taken 2,000,000 bales of cotton out of our way and put $50,000,000 worth of sugar in its place."

"What made you do it?" asked Eli.

"Oh, politics. Dog gone silly, idiotic politics."

"And what do you propose to do?"

"Why, let us put that wool tariff back and let our cheap cotton take the place of Asiatic wool, and then put that sugar bounty on again and send sugar into the cotton fields. Editorials in the papers and prayers in the churches won't save us now. We must quit politics and use our brains."

The Judge discredits the good sense and morals of the Southerners. They voted against the bounty because they did not think it right to levy a $12,000,000 tax upon 70,000,000 people for the benefit of 500 or 600 sugar barons in the South. For the same reason they voted against the "protection" which robs the many to enrich the few.

Eli's fake interviews are invariably "dead give-aways" to McKinleyism. The wonder is that any protectionist organ will purchase them from Eli, who writes for cash only.

President Faure on Taxation.

The New York Press of Feb. 3d published an article by Francois Felix Faure, the new President of France. As Faure neither believes in "protection" nor indirect taxation of any kind the Press, which is a McKinley organ, cautions its readers against his theories which, however interesting, "are distinctly opposed to those which would fit American conditions." It adds, however, that by many "he is considered to be one of the greatest living authorities on governmental finance."

President Faure is explaining the cause of the rapidly increasing expenditures of all civilized countries. He thinks it largely due to the fact that in all taxation is mainly indirect, and that indirect taxation always benefits special interests. These special interests are always lobbying to have indirect taxes increased, or at least not diminished. They favor increased governmental expenditures, hoping—as is usually the case—that they will lead to more indirect taxes.

Parenthetically it may be remarked that this is one of the explanation of the "billion-dollar Congress" of 1890. The protected barons of this country hoped by greatly increased expenditures for pensions, bounties, canals, etc., to rivet McKinleyism upon this country. It also explains the anger of this same privileged class at the reduction of expenditures, by the Democrats, and the substitution of income for tariff taxation, to meet part of the expenditures contracted by the Republican Congress. Income taxation being direct, does not inure to the benefit of special interests. In fact, it rests most heavily upon those enjoying special or monopoly privileges.

Speaking of the increasing burden caused by increased expenditures, President Faure says in part:

"Any effort to establish the exact distribution of the burden is necessarily hampered by the indirect nature of present taxation. It is also surprising that special interests are permitted, as they are, to take advantage of the taxing power to further individual ends. The power to tax is ordinarily connected in the general mind with the power to raise money. But taxation will accomplish a great deal more than the raising of money. It is a wealth distributing influence. In truth, it may be doubted whether the power to tax is not the whole of the power to govern.

"Viewing now the intimacy of the connection between the power to tax and certain special interests, and following a logical method of seeking for the cause in the effect, we may conclude that for some reason or other benefit accrues to somebody through this general increase in the expenditures of the world's governments. But who are these beneficiaries?

"The most practical method of establishing that would be to effect a reduction in the budget regardless of the representations of special interests. It usually happens that those interests which are most active in the lobby have greatest influence in the preparation of the budget. How comes it that the existence of this lobby is possible? That is, how can the special interests which maintain them afford the expense?

"Obviously, because their profits under the existing exercise of the taxing power are very ample. It is therefore certain that an interest which maintains its pre-eminence through the taxing power of the government creating it must reap very great advantages. Did it not, it could never maintain the vast and intricate system rendered essential for the preservation of its supremacy.

"A consideration of these facts may make it more evident why the governmental expense accounts do not decrease. Once a new source of expenditure has been discovered, it becomes almost impossible to close it. There is sure to be some interest battling for its retention, and there is, moreover, a certainty that other schemes are in contemplation, all clamorous for a representation on the fiscal list. There is something almost pathetic in the expectation of one administration after another that the expense account must decrease with the year to come. The year comes, but an increase comes with it.

"The populations of the world are having a heavier weight to sustain as the years elapse. What then will they do when the truth dawns upon them?

"It is perhaps unfortunate that this whole subject of governmental costliness is so little observed. Nay, the fact that a vast official system expends so many millions a year affords positive pride to many of its citizens. Few reflect that while the burdens of such expenditures must be sustained by all directly, in a greater or less degree, the resulting benefits of a direct nature have to be in the very nature of the case reserved for the few."

Why a Republican?

From 1861 until 1884 no President of the United States appointed a Democrat in all this broad land to a judicial position, indeed to any other position, save as the law authorizing the appointment called for minority representation. During that long period of twenty-five years of Republican ascendency the placeholders of the Republican party and its leaders sneered at Democracy as an organized appetite whose only purpose was to satiate itself with the fleshpots of the republic. Gorged themselves, they grew ribald and offensive in the mere thought that Democrats should assume to believe that they might be recognized as having the slightest right to share even treasury crumbs with the Republican party.

No sooner, however, are Democrats in the ascendency than the Republican leaders, not content with that great measure of civil-service reform which has been brought about by a Democratic President, insist that he shall ignore his own party and recognize them by promoting and advancing in judicial position men who are not only Republicans but are absolutely inimical to the Democratic idea.

This is sheer impudence on the part of Republicans.

Panics Under Protection.

The contention of some of the more organic Republican journals that the prosperity of the country can be secured and the treasury replenished by the simple expedient of restoring McKinley duties lacks a basis of fact and experience. There were too many panics and long periods of hard times under the high tariffs to sustain the paradox of taxing a nation into prosperity. Besides, the national revenues fell off $40,000,000 under the McKinley tariff, as they would fall now under increased duties. It is not forgotten, furthermore, that the treasury went rapidly from a handsome surplus to an impending deficit under the law which the people twice condemned.—New York World.

Protectionist Saving at the Spigot.

Protectionists would encourage the thrift of Russell Sage and discourage the foolishness of building a home. They would protect the wisdom of storing up dollars and rebuke the waste of buying the products of labor to make a family comfortable. The Times has never favored an income tax. But it fails to see how the organs of a prohibitory tariff tax can consistently oppose it. Tariffs tax necessaries. An income tax will tax the surplus accumulations, and not severely at that. A tariff thinks nothing of 50 per cent. The income tax is satisfied with 2 per cent. Protectionists would do well to choose their words in denouncing the income tax.—Minneapolis Times.

Senator Morgan's bill to make the consular service a school of diplomacy will not prove a very popular measure. The art of being a consul is, like croquet, within the reach of the feeblest intellect. It consists chiefly in being able to sign one's name to manifests and declining to be responsible in any way for wandering Americans. Reports on the commerce of the country can always be prepared by newspaper men who have the facts at hand, and who will do up the matter cheaply, and as for the rest of it a consul has to work hard enough to get his job to justify him in declining to work afterward. Civil-service reform and the consulates will be found incompatible, if the idea is ever hatched into a bill.

TRIBUTE TO LINCOLN.

HENRY WATTERSON'S ORATION AT CHICAGO.

Magnificent Audience Hears the Eloquent Kentuckian's Brilliant Effort—His Words Were Worthy—Life and Character of the Great Emancipator.

In Honor of the Martyred President.

The most notable feature of the Lincoln memorial exercises at Chicago was the speech of Colonel Henry Watterson, of Louisville, Ky. Mr. Watterson began his oration by a reference to the poise and dignity of the statesmen in knee breeches and powdered wigs who signed the Declaration of Independence and framed the Constitution, and who made their influence felt upon life and thought long after the echoes of Bunker Hill and Yorktown had died away. It was not until the institution of African slavery got into politics as a vital force that Congress became a bear garden. The men who signed the declaration and their immediate successors were succeeded by a set of party leaders much less decorous and much more self-confident. Continuing, the lecturer said in part:

There were Seward and Sumner and Chase, Corwin and Ben Wade, Trumbull and Fessenden, Hale and Collamer and Grimes, and Greeley, our latter-day Franklin. There were Toombs and Hammond, and Slidell and Wigfall, and the two little giants, Douglas and Stephens, and Yancey and Mason, and Jefferson Davis. With them soft words buttered no parsnips and they cared little how many pitchers might be broken by rude ones. The issue between them did not require a diagram to explain it. It was so simple a child could understand it. It read, human slavery against human freedom, slave labor against free labor, and involved a conflict as inevitable as it was irrepressible.

Lincoln Enters the Fray.

Amid the noise and confusion, the clashing of intellects like sabers bright, and the booming of the big oratorical guns of the North and the South, now definitely arrayed, there came one day into the Northern camp one of the oddest figures imaginable, the figure of a man who, in spite of an appearance somewhat out of line, carried a serious aspect, if not the suggestion of power, and, pausing a moment to utter a single sentence that could be heard above the din, passed on and for a moment disappeared. The sentence was pregnant with meaning. The man bore a commission from God on high! He said: "A house divided against itself cannot stand. I believe this Government cannot endure permanently half free and half slave. I do not expect the Union to be dissolved; I do not expect the house to fall, but I do expect it will cease to be divided." He was Abraham Lincoln.

How shall I describe him to you? Shall I do so as he appeared to me when I first saw him immediately on his arrival at the national capital, the chosen President of the United States, his appearance quite as strange as the story of his life, which was then but half known and half told, or shall I use the language of another and more vivid word-painter?

In January, 1861, Colonel A. K. McClure, of Pennsylvania, journeyed to Springfield, Ill., personally, to become acquainted and to consult with the man he had contributed so materially to elect. "I went directly from the depot to Lincoln's house," says Colonel McClure, "and rang the bell, which was answered by Lincoln himself, opening the door. I doubt whether I wholly concealed my disappointment at meeting him. Tall, gaunt, ungainly, ill-clad, with a homeliness of manner that was unique in itself, I confess that my heart sank within me as I remembered that this was the man chosen by a great nation to become its ruler in the gravest period of its history. I remember his dress as if it were but yesterday—snuff-colored and slouchy pantaloons; open black vest, held by a few brass buttons; straight or evening dress coat, with tightly fitting sleeves to exaggerate his long, bony arms, all supplemented by an awkwardness that was uncommon among men of intelligence. Such was the picture I met in the person of Abraham Lincoln. We sat down in his plainly furnished parlor and were uninterrupted during the nearly four hours I remained with him, and little by little as his earnestness, sincerity and candor were developed in conversation, I forgot all the grotesque qualities which so confounded me when I first greeted him. Before half an hour had passed I learned not only to respect, but, indeed, to reverence the man."

Lincoln's First Inaugural.

I am not undertaking to deliver an oral biography of Abraham Lincoln, and shall pass over the events which quickly led up to his nomination and election to the Presidency in 1860.

I met the newly elected President the afternoon of the day in the early morning of which he had arrived in Washington. It was a Saturday, I think. He came to the capitol under Mr. Seward's escort, and among the rest I was presented to him. His appearance did not impress me as fantastically as it had impressed Colonel McClure. I was more familiar with the Western type than Colonel McClure, and whilst Mr. Lincoln was certainly not an Adonis, even after prairie ideas, there was about him a rugged dignity that commanded respect.

I met him again the next Monday forenoon in his apartments at Willard's Hotel as he was preparing to start to his inauguration, and was struck by his unaffected kindness; for I came with a matter requiring his attention. He was entirely self-possessed, no trace of nervousness, and very obliging. I accompanied the cortege that went from the Senate chamber to the east portico of the capitol. As Mr. Lincoln removed his hat to face the vast multitude in front and below, I extended my hand to take it, but Judge Douglas, just behind me, reached over my outstretched arm and received it, holding it throughout the delivery of the inaugural address. I stood just near enough to the speaker's elbow not to obstruct any gestures he might make, though he made but few, and then I began to understand something of the real power of the man.

He delivered that inaugural address as if he had been delivering inaugural addresses all his life. Firm, resonant, earnest, it announced the coming of a man; of a leader of men, and in its ringing tones and elevated style the gentlemen whom he had invited to become members of his political family—each of whom at bottom thought himself his master's equal or superior—might have heard the voice and seen the hand of one born to rule. Whether they did or not they very soon ascertained the fact. From the hour Abraham Lincoln crossed the threshold of the White House to the hour he went thence to his tragic death there was not a moment when he did not dominate the political and military situation and his official subordinates. The idea that he was overmatched at any time by anybody is contradicted by all that actually happened.

Lincoln and the South.

I want to say just here a few words about Mr. Lincoln's relation to the South and toward the people of the South.

He was himself a Southern man. He and all his tribe were Southerners. Although he left Kentucky when the merest child, he was an old child; he never was very young; he grew to manhood in a Kentucky colony; for what is Illinois, what is Chicago, but a Kentucky colony, grown somewhat out of proportion? He was in no sense what we used to call "a poor white." Awkward, perhaps; niggerless, certainly, but aspiring; the spirit of a hero beneath that rugged exterior; the imagination of a poet beneath those heavy brows; the courage of a lion beneath those patient, kindly aspects; and, long before he was of legal age, a leader. His first love was a Rutledge; his wife was a Todd.

Let the romancist tell the story of his romance. I dare not. No sadder idyl can be found in all the annals of the poor.

We know that he was a poet; for have we not that immortal prose-poem recited at Gettysburg? We know that he was a statesman; for has not time vindicated his conclusions? But the South does not know, except as a kind of hearsay, that he was a friend; the one friend who had the power and the will to save it from itself. The direst blow that could have been inflicted upon the South was delivered by the assassin's bullet that struck him down.

Throughout the wild contention that preceded the war, amid the lurid passions that attended the war itself, not one bitter or narrow word escaped the lips of Abraham Lincoln, whilst there was hardly a day that he was not projecting his big, sturdy personality between some Southern man or woman and danger.

The Laws of Inspiration.

From Caesar to Bismarck and Gladstone the world has had its statesmen and its soldiers—men who rose to eminence and power step by step, through a series of geometric progression, as it were, each advancement following in regular order one after the other, the whole obedient to well-established and well-understood laws of cause and effect. They were not what we call "men of destiny." They were "men of the time." They were men whose careers had a beginning, a middle, and an end, rounding of lives with histories, full it may be of interesting and exciting events, but comprehensive and comprehensible; simple, clear, complete.

The inspired men are fewer. Whence their emanation, where and how they got their power, and by what rule they lived, moved and had their being, we know not. There is no explication to their lives. They rose from shadow and they went in mist. We see them, feel them, but we know them not. They came, God's word upon their lips; they did their office, God's mantle about them; and they passed away, God's holy light between the world and them, leaving behind a memory, half mortal and half myth. From first to last they were the creations of some special Providence, baffling the wit of man to fathom, defeating the machinations of the world, the flesh, and the devil, and, their work done, passing from the scene as mysteriously as they had come upon it.

Tried by this standard where shall we find an illustration more impressive than Abraham Lincoln, whose career might be chanted by a Greek chorus as at once the prelude and the epilogue of the most imperial theme of modern times.

Born as lowly as the Son of God, in a hovel; of what ancestry we know not and care not; reared in penury, squalor, with no gleam of light or fair surroundings; without external graces, actual or acquired; without name or fame or official training; it was reserved for this strange being, late in life, to be snatched from obscurity, raised to supreme command at a supreme moment, and intrusted with the destiny of a nation.

The great leaders of his party, the most experienced and accomplished public men of the day, were made to stand aside; were sent to the rear, whilst this fantastic figure was led by unseen hands to the front and given the reins of power. It is immaterial whether we were for him or against him—wholly immaterial. That, during four years, carrying with them such a pressure of responsibility as the world never witnessed before, he filled the vast space allotted him in the eyes and actions of mankind, is to say that he was inspired of God, for nowhere else could he have acquired the wisdom and the grace indispensable to his mission.

Where did Shakespeare get his genius? Where did Mozart get his music? Whose hand smote the lyre of the Scottish plowman, and stayed the life of the German priest? God, God, and God alone; and as surely as these were raised up by God, inspired by God, was Abraham Lincoln; and a thousand years hence no story, no tragedy, no epic poem will be filled with greater wonder, or be followed by mankind with deeper feeling, than that which tells of his life and death.

ISAAC P. GRAY IS DEAD

PNEUMONIA KILLS OUR MINISTER TO MEXICO.

Contracted on a Trip to Washington—Goes to His Post Ill—Pullman Conductor Finds Him Unconscious—End Comes in a Few Hours.

Citizen, Soldier, and Party Leader.

United States Minister Isaac P. Gray died at the City of Mexco at 7:05 Thursday evening. Minister Gray had just returned from a trip to Washington with a severe case of pneumonia. A Pullman car conductor found him unconscious. He was carried from the train on a stretcher to the American Hospital. Dr. Bray informed Mrs. Gray that he could not live the day out. He remained unconscious until the time of his death. Consul-General Crittenden remained with him during the day. Col. Gray had been ill all the way from St. Louis to the City of Mexico.

First News at Washington.

The first intimation at Washington of the condition of Minister Gray came in the following dispatch to the State Department from Mr. Butler, charge d' affaires in the American Legation at the City of Mexico:

"Minister Gray arrived here very ill with double pneumonia, and is still unconscious."

The news of the death of Minister Gray was received with sincere expressions of regret. He was in Washington recently, having gone there at the commencement of the recent trouble between Mexico and Guatemala and consulted with the President and Secretary of State as to the best means of preventing war between the two countries.

ISAAC P. GRAY.

Was in Chicago Monday.

Pierre Gray, son of the dead minister to Mexico, said to a reporter at Indianapolis:

"Father started to the City of Mexico from Chicago Monday morning. He had been in Washington a short time a week or so before he left here to return to his post of duty, and had caught cold, his trip being in the coldest kind of weather. But he took some medicine and when he left he was in a fair state of health. He wired us from Chicago, and the next day we received a letter from him, but he did not say that he was at all ill. He went over the Wabash road direct to Laredo, Mex., without change of sleeper, going through St. Louis. We heard nothing more of him until a message said a porter had found him unconscious at 2 o'clock in the morning in his berth. I knew nothing more of the circumstances."

It is believed the wish to reach his family and avoid stopping off en route among strangers led him to attempt too much in endeavoring to make the journey through in his enfeebled condition. Mrs. Gray was reported to have been too ill to accompany her husband at the time he was summoned by the dangerous illness of his son Pierre. It is understood now she has recovered sufficiently to accompany the body home. The body will be taken to his former home, Union City, Ind., for burial.

Twice Governor of Indiana.

Isaac Pusey Gray was born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, Oct. 18, 1828. His parents removed to Ohio in 1836. Young Gray received a common school education and early entered on the study of the law. His poverty, however, compelled him to accept a clerkship in a general store at New Madison. In 1855 he moved with his family to Union City, Ind.

In 1862 he was appointed colonel of the Fourth Indiana Cavalry by Gov. Morton and organized the One Hundred and Forty-seventh Infantry in 1864. In 1866 he was the candidate for Congress in opposition to George W. Julian, being defeated by 300 votes. Two years later he was elected to the State Senate, where he made himself famous as president of that body by locking the Democratic members in and counting them to obtain the passage of a ratification of the fifteenth amendment. He was offered the consulship to St. Thomas in 1870, but declined it.

His connection with the Democratic party dates from 1871, when he failed to get the nomination for Governor from the hands of the Republican party. He was a delegate-at-large to the Liberal Republican convention of 1872 and was appointed by the convention member of the National Committee for Indiana. His name was before the Democratic State convention in 1872 for Congressman-at-large and in 1874 for Attorney General, but was withdrawn both times at his request. The State convention of 1876 nominated him by acclamation for Lieutenant Governor, to which office he was elected with "Bluejeans" Williams, whom he succeeded as Governor on the latter's death. In 1883 he received the complimentary nomination of the Democratic minority for the United States Senatorship. In 1884 he was elected Governor against William H. Calkins, receiving the nomination by a two-thirds vote of the convention.

After his last term as Governor expired he followed the practice of his profession in Indianapolis in partnership with his son, Pierre Gray, until he was called to the Mexican mission by President Cleveland two years ago. In 1850 he married Miss Eliza Jaque, of Darke County, Ohio. They have two children living—Pierre, who is a lawyer in Indianapolis, and Bayard, who has been acting as his father's private secretary in Mexico.

What He Did.

A man read in the paper that the family should always be the scene of laughter and merriment, and that no meal should be passed in the moody silence that so often characterizes such occasions. The idea struck him so favorably that when his family had gathered round the table that evening he said: "Now, this sort of thing of keeping so mum at meals has got to stop. You hear me, you girls? You begin to tell stories, and keep up an agreeable sort of talk like; and you, boys, laugh and be jolly, or I'll take and dust your jackets till you can't stand. Now, begin!" The glare that he sent round the table made the family resemble a funeral party.

Rev. Dr. Parker

Is the beloved pastor of the Universalist Church at Fargo, N. D., and has also been a pastor in Providence, R. I., New York City and Troy, N. Y. He says:

"I regard Hood's Sarsaparilla the best blood purifier, and I have good reason for this opinion. I am now 80 years of age. Four years ago I was afflicted with rheumatism in my back and limbs so badly that it was impossible for me to get my usual sleep at night. I had just partially recovered from the grip, which reduced my weight 40 lbs. My appetite was poor, and I felt languid and weak. In fact, I was in a very dilapidated condition.

Rev. J. N. Parker, D. D. Fargo, N. D.

Having heard and read so much about the wonderful cures produced by Hood's Sarsaparilla I resolved to give it a trial. I followed the directions, and before the fifth bottle was finished my appetite was restored, I felt invigorated and strong. My rheumatic difficulty had entirely disappeared. I cannot but think very highly of Hood's Sarsaparilla." J. N. PARKER.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

Hood's Pills are the best family cathartic and liver medicine. Harmless, reliable, sure.

Quick Work.

A Cincinnati man describes a novel sight he recently saw at a mill devoted to making paper of pine tree pulp. I was invited to select a tree, which I did, and it was cut down for me in the morning. I watched it during the day undergoing the various processes of paper making, and at 6 o'clock that evening the tree was paper. At midnight a portion of it was sufficiently dry to be taken to a printing office, and a few of the copies of the next morning's paper were printed on this product. From a tree to a printed newspaper in twenty-four hours is probably the best time on record.

Dived Nearly Two Hundred Feet.

The deepest dive on record is that of Capt. John Christianson of Seattle, who plunged into the waters of Elliott bay, and after twenty minutes reappeared in no great distress. He brought with him a lead-line and bucket from the tug Majestic, which lay, at half-flood tide, 196 feet below the surface of the ocean.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

THE WEEK'S DOINGS IN SENATE AND HOUSE.

A Comprehensive Digest of the Proceedings in the Legislative Chambers at Washington—Matters that Concern the People.

Lawmakers at Labor.

Resolutions defining the policy of the Government in regard to gold and silver and one arraigning the management of the Pacific roads and directing the Attorney General to begin foreclosure proceedings were presented in the Senate Monday. Correspondence and reports regarding the Behring Sea fisheries were sent to the Senate by President Cleveland. The Senate Committee on the Judiciary will report adversely the nomination of W. M. Campbell, to be marshal of Minnesota. The House agreed to the Senate amendments to the Chicago post office bill, and it went to the President. The House completed consideration of the legislative appropriation bill with the exception of the paragraph relating to pension offices. A bill to incorporate a company which proposes to lay a cable to Hawaii, Australia and Japan was presented in the House.

The legislative appropriation bill was passed by the House Tuesday after the item placing clerks on the annual pay roll had been stricken out. The House Ways and Means Committee discussed the gold bond plan and made decided progress toward an agreement. The House Committee on Pacific Roads decided to again report the Reilly bill, together with the proposition of the companies to pay the principal of the debt. Messrs. Morgan and Pugh protested in the Senate against the speech of Mr. Allen on the alleged election frauds in Alabama. A bill providing for the unlimited coinage of silver was favorably reported to the Senate from the Finance Committee.

A bill providing for the issuance of $65,000,000 in gold bonds was presented to the Senate Wednesday by Mr. Vilas. A resolution authorizing Secretary Carlisle to sell gold bonds was favorably reported to the House from the Ways and Means Committee. A copy of the bond contract was also submitted.

The House Thursday defeated the proposition of the President to issue gold bonds whereby $16,000,000 in interest could have been saved. The measure providing for the construction of a new Federal building at Chicago has been signed by President Cleveland. In response to a request Secretary Carlisle has sent to the Senate his figures on the treasury gold reserve and expenditures. Labor Commissioner Wright has submitted a report outlining plans for providing homes for the working people on easy terms.

The Senate passed the postoffice appropriation bill Friday. Senate hostile amendments being defeated. The agricultural bill was taken up. Senator Chandler has introduced a bill to establish free American ports where foreign raw material may be manufactured. Strong opposition to the bill appropriating money to build more war ships was developed on the floor of the House. The House Committee on Commerce submitted a report favoring a deep waterway to connect the ocean and great lakes. The Navy Department is advised that the war ships Charleston and Yorktown are rescuing American missionaries at Che Foo.

In the Senate Saturday Mr. Wolcott charged the President with misstating the financial situation. Senators Cullom and Palmer appeared before the sub-committee of the Senate Appropriation Committee and urged an amendment to the sundry civil bill providing an appropriation for the beginning of the work on the proposed new Chicago post office building. They have received a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending an appropriation of $400,000 for beginning work on the new building, and of $200,000 for temporary quarters for the post office while the new building is in course of construction. The House voted to increase the navy with three battle ships and twelve torpedo boats.

The Curse of Scotland.

Among the reasons why the nine of diamonds has been called the curse of Scotland, I think that the following has not been given:

"Diamonds, nine of, called the curse of Scotland, from a Scotch member of Parliament, part of whose family arms is the nine of diamonds, voting for the introduction of the malt tax into Scotland."—"Chronology; or, the Historian's Companion," fourth edition, by Thomas Tegg, London, 1826, p. 308 (Addenda).

Could the arms of Daniel Campbell of Shawfield, member of Glasgow, contain the nine lozenges? His house was destroyed by a mob in 1727, because he was suspected of "having given government information on the habits and statistics of Scotland necessary for the preparation of the malt tax, as well as of having exposed a system of evasion of duties in the Scots tobacco trade."—See "History of Scotland," by John Hill Burton.

In the index to the "History," Campbell of Shawfield's Christian name is given as David.

There is a George Campbell mentioned as having caused the nine of diamonds to be called the curse of Scotland because he stole nine diamonds out of the royal crown in the reign of Mary Stuart, in consequence of which all Scotland was taxed.—Notes and Queries.

Odds and Ends.

The original of the face on the silver dollar is Miss Anna Willess Williams, formerly a teacher in the Philadelphia schools.

Matanzas Inlet, Florida, was named by Menendez to commemorate his victory over Ribout. The word means "massacre."

India rubber used for erasing pencil marks was known in England as early as 1770. A cube of it half an inch square cost 3 shillings.

Cape Hatteras took its name from that of a tribe of Indians who lived in the neighborhood.

Minnehaha means "laughing water." The Indian word is Minnerara, the Frenchman Hennepin having mistaken the sound.

Rev. Dr. James M. King at the recent dinner of the Patria Club, New York, exhorted his hearers to remember "that with substantially unrestricted suffrage, a republican form of government is still on trial in this country." He, however, was hopeful for the future.

A BRIGHT STAR.

SKETCH OF THE MAN WHO LED MARY ANDERSON TO FAME.

Also Played Leading Roles with Booth, Barrett and Thorne.

(From the St. Louis Chronicle.)

One of the most conspicuous figures in the Stageland of America to-day is John W. Norton. Born in the seventh ward of New York city forty-six years ago, the friends of his youth were Thomas W. Keene and Frank Chanfrau. We find Keene a star at the age of 25 and Norton in the flower of early manhood, the leading man for Edwin Booth at the famous Winter Garden Theater. He was starred with Lawrence Barrett early in the '70's, and alternated the leading roles with Charles Thorne at the Variety Theater in New Orleans. Early in the Centennial year, in Louisville, Norton met our Mary Anderson, then a fair young girl who aspired for stage fame, took her under his guidance and, as everybody knows, led her to fame. Mr. Norton is now the proprietor of the Grand Opera House in St. Louis, the Du Quesne Theater, Pittsburg, and one of the stockholders in the American Extravaganza Company.

One afternoon early in June he hobbled into his New York office on Broadway and encountered his business manager, George McManus, who had also been a rheumatic sufferer for two years. Norton was surprised that McManus had discarded his cane. Who cured you? he asked. "I cured myself," replied McManus, "with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

"I was encouraged by Mr. McManus' cure, and as a last resort tried the Pink Pills myself," said Mr. Norton to a Chronicle reporter. "You have known me for five years, and know how I have suffered. Why, during the summer of 1893 I was on my back at the Mullanphy Hospital, in this city, four weeks. I was put on the old system of dieting, with a view to clearing those acidulous properties in my blood that medical theorists say is the cause of my rheumatism. I left the hospital feeling stronger, but the first damp weather brought with it those excruciating pains in the legs and back. It was the same old trouble. After sitting down for a stretch of five minutes, the pains screwed my legs into a knot when I arose, and I hobbled as painfully as ever. After I had taken my first box of Pink Pills, it struck me that the pains were less troublesome. I tried another box, and I began almost unconsciously to have faith in the Pink Pills. I improved so rapidly that I could rise after sitting at my desk for an hour and the twinges of rheumatism that accompanied my rising were so mild that I scarcely noticed them. During the past two weeks, we have had much rainy weather in St. Louis. But the dampness has not had the slightest effect in bringing back the rheumatism, which I consider a sufficient and reliable test of the efficacy of Pink Pills. I may also say that the Pink Pills have acted as a tonic on my stomach, which I thought was well nigh destroyed by the thousand and one alleged remedies I consumed in the past five years."

That Way Danger Lies.

A man with a pair of crutches and a thorough stand-in-need-of-repair appearance sat on a lounge in a hotel and talked to a group of acquaintances.

"You may talk about your horrifying experience," he said "but a while ago, when I was travelling I was awakened from a sound sleep in the middle of the night by a cry of fire. I jumped up and found my room full of smoke. I rushed to the window, looked out and saw that the hotel was one mass of flames. Then I climbed up on to the window sill, closed my eyes and jumped."

"And," broke in a sympathetic bystander "that is why you carry these crutches, I suppose?"

"No; not exactly. The fact is, I slipped on a bit of orange peel the other day. That night my room was on the ground floor."

Madrid Custom.

It is not the custom for ladies to go to market in Madrid, and even the first cook in great houses disdains to expose herself to the jokes of the marketwomen. It falls to the place of the second cook to do the marketing, and she prefers it, for it brings many perquisites. It is understood that she exacts her commission on all she buys, and, as prices vary, this is easy without detection. "She is too dear," is sometimes said when a servant is discharged; but no imputation is made against her character.

Ten Miles Above.

One of the balloons recently sent up by French scientists with automatically-registering thermometers and barometer reached a hight of ten miles, where the thermometer registered 110 degrees below zero. In a lecture recently delivered before the English Meteorological Society, Mr. Richard Inwards says that above the altitude of 12,000 feet from the sea the temperature decreases about one degree for every 350 feet.

Good Reason for Killing Him.

Deschapelles, the greatest whist-player the world has ever seen, had but one hand and was an advanced Republican. His manual dexterity was remarkable, and it was very interesting to watch him with his one hand—and that his left—collect the cards, sort them, play them, and gather them in tricks. Late in life, when he had developed into ardent republicanism, he was supposed to have been mixed up in some of the attempts at revolution which broke out in the earlier days of the reign of Louis Philippe. His papers were seized, and it was proved that he had drawn up a list of persons to be disposed of. Among them was an elderly acquaintance, so described: "Vatry (Alphie) to be guillotined. Reason—citoyen inutile. Vatry is a bad whist-player."

A Clever Dog.

Mr. Stacy Marks's anecdote of the money-finding dog, which he attributes to Landseer, is a very prince among all stories of the kind. The dog's master, in the presence of a skeptical friend, hid a five pound note in the hole of a tree when the dog was paying him no attention. "Go, fetch!" he said, some time afterward, while returning by another road, without further explanation.

The dog trotted off, and it was a few hours before he joined the two at home. As there were no signs of a note, the skeptical friend grew satirical. But the host opened the dog's mouth, and five sovereigns were concealed under his tongue. He had found the note, been to the banker's and exchanged it for gold.—The Spectator.

The Moon Has Been Maligned.

It was recently pointed out by Sir John Hutton in his annual address to the County Council that in 1889 there were 16,041 pauper lunatics, including lunatics in workhouses and imbecile asylums. January 1 of the present year, however, these figures had been increased to 18,058, or an average increase of 400 per annum. The rate of increase last year was strikingly in excess of an previous year, and stood at no less than 807, the blazing summer months being considered responsible for this big jump in the figures. In spite of what the poets have said, it looks as if the sun had a more malign effect on human wits than the moon.

New Definition of Missionary.

By some chance the tourist stayed to Sunday-school. A young lady with a sweet face—and, unless the tourist's aging eyes deceived him, a stylish bonnet—was explaining the word "missionary." "Missionary," she said, "is from the Latin 'missionarius,' which means one sent." She looked heavenly enough to inspire a whole cago of missionaries and seemed to possess enough learning for an entire lexicon, and the tourist did not doubt her. "Now, Charlie," she said to a little urching with a shining morning face, "what is a missionary?" "One penny."—Hartford Post.

The Keystone of the Arch

In the edifice of health is vigor, which means not merely muscular energy, but an active discharge of the various functions of the body, such as digestion, secretion of the bile, the action of the bowels, the circulation of the blood. Nothing more actively and thoroughly contributes to the united performance of these functions than the renowned tonic and regulator, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The result of its use is a speedy gain in strength, together with the agreeable consciousness that the tenure of life is being strengthened—that one is laying up a store of vitality against the unavoidable draughts which old age makes upon the system. The fortifying influence of the Bitters constitute it a reliable safeguard against malaria, rheumatism and kidney trouble. Appetite and sleep improve through its use, and it protects the system from the effects of cold and damp.

Favored Demoiselles.

The French believe in marriage, and legacies for its encouragement are not uncommon. The latest is that of a Parisian tradesman of Neapolitan origin, who has left 18,000 francs to the city of Paris, the interest of which is to be applied every year in providing a wedding dowry for three young girls, born in Paris, who are between the ages of 16 and 25. The names of the candidates are to be entered at the Mairies by the 1st of October in each year, and the three fortunate demoiselles are to be selected in accordance with certain conditions laid down by the testator.

Fine Hair.

The Coreans know nothing of the value of human hair, judging by the use to which they put their "combing." A very large number of the saddlecloths placed under the backs of their ponies are made of hair wove into coarse mats or bags, and the halters and head ropes of their animals are largely composed of the same material. Human hair is largely exported from China to Europe, and Corea could furnish a large and cheap supply did the people know there was a demand for it.

A Museum of Human Brains.

A collection of 220 human brains, carefully prepared and classified by Dr. Luys during his twenty years' service at the Saltpetriere and Charite hospitals, has been recently presented by him to the Paris faculty of medicine for the Depuytren museum. The collection is unique; it contains all forms of mental disease, madness, and idiocy, and includes the only preserved brain of a hypnotized subject in existence.

Do You Wish the Finest Bread and Cake?

It is conceded that the Royal Baking Powder is the purest and strongest of all the baking powders.

The purest baking powder makes the finest, sweetest, most delicious food. The strongest baking powder makes the lightest food.

That baking powder which is both purest and strongest makes the most digestible and wholesome food.

Why should not every housekeeper avail herself of the baking powder which will give her the best food with the least trouble?

Avoid all baking powders sold with a gift or prize, or at a lower price than the Royal, as they invariably contain alum, lime or sulphuric acid, and render the food unwholesome.

Certain protection from alum baking powders can be had by declining to accept any substitute for the Royal, which is absolutely pure.

For a Sweet Mouth.

Next to good teeth, a good taste is a nice thing to have in the mouth. The best dental lotion is listerine. It is colorless, odorless, and not unpleasant to the taste. Being astringent, only a few drops should be used at a time: in a tumbler of water this preparation will disinfect the mouth and teeth, be a tonic to the salivary glands, which may have been affected by highly seasoned or extreme temperatures of food, and sweeten the mouth. A swallow of the mixture will remove the fumes that cling to the walls of the esophagus. A few drops of myrrh is an old reliable; a squeeze of lemon juice in a glass of water is refreshing, and a teaspoonful of any good cologne water will cleanse the mouth and perfume the breath.—New York Evening World.

Dr. Gladden Uses No Passes.

The Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden of Columbus, Ohio, recently returned a clerical pass which a railroad company sent him, with the following explanation: "I never use clerical tickets, because I know of no reason why clergymen should have privileges not granted to the mechanics and laboring men, and because I am not satisfied that railroads have any rights to grant the favor to anybody."

THE ONWARD MARCH

of Consumption is stopped short by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. If you haven't waited beyond reason, there's complete recovery and cure.

Although by many believed to be incurable, there is the evidence of hundreds of living witnesses to the fact that, in all its earlier stages, consumption is a curable disease. Not every case, but a large percentage of cases, and we believe, fully 98 per cent. are cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, even after the disease has progressed so far as to induce repeated bleedings from the lungs, severe lingering cough with copious expectoration (including tubercular matter), great loss of flesh and extreme emaciation and weakness.

Do you doubt that hundreds of such cases reported to us as cured by "Golden Medical Discovery" were genuine cases of that dread and fatal disease? You need not take our word for it. They have, in nearly every instance, been so pronounced by the best and most experienced home physicians, who have no interest whatever in misrepresenting them, and who were often strongly prejudiced and advised against a trial of "Golden Medical Discovery," but who have been forced to confess that it surpasses, in curative power over this fatal malady, all other medicines with which they are acquainted. Nasty cod-liver oil and its filthy "emulsions" and mixtures, had been tried in nearly all these cases and had either utterly failed to benefit, or had only seemed to benefit a little for a short time. Extract of malt, whiskey, and various preparations of the hypophosphites had also been faithfully tried in vain.

The photographs of a large number of those cured of consumption, bronchitis, lingering coughs, asthma, chronic nasal catarrh and kindred maladies, have been skillfully reproduced in a book of 160 pages which will be mailed to you, on receipt of address and six cents in stamps. You can then write those cured and learn their experience. Address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

Who Wins the $300?

A novel way to obtain a suitable name for their great, yes, wonderful new oats, has been adopted by the John A. Salzer Seed Co. They offer $300 for a name for their new oats; their catalogue tells all about it. Farmers are enthusiastic over the oat, claiming 200 bushels can be grown per acre right along. You will want it.

Farmers report six tons of hay from Salzer's Meadow Mixtures; 112 bushels corn per acre in a dry season, and 1,161 bushels potatoes from two acres.

If You Will Cut This Out and Send It with 10c postage to the John A. Salzer Seed Co., La Crosse, Wis., you get free their mammoth catalogue and a package of above $300 Prize Oats. CNU

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

A Battle Scarred Veteran.

Nearly every one in Medina Co., Ohio, knows Stephen Rolph, of River Styx, the one legged veteran, who lost his leg at Winchester, Va., March 23, '62. In all probability the exposure and privations of army service, the effects of which are felt as they grow older by nearly all old soldiers, were the cause of the serious nervous prostration and sleeplessness of which Comrade Rolph complained. He says: "people hereabout know me pretty well, but you can tell others that I was down for about six months with nervous prostration and sleeplessness for which I tried various doctors and medicines, but Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer has done me more good than all the doctoring I had done. The first bottle gave me such great relief that I have used several and feel almost restored to my former good health." Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer can be relied upon by any who are suffering from nervous troubles, sleeplessness, etc. If all tired out and run down, you need a reliable nerve and system tonic and health restorer as this remedy is Sold in Auburn by F. Cures Colds.

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner, with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. THERE is but one way in the world to be sure of having the best paint, and that is to use only a well-established brand of strictly pure white lead, pure linseed oil, and pure colors.*

Strictly Pure White Lead

"Anchor," "Eckstein," "Armstrong & McKelvy," "Beymer-Bauman," "Davis-Chambers," "Collier," "Shipman," "Southern," "Red Seal," "Fahnestock."

* If you want colored paint, tint any of the above strictly pure leads with National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors.

These colors are sold in one-pound cans, each containing being sufficient to tint 25 pounds of Strictly Pure White Lead the desired shade; they are in fact ready-mixed paints, but a combination of perfectly pure colors in the handiest form to use with Strictly Pure White Lead.

Softening Influence of Woman in Politics

From Harper's Weekly.

Word comes from Colorado, where women are now fully enfranchised, that on Tuesday, January 22d, a legislator stood up in the legislative hall and spoke of certain women as "hatchet-faced things." Three women who were sitting as representatives heard him, and each took vigorous exception to his epithet. Thus we see how promptly the softening influence of woman in politics shows itself after once the franchise is granted. The Colorado women abolished the abusive Waite, and doubtless they will presently break the Colorado legislators of the habit of calling names in meeting. A Colorado man discloses to the Weekly his opinion that women as office-holders are not in favor in Colorado, and that it is unlikely that more of them will be elected. Which is interesting if true, but it is possible that the opinion of a Colorado man in such a matter should be taken with salt.

A Tooth For A Tooth.

From Harper's Bazar.

Perhaps no profession has made more progress in the last thirty years than dentistry has done. Half a century ago dentistry, as a separate branch of the medical profession, was but little known, and dentists were but very few, even in the great cities. The regular physician pulled the aching tooth, and we have even seen a case where he filled it, and the filling, owing to the healthy character of the bone, possibly, remained in that tooth for all of a long lifetime. At that period the dentist travelled about from one town to another throughout a wide district, and people who availed themselves of his services were thought to be rather fantastical, and foolish and extravagant as well. In a case where new front teeth were wanted the old teeth was sawed off and the nerve was destroyed with hot irons and infinite torture, in order that a new tooth might be driven in on a wooden peg, a tooth that was a perpetual trouble and never permanent. A tooth that ached then was extracted without remorse, and a filling, when fillings came to be known, as often dropped out as staid in. Now, on the contrary, if the tooth must be parted with, there are so many ways of evading the pain that, had they existed in the old time, Isaac of York might have kept his money, and the anodynes are so used that the patient is conscious and sees the whole operation and suffers nothing at all. But no tooth is taken out now that can possibly be kept in. If a nerve must be killed it is usually killed painlessly, and the tooth that once could not bear permanent and solid filling is treated till it is able to do so. Even when a tooth is so nearly gone that retaining points for the filling are not to be had, tiny gold screws can be inserted whose heads answer for the points, a fine gold wire can hold the fragile sections together and be built about, and anodynes have been found that can be injected into the gum or applied to do away with much of the pain once attending a bad excavation or a tender filling. Fillings are made so artistically, too, as almost to be beautiful in themselves; and it is even possible, in case of a cavity on the front surface of a tooth, to insert a bit of enamel so delicately that even the cracks cannot be discerned.

WHAT WE HAVE TO SAY ABOUT MNOEY.

The Indiana Mutual Building Loan Association, which we represent in this part of the state, have again reduced their interest, which has always been from 2 to 5 per cent less than any other Building Loan Association Do you know that if you are about to borrow money and give a mortgage on your home, you should take the time and trouble to investigate the plan of different associations, so that you may know, regardless of what any agent may tell you, which is the cheapest andthe best?

There are three items which should also be considered and thoroughly understood, especially by the borrower, before he makes his application for a loan:

First: The rate of interest and premium he is charged per annum.

Second: What the earnings of the Association are.

Third: How economically the Association is conducting its affairs.

We are prepared always to compare our company with any other, and can prove to your entire satisfaction that we are the cheapest, and

REMEMBER

That in our company you have no membership fee to pay, no advance payments to make and there will be no delays, so that should your loan for any reason be declined, you will lose no money. We are prepared to make loans where the security is sufficient; for any amount from $2. 00 to $25,0)

THE DAILY COURIER.

Auburn is by far the leading town in this county and every neighboring town of its size and enterprise in neighboring counties has a daily paper of its own. Some, as in the case of Columbia City, have two. We know of no reason why Auburn should not have one. Auburn will in the natural course of things, soon be incorporated as a city and we belive the time is ripe when this first step, a daily paper, should be considered The success of this venture as we said last week, must depend on the patronage it receives, both in advertising and in keeping up its subscription list The advertising patronage, thanks to the public spirit and liberality of our business men, is now on a pretty safe footing and is likely to be permanent. Now, we ask every one who can spare a dime each week from his earnings, no matter whether he is at the head of a family or not, to get his name on our subscription books And if this is done in Auburn's accustomed spirit of liberality and enterprise the success of the "DAILY COURIER" is assured. Our list as shown so far is very encouraging and all this week a canvass will be made and so on till all in town have had the opportunity to become subscribers. Extra copies will be printed for the first week so that single copies can be had of Harry Trentman at his news stand at the Glazier House. A limited number will also be used as samples in other parts of the city.

And now a word on another branch of the subject. A daily paper such as we contemplate, though it will have in brief form the latest telegraph news is still in the main a "home paper." In it we hope to record every local event that happens in Auburn and vicinity. And in getting these home locals we ask the help of all our people. Give us your "happenings." Tell them to the reporter, to the carriers, to the editor, to our employes and if any facilities, such as paper and envelopes are needed we will gladly furnish them. You can help us, and we will try to help you. Auburn can help us and we shall try to help Auburn. Let the "DAILY COURIER" become a household word.

SCHOOL CELEBRATION,

As noted last week, the Auburn schools had made arrangements to celebrate Feb. 22, and set a "mile post" in their own history at the same time This included the raising of a fine new flag on a beautiful new flagstaff, as a concluding part of the services. All the departments contributed their share to the celebration, or rather each had a celebration complete in itself. Every room was handsomely decorated, and had a program of literary and musical exercises, as well as a large attendance of visitors. As the day was fine there was no use to think of staying at home, and so the attendance was very large, and visitors sought that room in which they had the greatest interest, and many went into several different departments, so as too see as much of the school and school work as possible. For our own part, we sought, first the Grammar Department, and heard a few of the recitations, and by the kindness of some of its pupils, are enabled to give the entire Leaving this room, we passed into the High School Department which is under the charge of Josiah Teeters We found the room crowded with interested spectators, and the exercises were about half done. In this room were distributed printed programs, at the head of each showing a picture of the lovely new school building. The part we heard was excellent, and in both rooms it was gratifying to see that even the younger members had acquired that self control so greatly needed when speaking in public. The exercises were abridged at the close, by the arrival of the hour, three o'clock, when the flag was to be raised. This cut off a part of Paul Davenport's excellent article, left off Karl Husselman's exercise as well as a solo by Mr. Hastings. The following is the entire.

All the rooms stopped their program at three o'clock, and the great throngs moved slowly out and arranged themselves about a square that included the flagstaff and the military. Next came the pupils, who marched out from the different departments, each in charge of its teacher, and all formed inside the square of visitors under guidance of Mr. Boland and the teachers. Capt. Kuhlman then stepped forward and he and Mr Boland raised the flag, which is a large and beautiful one As its graceful folds opened and swung to the impulses of the wintry air, and it rose higher and higher, the Rifles fired their three salutes, and under the direction of the Captain gave the "honors to the flag." This closed the exercises, and the gratified crowd dispersed to their homes We do not believe there was one there, that felt a regret that we had put up this new school building, even if it does cost us some money. If there are still any who feel that way, we would like to have them at these "public days" or any other day, and see what our schools are doing, see what a great number of pupils we have who needed this accomodation. We have no dearer interests, than the proper education of our children.

We are told all the exercises were equal to those we saw and the rooms decorated even more beautifully. So the good words we would say for the two departments we saw, are just as appropriate for all the others.

CARE AND CULTIVATION OF THE ORCHARD.

A paper read at the St. Joe Farmers' Institute by W. F. Devillbiss of Ft. Wayne.

The subject of fruit cultivation has attracted my attention for many years. During my travels in the South, I have seen the most surprising vegetation of the great natural hot houses. There, nature offers to man, almost without care, the most refreshing and delicious and the most nutritious fruits. Such are the natural fruits and fruit trees of these glowing climates. It is not there that we must look for the most patient cultivation, but in a climate like ours, visited not only by genial warmth and sunshine, but by season of ice and snow. Our native fruits transplanted into a warmer climate, stimulated by a richer soil, raised from selected seed, carefully pruned, sheltered and watched, by slow degrees the sour and bitter crab becomes golden pippin. The wild pear loses its thorns and becomes a "Seckel," and the dry and flowerless peach becomes a delicious fruit. It is thus only in the face of obstacles, in a climate like ours where nature is not prodigal of perfection, and in the midst of thorns and thistles, that man, the gardener, arises and forces nature to yield to his art. And there is so much to be said on this subject that I hardly know where to begin, and successful orchardists differ so widely. I shall speak of my own experience. The land for an orchard should be such as you would want to raise a fair crop of corn on. It should be thoroughly and deeply plowed, tiled and tilled before planting, and should be cultivated at least once every ten days until the first of August, when cultivation should cease to allow the wood to mature for winter. The object of all cultivation is to furnish the trees with the proper material to make strong, healthy growth and to retain moisture to keep the trees growing through the dry season.

It must be remembered that the soil is the great store house of all plant food and the first consideration is, to prepare the soil so that they can use all parts of it. The treatment which retains moisture the longest of all, is to prepare the soil so that they can use it. The treatment which will retain the moisture the longest is of all treatment the one to be considered, and that is intense cultivation.

1. To furnish plants with food by taking free nitrogen from the air.
2. To conserve moisture.
3. To make the soil fine so plants can use all parts of it.

Plow early in the spring as the soil will admit and deep if orchard is young to make the trees root deep; if old, shallow, and then cultivate at least every ten days thereafter until August, when practically all cultivation should cease and this treatment should continue year after year so long as it is an orchard. In general, level cultivation is best, plowing to the trees and only one way. Many differ on this point of cross-plowing, but I plow only one way and depend on excessive cultivation to level the ground each year so I can again plow to the trees next season.

EXPERIENCE

It is often asked what is the best crop to raise in an orchard. Trees and fruit. What else would you want to raise? When Judge B. W. Felton of Canon City, Colo. raised and sold before the first day of November over $1,000 worth of winter apples to the acre. I believe the same can be done here. I had in my orchard planted in 1891 four nice apples mature on one tree. Several others had nice apples. Of course, when the orchard is young and the land is naturally rich some hoed crop such as potatoes or beans can be raised to advantage but no hay, wheat or grain of any kind.

There is much confusion in the public mind concerning the relation of cover crops to moisture. Many contend that any crop which shades the ground will keep the surface moist and thereby conserve moisture. Others contend that as all plants exhale moisture any crop even weeds, will make the land dry. After tillage is stopped in midsummer it is a good plan to sow crimson clover as a covering or some other crop. It will protect the land from injurious effects of frost and plowed in the following spring will add fiber to the soil and thereby increase its power of holding fertility and moisture and to some degree add fertility It is generally advisable to grow a crop which answers for both a cover and green manure, although it is possible to make the soil too nitrogenous for some fruits, especially grapes and peaches.

FERTILIZERS.

The artificial fertilizers that need to be applied in the orchard are in the order named: potash, nitrogen and phosphoric acid. Potash being the most important element to be applied. Its uses are many, though tillage increases it. One of the best sources is wood ashes. It is estimated to contain seven to nine per cent, which has a trade value of four cents a pound. Save your wood ashes and apply them to the orchard. It will help to keep the dreaded borer and other insects out, not a remedy.

PRUNING.

Trim young trees in pyramidal form by cutting away all side branches, allowing the center to grow straight up. By so doing, the body will be heady, the side branches high and extended along the body following the center up. This applies to the apple, peach, pear both dwarf and standard.

The peach should be headed in each year by cutting away half the previous year's growth.

The apple needs more or less trimming each year, such as interfering limbs or to dense part of tree.

The pear after the head is well formed, needs but little trimming. Cherry only to shape the head. Plum shorten in similar to the peach. Prune at any time in the season when the trees may need it, never allowing it to go until you must use a saw or an ax. Rubbing off the small shoots or limbs when they start is the best way after the head is formed.

The diseases and insects that infest the orchard are numerous and of many kinds, and a successful fruit grower must give this subject great attention by going through his orchard at least once a week looking for insects and diseases in the different stages of development. For instance, the leaf roller. The borer

TREATMENT.

Spray for the apple scab, codling moth and bud moth

First application when buds begin to swell of copper sulphate solution. Second application. Just before the blossoms are opened, bordeaux mixture for bud moth and leaf curl when leaf buds open. Third application, when blossoms have fallen bordeaux mixture with paris green

Cherry, spray for rot, aphis and slug. As buds are breaking bordeaux mixture. When aphis appears kerosene emulsion. If slug appears, dust with lime

Raspberry, black berry and dew berry spray for anthranose. Before buds break copper sulphate solution. During summer if rust appears on leaves B. M. orange or red rust the best treatment is by destroying the plants.

Grape, fungous diseases. When first leaves appear, copper sulphate solution. When leaves are one and a half inch in diameter B. M. Again when the flowers are open ten days later B. M.

Leg Broken.

Mrs. Houghton who lives on south Main street, fell Thursday of last week and broke her leg. She is quite old and the accident is a very unfortunate one for her. Her son, Al. Houghton, came up from Newville Saturday and remained with her a couple of days.

Toes Mashed.

Fred Gouley, an employe of the band saw mill, had three toes mashed Saturday of last week He was helping to handle some of the heavy planks and dropped his end on his foot. Two toes were completely mashed and the third so badly that it was found necessary to amputate all three. Dr. W. H. Nusbaum performed the work.

Hand Badly Hurt.

S. S. Potter, who is employed as cutter in the Yellow Front meat market met with a serious accident last Thursday evening. He was hanging up a piece of meat weighing about twenty-five pounds and in some way did not catch on the upper hook and this pushed his hand down, catching on the lower hook and tearing it to the bone. Had not the hook struck the bone the weight of the meat would have driven it entirely through his hand. The wound is a severe one and has made him unable to attend to business for a few days.

Answer to L. J. Miller's Problem.

HUDSON, IND., Feb. 18, '95

Editor COURIER,

SIR:—I see in your last number, Feb. 14, a solution of the L. J. Miller beef problem by W. A. Winslow. He states he has been waiting patiently for two years for some of DeKalb's teachers to express their ideas on the problem. I suppose they all thought as I do, that it was not necessary for them to spend their time on of the many impossibilities that we encounter from time to time. In the first place, I beg leave to differ from Mr. Winslow in the solution of his problem, from the very fact that he has varied from the original price per lb. paid by each one of the purchasers.

The original price being 5½ and 6½ cts. per lb, while he has it .055411 plus that A pays, and 065411 plus, the price that B pays. Suppose now that these were as he states, the true prices, A's 108 lbs. and 5 oz at 055411 per lb. would amount to $6 001703 plus; and B's 91 lbs and 11 oz. at .065411 per lb would amount to $5.997371 plus. These sums added would amount to $11.999074 plus. So we see from beginning to ending the solution does not agree with the original problem.

I agree with Mr. Winslow that his rule is quite a complicated one—too much so for the L. J. Miller beef problem.

Respectfully,
W. H. SHATTO.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

HISTORY OF A WEEK.

PEOPLE, PLACES, AND THINGS OF THE WORLD.

A Double Residence Completely Demolished by a Gas Explosion—Earthquake in Oregon—Brother and Sister Ground to Pieces—Bold Bank Robbery.

Invaded by Burglars.

The First National Bank of Grisworld, Cass County, Iowa, was entered by burglars, who blew open the vault door and then drilled into the front door of the lock safe, put in a heavy charge of explosive, lit a fuse and closed the vault doors. The explosion totally wrecked the vault, doing over $3,500 damage to the safe, vault, and building. The noise was so great that the burglars made a hasty departure. Over $400 worth of stamps belonging to the postmaster and $120 in nickels inside the vault are known to have been taken, and probably other valuables. But the wreck is so great that it is an impossibility to tell at this time what was stolen. The burglar-proof safe inside the vault contained $20,000 in cash, and it is not improbable that this safe was entered and the $20,000 stolen. Men are scouring the country for traces of the thieves, who are evidently professionals.

Gas Explosion.

The double residence on the corner of Shenango and Reno streets, Sharon Pa., was completely wrecked by a natural gas explosion, which resulted from the ingnition of accumulated gas in the cellar. The residence was occupied by John Ashton and family and Daniel Bryson and family. The injured are John Ashton, severely burned about the face and body; may die. John Bryson, burned about the face and hands. Miss Grace Ashton, burned and one finger almost blown off. Drs Daniel Bryson, Mrs. John Ashton and Miss Minnie Ashton were slightly injured. All the walls of the house are down and several of the inmates were blown out on the street.

Ground To Pieces.

Fred J. Cooks, aged 19, and his sister, Mary E. Cooks, aged 20, were driving out of Sherman-Heineman Park, at the west edge of Mansfield, Ohio, when they were struck by a freight train on the B. & O., and instantly killed. The young woman was literally ground to pieces, and the young man cut in two. The horse was uninjured. The crossing is on a curve between two embankments, and the approach of trains can not be seen. The young people were the children of Mrs. Marguerite Cooks, a widow, and both had a wide circle of acquaintances. The fragments of the bodies were removed to the undertaker's rooms.

Drove off The Train's Crew.

Cleveland special: One of the boldest acts of lawlessness which has occurred in this city for a long time took palce in the western suburbs the other night. While a Nickel Plate freight train was standing in front of the telegraph office, near the Detroit street crossing, awaiting orders, a gang of tramps appeared, and, with drawn revolvers, drove off the crew of the train. The gang then began breaking open freight cars and helping themselves to the contents. When the police arrived the vagabonds fled and escaped.

A Mayor Fines Himself.

P. B. Wilson, a rug manufacturer of Piqua, began selling rugs on the streets of South Charleston, Ohio, when Mr. Cheseldine, a home merchant, complained to the Mayor, who informed Mr. Cheseldine there was no law to prevent it. Mr. Cheseldine, however, had Wilson arrested, and found the law called for a $50 license. The Mayor, seeing his mistake, fined himself $1 and costs for not knowing the law.

Revolt in Cuba.

The apprehensions of a revolt in Cuba are increasing. The governor general has put in effect the public order throughout the island. This law provides for the immediate punishment of anybody taken in a seditious act. Some twenty-four men have defied the authorities and called for rebel recruits at Ybarra, near Malanzas, and trouble is reported also from Cuantanamo.

Messrs. Morgan and Belmont announce that the total subscriptions to the new four per cent. loan in the United States amounts to about $200,000,000. Subscribers will receive notice of allotments immediately. The steamer Paris brings thirty-five boxes of gold bars valued at $1,470,000 to August Belmont & Co., on account of the bond syndicate.

He's the Fourth.

Owney McFarland, aged 16, call boy for the Big Four at Bellefontaine, Ohio, was torn to pieces by the cars just west of town. The fate of the McFarland family is a sad and terrible one, this being the fourth to be killed on the Big Four during the past two years, the father and two brothers preceding this boy.

Whirled To His Death.

G. W. Grabiel, age 25, was caught in the belting of a sawmill at Bellefontain, Ohio. He was carried around nine times, being crushed to a shapeless mass, his neck, back both arms and both legs being broken.

Three Hundred Volts Killed Him.

William Baker, coal miner, aged 24, was instantly killed by electricity in the North Leavenworth, Kan., coal mine. The voltage that passed through his body was less than three hundred.

Earthquakes.

Three distinct earthquake shocks were felt at Portland, Ore., recently. The first shock lasted three seconds. The vibrations were from north to south.

To Be Left Alone.

A caucus of Republican members of the Indiana Legislature has decided to leave the appointing power in the hands of the Governor.

Eyes Blown Out.

While William Potter was out hunting ground-hogs, near Xenia, Ohio, he had both his eyes blown out and his face badly burned by a blast of powder which he had placed in a hole to blow the animals out. The powder went off before he was ready.

Thousands Perished.

A dispatch to the London Standard from Odessa says that the town of Koutchat, near Astrabad, Persia, has been destroyed by an earthquake. Many thousands of lives were lost.

Three Lives Lost.

Hot Springs (Ark.) special: Three lives were lost and $75,000 worth of property destroyed in a fire which occurred here. Nearly all the property destroyed was boarding houses. The dead are: Mrs. Clara Sammons, D. W. Wing, and Mrs. Maggie Hecox. A Mr. Wing of Glen Falls, New York; a Mrs. Hecox, boarding house keeper, and Mr. and Mrs. Bronson of Macon, Mo., were slightly injured in jumping from the burning buildings.

The fire was at the south end of the gulch in which Hot Springs is located and the wind was from the north. As a result none of the large hotels were at any time in direct danger. The fire burned both sides of Ouachita avenue to Hawthorne, one side of Hawthorne to Woodbine, and both sides of Orange to Quapawa street.

THE MEXICAN MISSION.

Senator Ransom Appointed to Succeed Isaac P. Gray.

The appointment of Senator Ransom of North Carolina, to the vacant Mexican Mission, made by the President Saturday, is in the nature of a compliment to the members of the United States Senate, as nearly every Senator, regardless of politics, signed a petition in behalf of the lucky appointee.

Few nominations have been sent to the Senate which have been received with greater favor. An old-time member of the Senate, and personally popular with all its members, the entire Senate, with two or three exceptions, and those exceptions because of relations with the Executive, had joined in the recommendation of the appointment. The Senate went into executive session immediately after receiving the nomination, and confirmed it by a unanimous vote. The confirmation was moved by Senator Sherman, who, in making the motion, addressed the Senate briefly as to the fitness of the nomination, of which he spoke as in every way deserving and appropriate.

Senator Ransom said after his confirmation that he would not qualify until after the 4th of March, and therefore would serve out his term in the Senate. After that time he would be prepared to proceed to Mexico as soon as the Secretary of State desired him to go.

HOME AT LAST.

Remains of Minister Gray Laid in Their Final Resting Place.

A special from Union City, Ind., says: The funeral train bearing the body of Isaac P. Gray, arrived here at 11:30 a. m. Friday. Large crowds were at the stations along the route. At Winchester the casket was opened and the remains were viewed by many people. Thousands were at the depot when the train reached this place. Business was entirely suspended and nearly all buildings were draped. Pictures of the late minister surrounded by crepe, are numerous. The train was met by a committee of citizens, and the deceased relatives were taken to the homes of friends. The casket containing the remains were carried to Cadwallader's opera house and placed on a bier. The latter was artistically decorated with crepe and flowers. At 12 o'clock two lines of people, each two squares in length, were waiting to view the body. They came in from all neighboring towns. Nine hundred school children, each carrying a flag, were standing in line. Services were held in the opera house at 3 o'clock. Rev. H. A. McDonald, of the Presbyterian church, delivered the funeral sermon. Throughout the day the services were solemnly impressive. Immediately after the interment, the special train carrying Mrs. Gray and relatives, left for Indianapolis.

TERRIBLE CALAMITY.

Burning of a Ferry Boat in the Bay of Rio Janeiro.

The Rio News of Jan. 8, just received in the latest mail, gives the particulars of a terrible calamity in the bay of Rio Janeiro. It says:

"About 7:15 on Sunday evening a fire broke out on the ferry boat Tereceira soon after leaving the Sandomingas landing. The boat left Rio de Janeiro with a large number of passengers, estimated at from eighty to 300, the greatest part of whom disembarked at Sandomingas. About fifty passengers embarked at this point. It is generally estimated that there were from 100 to 150 persons on board at the time of the disaster.

"Although the Tereceira was barely 300 meters from land when the fire appeared, nothing effective appears to have been done to safe the passengers except the forethought of the engineers in opening the safety valves of the boilers to prevent an explosion. The master signalled for the engineer to stop and nothing more was done. There was apparently but few life-saving appliances on board. The fire burned with such rapidity, however, that the passengers were soon driven overboard, where many were drowned, some were rescued by the launch and boats which hastened to the scene and a few succeeded in swimming ashore."

A DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

A Young Wife Killed by Her Infuriated Husband.

Decatur (Ind.) special: News has just reached this city of the fatal stabbing of the young wife of Samuel Young, of Blue Creek, this county. Particulars reveal the fact that Mr. Young, who is a man over 50 years of age, had forbidden his young wife to continue her acquaintance with a neighbor by the name of Henry Counterman, of whom the husband was insanely jealous. Not heeding the warning of her husband, Mrs. Young again went to the Counterman home, where her husband followed her shortly after.

Here a fierce quarrel arose between husband and wife, during which the young woman was roughly handled by her infuriated husband. Finally, in a moment of unconquerable fury, he seized a long butcher knife, and grabbing his wife about the waist, plunged it several times into her back. The woman lived but a few minutes. After the rash deed had been accomplished, the murderer ran to his home, where his dead body was afterward found by neighbors. He had taken his own life by hanging.

Attempt to Murder a Woman.

Great excitement prevails at Mitchell, Ind., over the fiendish action of a "Jack the Ripper," and the Seymour bloodhounds were placed on the trail to solve the mystery, if possible. Mrs. Will Harris, nee Nora Busie, left home at 8 o'clock the other night to visit the family of Josh Younger, a few squares distant, and on her way was approached by an unknown man, and as she ran he followed, catching her at Younger's porch, knocked her down with a slungshot and slashed a big knife across her breast, which cut a gash through her clothing, barely grazing the skin. Younger, hearing the racket, rushed to the rescue, but the would-be murderer escaped in the darkness. If he is caught a lynching is probable.

A Handsome Verdict.

The suit brought by Mrs. Nellie Walley in the circuit court at Muncie, Ind., to recover $6,000 alleged to have been lost by her husband, W. A. Walley, in the gaming rooms of John R. Ervin, Frank Miller and Charles Russey, came to an ending Thursday when the jury returned a verdict allowing the plaintiff $5,444,50. The jury was only out twenty minutes. The verdict was even a surprise to the counsel for the plaintiff. The case will likely be appealed. Ervin is the leading saloon keeper of Muncie. The rooms where the money was alleged to have been lost are over his saloon, and are in charge of Miller and Russey.

Fight with Pirates.

The French mail steamship has arrived at Marseilles, from Tolquin, bringing advices that a French convoy, composed of twenty-two men, was attacked by a party of Tonquinez pirates. Thirteen French soldiers were killed and eight wounded. A column of French troops captured Long Bai, a stronghold of the pirates, on January 11, after sharp fighting, in which nine French soldiers were killed and three officers and twenty-three men were wounded. More fighting is looked for.

Dealt Death.

Hong Kong special: It is reported here that an explosion, which recently occurred in the magazine of the fort of Tako, a treaty port on the southwestern coast of the Island of Formosa, and was at first understood to be of a comparatively trivial character, was terrible in its results. It is now said that the explosion killed 2,000 Chinese soldiers attached to the forts and injured many others. A squadron of Japanese war ships is patrolling the island.

Hunting for Treasure.

Amelia (Ohio) special: About one mile from this village is Brazier Station, on the C., G. & P. Railroad. At this time great excitement prevails. It is stated that about the time of Morgan's raid during the war $19,256.29 was buried and has never been taken up. The money was securely placed in tiling and consisted of gold, silver, greenbacks, allotment notes, compound interest notes, and bonds. The inhabitants are busily engaged digging up the ground for a radius of one-half mile from the center of the town, which is the C., G. & P. Railroad Station. The owner's name has not yet been given, but in this day of "hard times" it is hoped the hidden treasure will soon be found and distributed to the poor.

Peculiar Malady.

People in the southern part of Shelby county Indiana, are suffering with a peculiar malady, which, for want of better name, is called "pink eye." The disease attacks in the same manner as la grippe, but soon settles in the eyes. In a short time the optics were highly inflamed and suffused with blood. Entire families were incapacited and scarcely any one in the entire neighborhood escaped.

Captain Gordon Fined.

A fine of ten shillings has been imposed by the maratime authorities at North Shields upon Capt. Gordon, commander of the Aberdeen Steamer Crathie, which ran into and sank the North German Lloyd steamship Elbe. The offense for which the fine was scored against Capt. Gordon was that he navigated the Crathie to the north of mid-channel in the Tyne in going up that river last October.

Masonic Lodge Room Plundered.

At Waverly, Ind., after burglars had failed to enter the Forgy Bros.' general store, they forced their way into the Masonic lodge room, on the third floor. Everything of value was taken. The furniture, regalias, and curtains were destroyed, and the room next morning looked as if a tornado had visited it. Four heavy doors were battered to pieces in the attempt to enter the store.

Wild West in Ohio.

A special from Chillicothe, O., says that a freight train on the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern Railroad was held up near Vigo, twenty miles east of Chillicothe by three masked men armed with shotguns, and the trainmen were relieved of all their valuables. It is the general opinion that the bandits mistook the freight for the "Turkey" train, a fast freight due about that time and which carries an express car.

A Big Fire.

Fire broke out in the Arbuckle Bros.' big coffee mills, at John and Jay streets and East river, Brooklyn, N. Y., and it burned fiercely for a long time before it could be got under control. A number of men and girls employed in the mills had narrow escapes. Half a dozen sustained burns and injuries from jumping, but there was no loss of life. Loss $300,000.

Hurled to Death.

By the breaking of a scaffold on a new stand pipe being built at Bellevue, Ohio, Charles Balke of Cleveland, and another man, supposed to be from Titusville, Penn., name unknown, fell fifty-four feet. Balke lies in a critical condition, and the other man was instantly killed.

Resuming Work in the Mines.

Salineville (Ohio) special: For the first time in ten years every coal mine in the Salineville district is working full force. The mines have a capacity of over one hundred cars per day. Indications also point to the early resumption of work at Salineville.

Car Barns Burn.

The barns of the Lansing Electric Street Railway, together with five motor cars and all of the company's trailers, were destroyed by fire at Lansing, Mich. The company will be unable to continue service for the present. Loss, $25,000.

Will Propose an Amendment.

Senator Pettigrew has given notice of his intention to propose an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation of $300,000 for supplying seeds and seed grains among the inhabitants of the drouth-stricken part of the country.

Home and Children Burned.

The home of Jacob Gaukel of Star City, Mich., was destroyed by fire and his two children, aged 2 and 5 years, were cremated. Their parents were away from home at the time the fire occurred, and its origin is unknown.

The Brooklyn Strike Off.

At a meeting of the local assemblies of the Knights of Labor of the Atlantic Avenue Railway company, Brooklyn, N. Y., it was voted to call the strike off. This ends the trolley strike.

Crushed by a Tree.

While cutting down trees on his farm, eight miles east of Lebanon, Ind., Charles Smith was accidentally caught between a log and a falling tree and crushed to death.

No Foreign Flags.

The Lawson flag bill, forbidding the display of foreign flags on public buildings, has passed both branches of the New York Legislature.

John L. on a Toot.

John L. Sullivan is drunk at Jacksonville, Fla., and his company is trying to get back to New York.

CONGRESS OF WOMEN.

A SIGNIFICANT GATHERING IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL.

Women from All Spheres, of All Religions and with All Beliefs Assemble in Thousands in a Great Convention—Its Objects and Aims.

Agree on but One Point.

Washington correspondence:

A national government of, for and by the women of the United States—a Senate, a House of Representatives, a President and possibly a cabinet—such is the scope of the plan of several millions of women of America, who sent representatives to the second triennial convention of the National Council of Women of America, which commenced its session in Washington last week. This government is to be organized, not to legislate, but to deliberate upon national matters, taking its pointers from Congress and hoping to indirectly influence that body in its legislation. This woman's government purposes also to be a school for women against the time when they shall take a hand with men in the nation's real business; to illustrate to womankind the true meaning of national deliberation, legislation and administration.

To this the greatest gathering of women which the world has ever seen have come representatives from every walk of life, from every religion and every belief, and every part of the country. There are Protestants and Catholics, Jews and Gentiles, Mormons and Agnostics, Vivisectors and anti-Vivisectionists. There are Republicans, Democrats, Populists, Socialists, Tillmanites, Free Silverites, Farmers' Alliancers, Grangers, Single-Taxers, Nationalists and Prohibitionists. Scarcely any two delegates agree perfectly excepting upon one point, and that is the elevation and amelioration of womankind.

Nearly fifty different societies are represented, including those of a national scope, such as the National Women's Christian Temperance Union, and those which are more of a local character. Seventeen of the societies thus represented have an aggregate membership of nearly 5,000,000, and the total representation is probably little under 10,000,000. The organization of a woman's government, patterned after the national government of the United States, is one of the questions which will come up before this session of the National Council, which will continue two weeks. It will simply be a rearrangement of the National Council as it is at present. Its objects are set forth as follows: "We, women of the United States, sincerely believing that the best good of our homes and nation will be advanced by our own greater unity of thought, sympathy and purpose, and that an organized movement of women will best conserve the highest good of the family and the state, do hereby band ourselves together in a confederation of workers committed to the overthrow of all forms of ignorance and injustice, and to the application of the golden rule to society, custom and law."

The Officers of the Council.

The president of the National Council is the same Mrs. May Wright Sewall who was the moving spirit of the Women's Congress at the World's Fair, assisted by the other officers of the council. Mrs. Frances E. Bagley, the vice-president, is a rich and prominent society leader of Detroit. Mrs. Isabella Charles Davis, the recording secretary, is the best-known of the council's officers, for she is the business manager and one of the founders of the International Order of the King's Daughters and Sons, which has a strength of more than 350,000. The treasurer of the council is Lillian M. N. Stevens, of Stroudwater, Me., and has become prominent through her work for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. One of the most interesting of the council's officers is Mrs. Rachael Foster Avery, the corresponding secretary. She had a prominent part in the organization of the Women's Congress at the World's Fair, and in many other ways her name has become well known.

Behind the Board of Officers come the four great standing committees, who are supposed to represent the four most important fields of modern feminine thought. The first is on dress, of which Frances E. Russell, of St. Paul, Minn., is chairman, and which also includes the New York favorite, Anna Jenness Miller. The second committee is on equal pay for equal work, and consists of three members, of whom Mrs. Leland Stanford and Mary Desha are the best known. The Committee on Divorce Reform consists of three members, all of whom are well known. They are Mrs. Ellen Batelle Dietrick, Mary A. Livermore and Fannie B. Ames. The Committee on Patriotic Instruction is composed of six members, of whom Eliza D. Keith, better known as "Di Vernon," a California poet and litterateur; Frances E. Willard, Mrs. Isabella C. Davis and Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick are very widely known.

The National Council, while the largest of all the national organizations of women of the country, is one of the newest. It is logically the result rather than the outgrowth of the National Suffrage Association and the American Association for the Advancement of Women. In 1888 and 1889, they began an agitation looking toward a new organization, built upon a much broader basis. This culminated in the first session of the body, which took place in 1891, which was a very remarkable success. The second triennial should have been held in 1894, but as nearly all the members had met in Chicago at the World's Fair, and especially at the World's Congress, and had transacted much of the business which usually comes before the council, they deemed it advisable to postpone the second triennial to the present year, and in the meantime to extend the ramifications of the central body.

Many women of national and even international reputation are in attendance. Some of them are the Countess of Aberdeen, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Russell Sage, Miss Susan B. Anthony, Mrs. Elizabeth B. Grannis, well known in connection with the social purity crusade in New York city; Dr. Jennie de la M. Lozier, the New York physician; Mrs. Laura C. Bullard, of Brooklyn, the millionaire; the female minister of the gospel, Rev. Anna Shaw; Miss Frances E. Willard, Mrs. French Sheldon, the African explorer, and Mme. Albert, the Delsartist. Organizations of women in Germany, France, England, Canada and elsewhere are also present.

"The greatest value of the council," says President Sewall, "is in bringing together women whose lives are in different avenues and whose interests are in different lines of work."

If our young bloods must toss something big to actors and musicians, why not have the gift appropriate and of practical value? A cabbage is almost as large as an ottoman; so is a round of beef or a bag of flour.

Those Brooklyn girls who had to go home by daylight in tights and short skirts can sympathize with boys whose clothes have been stolen while they were in swimming.

HIS TOMB DESERTED.

Work on the Grant Monument Has Been Stopped for the Winter.

The work of building the Grant monument in New York has been stopped for the winter, and the unfinished tomb looks as dreary and deserted as the temporary mausoleum near by. The cold, gray pile is covered with snow, and it is impossible to continue setting the great blocks of granite until the spring weather again drives the frost from the ground. It was intended to put in place the double row of detached columns in front and to complete the porch before the work was suspended, but the cold weather came earlier than was expected and the men were laid off before this was done. The monument, however, has progressed well and is much further on toward completion than is generally supposed.

The foundations, which are sunk down twenty-seven feet in the ground, have been finished, and the main structure has been built up forty-five feet from the ground. The completed dome, however, will rise 165 feet above the ground. It will be seen, therefore, that there is a good deal yet to be done. When work was suspended for the winter the first cornice had been reached and a few of the blocks on the next course of granite were laid. The square part of the monument will rise twenty-seven feet above the first cornice, before the circular part of the structure begins. All of the twelve attached columns that ornament the sides and back of the lower part have been put in place, and most of the ten detached pillars which form the colonnade in front of the porch are also set.

There is nothing comical in the stories that hundreds of families are starving in Oklahoma—the latest land reported to be flowing with milk and honey—but it is funny that people have not let learned by the experience of others that one can't better his condition by emigrating to a wild country, of which he knows nothing.

FOR SCHOFIELD'S BENEFIT.

Bill Reviving the Grade of Lieutenant General Has Been Signed.

The bill passed by Congress for the benefit of Gen. Schofield and which revives the grade of lieutenant-general of the army, has been signed by President Cleveland. General Schofield is now 64 years of age. He graduated from West Point with Sheridan, McPherson and others who afterward distinguished themselves in the civil war. He served two years with the First Artillery and five years as assistant professor of natural philosophy at West Point and then left the army and became professor of physics at Washington University, St. Louis. With the beginning of the civil war, however, he rejoined his old regiment and in 1861 was made its captain. A brave and brilliant soldier, he participated in many engagements, was rapidly promoted, and in 1864 was assigned to the command of the Army of the Ohio. In 1868 he was breveted major-general United States Army, for meritorious services in the battle of Franklin, Tenn., in 1876 appointed superintendent military academy, West Point, and August 24, 1888, assigned to the command of the army of the United States. Gen. Schofield was married in

SENATE AND HOUSE.

WORK OF OUR NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS.

A Week's Proceedings in the Halls of Congress—Important Measures Discussed and Acted Upon—An Impartial Resume of the Business.

The National Solons.

The Administration's bond contract was sharply criticised Monday in the Senate. Senator Gray vigorously defended the President. By a vote of 30 to 27 the Senate decided to take up the Jones free silver bill. The agricultural appropriation bill was passed by the Senate, an attempt to eliminate the irrigation clause being defeated. A provision for the issuance of $100,000,000 in debt certificates was inserted in the sundry civil bill by the Senate Committee on Appropriations. The House passed the bill to make the pensions of all veterans of the Mexican war $12 per month. A bill for an international commission to investigate the condition of the seals was favorably reported to the House. House conferees refuse to agree to the Senate's Hawaiian cable amendment to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. Vilas defended the bond contract in a four-hour speech in the Senate Tuesday. Silverites were unable to force a vote on the Jones bill, but will pass a resolution declaring in favor of free coinage. In reply to a Senate resolution Secretary Carlisle says no necessity exists for providing for a deficit in the revenues. Despite the entreaties of the Illinois members of the House, the Senate Judiciary Committee refuses to report the bill creating an additional district judge. Consideration of the naval appropriation bill was continued in the House. A number of measures were passed. A favorable report has been ordered by the House committee on the bill to pension survivors of the Indian wars. Representatives of the Pacific roads held a conference with the House committee regarding a settlement of the debt to the Government.

Free silver advocates were routed Wednesday in the Senate, the Jones bill being displaced and Wolcott's resolution going to the calendar. During debate on the Indian appropriation bill in the Senate Mr. Chandler said the next Congress would investigate the bond deal. In the naval appropriation bill as adopted by the House was a provision for transfer of the caravels to the Columbian Museum. The naval appropriation bill was passed by the House. Attempts to strike out the provision for three new battle ships failed.

The House Thursday refused to concur in the Senate appropriation for construction of a cable to Hawaii. Consideration of the general deficiency bill was begun, and eulogies on the late Senator Stockbridge were delivered. Congressman Durborow secured adoption of an amendment to the general deficiency bill donating to the Columbian Museum the State Department exhibit at the fair. An acrimonious discussion of the sectarian school question occurred in the Senate during consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Appropriations for the maintenance of Indian schools was reduced Friday by the Senate 20 per cent. The bill is still under discussion. Senator Mills has given notice of an amendment to the sundry civil bill to prohibit the further sale of Government bonds. Senator Blackburn has introduced a bill providing for the payment of the full sugar bounty for the crop of 1893. The House considered the proposition to appropriate money to pay marshals for services during the Chicago railroad strike.

An attempt to take up the railroad pooling bill was defeated in the Senate Saturday and the measure is dead for this session. An amendment was offered to the sundry civil bill in the Senate authorizing the President to appoint commissioners to attend an international monetary conference, should one be called. In the House the general deficiency bill was further considered, and eulogies were delivered on the late Senator Vance. A resolution was introduced in the House looking to reversal of its approval of the President's course during the strike. Chairman Reilly reported the bill agreed on by the House committee for settlement of the debt of the Pacific roads.

The following incident is said to have happened on a Southern railroad, and is reported in Harper's Magazine. The conductor must have been a humorist.

A traveler had come to the station to board the 11:15 train, and much to his surprise, promptly at 11:15 the train started.

"Well," he said to the conductor, as that worthy passed through the car, "they libel you up North when they say your trains never start on time."

"I guess not," said the conductor. "They tell the whole truth. We never got a train off on time yet."

"Why, this train got off on time. It's the 11:15, isn't it?"

"Yes, it's the 11:15, my friend, but it's last Tuesday's 11:15. We're three days late. To-day's 11:15 won't get off much befoh Monday, I reckon."

Does the Boys Good.

One interesting result of the military instruction at seventy-five or eighty colleges in this country has been the noticeable improvement in the carriage of lads that enter college without previous military training. It is noticeable, too, that the youth at those agricultural colleges that have but recently had enough students to entitle the institutions to have an army officer detailed as military instructor show vastly better discipline under such instruction than when the department of military tactics was in charge of civilians.

"That's baby! What a bother she is! Could Janet go to her?"

"I will," said Silence, and vanished from the room.

"That wife of yours is the very kindest of women, Rody; but I hope she will not overfatigue herself," remarked Bella, politely, though making no effort to prevent the fatigue. She always had a trick of never doing for herself what another was willing to do for her. And as she sat in the arm-chair, her feet on the fender, she looked the very picture of luxurious ease, except for the haggard, restless look so sad to see.

"I must leave you," Roderick said. "You know, Bella, I am a working man now, and get my own living."

"Yes, she told me. It must be very disagreeable."

"On the contrary, I rather like it. Daily bread, honestly earned, is far sweeter than the old idleness.

"Is it? Then I wish I could earn mine."

"You have no need, having your own independent fortune."

"Yes; he can't get it, mercifully; mamma tied it up too safe. But neither can I unless she choose. She will do nothing for me unless I stay with my husband 'like a respectable woman,' as she says. I doubt if she will ever forgive my running away—even to my own brother."

"Who, I suppose, is not respectable," said Roderick, bitterly. "Nevertheless, she must be told. Shall I telegraph to her for you this morning?"

He spoke firmly, having already made up his mind to this; but he was not prepared for the agony of terror and misery which came over the unfortunate wife.

"Tell her, and she'll tell my husband, and he will come and fetch me. Not that he cares for me—not a pin; but only for the sake of appearances. Oh, Rody, don't tell anybody. Keep me safe—hide me. If you only knew what I have suffered!"

"My poor Bell, my Heather Bell," said he, tenderly, using the old pet name he had invented for her in the days when they played together "among the broom." At that she quite broke down.

"Oh, I wish I were a girl again. I wish—I wish I had never married. Somebody once said to me that a woman has always a future until she is married, then she has none. Tied and bound—tied and bound forever. And I am but seven-and-twenty."

That look, half appeal, half despair, it went to Roderick's heart, for he knew it was only too true. She was "tied and bound" with the chains she had herself riveted. Even her own brother, however he pitied her, was powerless to set her free.

"Only seven-and-twenty," she repeated. "Such a long life before me—how am I to bear it? 'Till death do us part.' And I can't die. And he—he won't die; these sort of people never do."

"Hush!" said Roderick, turning away aghast. "You don't know what you are saying."

"I do know it only too well. Many a time, when, after raving like a madman, he has sunk to a mere drunken dog, and lain asleep on his bed like a log of wood, I have thought of Jael and Sisera, or Judith and Holofernes, and others of those holy murderesses. If it would only please God to take him, as our minister says! He would be much better in heaven. He couldn't get any drink there."

This ghastly mixture of the horrible and ludicrous, added to what he knew of the utter recklessness of Bella's nature when roused, was almost too much for Roderick to bear. He looked instinctively round for the one who was always at hand, helping him to bear everything; but Silence was still absent upstairs. Then, laying a firm hand on the poor, violent woman, at once violent and weak—it is so often thus—he placed her back in the chair.

"You are talking nonsense, Bella; you know you are; the most arrant nonsense, or worse. Don't be afraid; you have a brother still, who will do his best to take care of you; but you must let me do it in the right way. Nothing cowardly, nothing underhand. Your mother, at least, must be told where you are. My wife says so. She and I were talking it over this morning."

"Very kind."

"It was kind and wise, too," was the grave reply. "Silence is the wisest woman I know."

"And I the most foolish! It looks like it. Very well. Cast me off if you like. Turn me out-of-doors. I'll take the child and go."

But it was only a hysterical impulse which ended in a flood of hysterical tears.

Utterly bewildered and perplexed, Roderick went to the foot of the stairs and called "Silence" in the sharpest tones he had used since his marriage.

"Why do you leave me? You know I can't do without you," he said. Then added, as she descended with the wailing child in her arms, "it is hard for you, too, my wife. Our peaceful days are all done."

"Not quite," she said, smiling—it was wonderful the sweetness of her smile whenever she had that baby in her arms—"I see," when she perceived Bella, and heard her frantic sobbing. "My friend" the loving mon ami which she still used sometimes), "you are of no use here. Leave her to me—women understand women. She will be all right soon. Take your hat and go. Outside work is quite hard enough for you. Good-by, my dearest—dearest!"

She lifted up her face to be kissed—the pale, firm, peaceful face, such a contrast to the other one—opened the door, shut it after him, and watched him safe away. Then, with a great sigh of relief, she went back to her unfortunate sister-in-law.

CHAPTER XIV.

When Roderick came home at night, not without a certain masculine apprehensiveness of domestic worry plainly written on his face, he found the household settled into surprising peace.

In the first place, baby was not crying, but asleep, Janet's young sister being installed as temporary nurse-maid, and a very clever one; and baby's mother, her grand silk dress replaced by a soft woolen one of Silence's—the two women were nearly the same height—sat by the parlor fire. Idle, certainly—Roderick remembered how Bella would sit for an hour "toasting her toes," with her hands before her—but apparently quiet and content. He went up and kissed her with brotherly affection, saying something about his pleasure in having her in his house.

"Then you'll not send me back to mine? You did not telegraph to mamma as you said you would?"

"No."

"Nor write?"

"How could I write to my mother?" said Roderick, with a mixture of pride and sadness. "No; whatever is done, you must do it, not I. We will talk of it after dinner." For he saw that Silence had given herself the unwonted trouble of a late dinner, just to make Bella feel things "more like her own ways." It was a little matter, but it touched the young husband's heart. While he sat talking to his sister his eyes were perpetually following the flitting figure of one who never sat still—never knew what idleness was till she had done everything for everybody.

"That wife of yours makes me so comfortable," said Bella, benignly. "And she is so clever, so inventive, really quite a treasure in a small household. In mine, now, I never could do anything myself as she does. It must be very pleasant."

"Only, perhaps, very fatiguing. My wife, come here and rest, just for five minutes." And as he kissed the tired face he felt sure that the "comfort" which Bella so enjoyed had cost Silence something.

Dinner passed, and the half hour afterward, during which Roderick tried hard to admire his new niece, and to make things as easy and cheerful as possible with his sister. When Silence—always Silence—had put baby to bed, the three gathered round the cozy fire, listening to the howl of the wind and the patter of the rain outside, which only made most peaceful the deep peace within.

"What a quiet, pleasant life you must have here, you two!" said Bella, with a sigh.

They looked at one another and smiled.

"And are you so very poor? What do you live upon?"

"First, there is Blackhall. Then, my wife has her income which cousin Silence left her, and I earn mine. We put the two together—marriage should be a fair partnership."

"But it is not," broke in Bella; "it is mere slavery, unbearable slavery. Oh, that mine was ended! Oh, that I were free!"

Roderick took a hand of his wife and sister. "Let us have a little talk together, and face our position, which is not an easy one. Bella, what do you mean to do?"

"I don't know."

"Then what do you wish me to do?"

"I haven't the slightest idea. But, oh, Rody, why bother me, when I am so comfortable?"

Just the old Bella—easy, pleasure-loving—dwelling only in the present moment, acting entirely on her impulses, of which both the good and the bad ones were equally transitory. There are many such women, who please a great many men—as she had done; who generally find some one or other to bear their burdens for them, and go through life, as she expressed it, quite "comfortably." But as Roderick looked from one to the other of the two beside him, he thought—no, he loyally refused to think—but he instinctively clasped his wife's hand tighter in his own. Small as it was, and tender, that was the hand for a man to cling to, ay, and lean on—as, soon or late, men must lean on women when trouble comes.

"Bella," he said, earnestly, "do you at all understand——"

"I understand that I am henceforth what is called a 'grass widow,'" interrupted she, with a reckless laugh. "Mamma must keep me, or give me my money, and let me keep myself. My husband will never give me a half-penny. And Silence says I ought not to ask him. She has the very oddest notions, that wife of yours."

Roderick pressed the hand he held. "Have you two been talking together?"

"A little."

"And you have told her everything?"

"Everything—made a clean breast of it. A pretty story, isn't it, Silence? But it's at an end now, thank God," said Bella, setting her teeth together. "Even a worm will turn at last."

"Shall you not go back to your husband?—that is, if he will take you back?"

"Trust him for that. He knows on which side his bread is buttered; all the Thomsons do. They were glad enough to catch me, a bright, clever, pretty girl—yes, I was both clever and pretty once, my dear—to be a sort of caretaker or keeper over him; he needs a keeper when he is drunk. And a wife is the best sort of one—saves appearances. Thomsons as well as Jardines would do anything in the world to save appearances."

Roderick made no answer. He knew it was true. The sight of his sister had brought back the memory of many a boyish struggle, quixotic as vain, against the predominant spirit of the family—a family in which the first question that arose was never "Is it right?" or "Is it wrong?" but only "Is it expedient?"

This law of expediency, not righteous prudence, but petty, worldly wisdom, had been at the root of Bella's marriage. Those who had the making of it, would they not on the same principle do their best to prevent its being unmade? He felt sure his mother would. Anything, everything, she would sacrifice rather than be "talked about," as the world would talk, if there was a public separation between Mr. and Mrs. Thomson—two people who, in their own opinion and that of their respective families, held such a very important place in society.

He knew his mother and the rest would view the catastrophe, as they had viewed the marriage which resulted in it, solely from the standpoint of society. No higher law that what the world would think and say ever actuated or guided them. In old times he had dimly guessed this—secondarily and chiefly by its effect on his silent, patient father; but now, when he himself came to man's estate, and viewed things with his own eyes, he saw it clearly.

Still, this affair was, as all such cases are, most complicated and difficult; and in it Roderick's own position was not the least painful. To act a brother's part toward his poor sister he did not shrink from; but to aid and abet a runaway wife in concealing herself from her husband was most galling, not only to his pride, but to his sense of honor. Yet to thrust her from him into hopeless misery was worse than cruel, dangerous, knowing her temperament, which was to escape from present pain as foolishly as a child does, at any future risk and cost. The medium course, to come boldly forward and insist upon the separation she desired, was equally difficult and responsible for any brother, being himself a man and a husband.

Roderick looked at his own wife, growing closer to him every day, in the mutual dependence which so gently and naturally replaces passion, and gives to both that ineffable rest, of unseparated joys, and divided cares.

"Bella," he said, in a moved voice, "do you know, my dear, exactly what you are doing, or wish to do? Remember what your Bible says: 'What God hath joined let no man put asunder.'"

"But God did not join us; it was the devil, I think," she answered, with a bitter laugh. "And if all other help fails, the devil shall help me to get rid of him."

"What do you mean?"

"Never mind. Wait till I'm driven desperate. I am nearly already. If only I could tear off this." She took hold of her marriage ring and made as though she would throw it into the fire. "If at any price, at any cost, I could be Bella Jardine again, and never more set eyes upon that brute, that fool, that——"

"Hush!" said Silence, "He's baby's father."

"Ah, that's it—that's the misery. I don't hate my child. I did at first, but not now; it's nature, I suppose. Besides, she is my child, all that I have of my own; and even that is half his, if he chooses to claim her. Oh, Rody, what must I do? what can I do?"

It was, indeed, a piteous strait. The one false step, marriage, unconsecrated by love, almost as great a sin as love unconsecrated by marriage, had brought its own punishment with it. The young pair, to whom these things appeared as a ghastly nightmare, scarcely comprehensible as a daylight reality, instinctively drew closer together, while they regarded the hapless woman, who had, as she truly said, no future. A loathing wife, an unthankful mother, what future could she have, either in herself or in "the world," for which she had sacrificed so much and gained so little?

What could she do? As she put the question her despairing eyes supplied the answer. Nothing!

"I know very little about these things," said Roderick, sadly; "but I believe there are two ways of parting man and wife—by divorce, enabling both to marry again, and by judicial separation. But, oh! the pain, the scandal of it! Think of your child; think, too, of your mother!"

While using this argument he knew its futility. Whether from disposition or circumstances, Bella had always been that rather rare character among women—a woman who thinks only of herself. With a perplexed longing for help, for counsel, her brother turned to the other woman beside him.

"What does my wife say?"

"I don't care what she says—what anybody says," cried Bella, violently. "I have no love for him; I never had. It is a simple question of money. If I run away, how am I to keep myself and the child? She says—that voice of wisdom there—that if I leave him I ought not to accept a half-penny from him. Very well; get mamma to maintain me, or else I'll maintain myself."

"How?"

"I don't know or care. It may not be for long. He will drink himself to death one of these days."

Roderick turned away in horror, but Silence laid a firm, stern hand on her sister-in-law's arm.

"One word more such as that, and we will neither of us help you."

Bella shrunk into submission, even a little shame, then burst into piteous entreaties.

What the Twelve Existing Cables Cost and How Many Miles They Cover.

There are now twelve transatlantic cables connecting Europe with Canada and the United States, and steps have been taken to lay a cable across the Pacific from British Columbia to Australasia, by way of the Fiji Islands, says the Boston Journal. The circle of the earth will then be completed, but not so directly as it would be by a cable from America to Japan. There are now 152,000 miles of submarine cable, in round numbers, of which 10 per cent has been supplied by various governments, and the rest by private enterprise. They connect into one system over 2,000,000 miles of land wires, ramifying in different countries. The cables have cost about $200,000,000, and the land lines $325,000,000. Telegraphy controls the commerce of the world, which has risen to nearly $20,000,000,000 a year, or, more precisely, $9,700,000,000 of exports and $8,600,000,000 of imports. It enables international disputes to be settled without recourse to arms, as in 1881, when the British cabinet was in direct communication with the Boer leaders of the Transvaal. It brings a war that has broken out to a speedy conclusion, and keeps the public informed of its hourly progress, as in the case of Egypt, where the bombardment of Alexandria was known in London a few minutes after the first shot was fired, and telegrams were dispatched from the battlefield of Suakim, in the Eastern Soudan, while the fight was going on. Above all, by putting the remotest parts of the earth in contact with each other, it tends to destroy the barriers of isolation and prejudice, making antipathy give way to sympathy, and hatred to loving kindness.

Things at the office had gone wrong with a certain downtown benedict one day last week, and he reached home that evening in a rather unpleasant frame of mind. The adorable partner of his joys and sorrows met him at the door and embraced him in such a tender manner that he resigned himself to the inevitable demand for some of the "root of all evil" which he knew was coming.

"I suppose you want an entire wardrobe this time," quoth her "hub" gruffly. And this is the song she did sing: "Now, dearest, you know that I have nothing that is fit to be seen in, and I saw a nice red morning gown to-day, with slippers to match, and such a cute little red bonnet, that I am just dying to get them."

The "lord of the manor" regarded her in silence for a moment, and then said: "It strikes me, Cynthia, that you require the services of a physician."

"Why, what do you mean?"

"Well, to my mind, you show unmistakable symptoms of scarlet fever."—Philadelphia Call.

English Estates.

Seventeen wills, each representing personally above $2,500,000, have been offered for probate so far this year in England, being the largest number in seven years. The Third Duke of Sutherland left the largest estate, $6,300,000, and four others were more than $5,000,000 each. Of the seventeen fortunes five were left by brewers, one by a wine merchant, three by bankers, one each by a colliery owner, a thread manufacturer (Clark of Paisley), a silk mercer (Marshall, of Marshall and Snelgrove), an iron merchant (the Earl of Bective), a cotton spinner, a dyer, and a merchant. The late Lord Tweedmouth appears as a brewer. Together their sworn value was over $66,000,000.

Australia has more places of public worship in proportion to population than any other country.

Abraham Lincoln was undoubtedly the tallest president; he was 6 feet, 4 inches in height. The shortest was probably Benjamin Harrison, although Van Buren and John Adams were very short men. The oldest president was William Henry Harrison, who was 68 years and 1 month old when inaugurated; the youngest was Grant, who was not quite 47 years old.

EARLY SPRING GEMS

WILL MAKE MILADY LOOK LIKE A HUNTRESS.

Winter Wraps Will Not Retire Without a Struggle—Suggestion for Her Who Must Exercise Economy—Harbinger of the Autumn Styles.

The Newest Thing.

COAKS and capes are to have one very strange sort of successor in the early spring days when the air is still chilly. These are the most terrifying exaggerations of the little harmless beastie, almost as big as a carriage rug or door mat. The animal appears to have been split and laid flat open, and his head comes right in the middle of the square end, while at the other end are several tails because one would look lonesome. A pair of big claws hang at the corners of the head end, and the whole effect makes a woman look as if she were just home from the hunt with her catch over her shoulder, rather than a harmless and frivolous woman who will wear anything fashion dictates. But before these strange devices are available, the garments that serve in severe weather are biding by means of new designs for prolonged life. A bidder that was deserving of success was a magnificent new cloak of pearl-gray corduroy, and its wearer fairly flaunted it in the faces of observers less fortunate than she, to whom came at once the dread thought, "She can wear it but two months!" The garment came to the hem of the dress, was close-fitting, and over the shoulders fell three full capes, each lined with black and edged with a narrow row of sable. The capes stopped at the edges of an inserted vest of black velvet that reached from the high velvet collar to the vest line. This effect relieved the upper part of the cloak of the bunchiness of three all around capes. The sleeves were very large at the shoulders, causing the capes to stand almost horizontally over them. At the wrists velvet cuffs turned back, the velvet throughout being heavily crusted with gold embroidery. The entire cloak was lined with the heaviest black satin. Above all the edging of fur ran a tiny line of scarlet topped with gold, and the waist line a belt of scarlet and gold fastened under a magnificent rhinestone and jet buckle.

Another staggerer to the woman who must exercise economy is shown beside the initial. It is made of pine-green velvet, lined with hyacinth purple satin merveilleux, and falls in two deep box pleats in the front of the skirt, the fullness being taken in at the waist by four heavy shirrings. Collar, trimming and muff are blue fox fur, and a large bow of black satin ribbon has a conspicuous position. The sleeves are new and are finished with flaring cuffs of embroidered satin. The chief interest of such garments to most women lies in the fact that they will probably be reflected in the styles of next autumn. Besides, if a thing of beauty be a lasting joy, the contemplation of such handsome garments should cause satisfaction. It will to the wearers, depend on't!

More simple of cut are little capes that come to the hips and that are made double of delicate shades of broadcloth, and lately of crepon. But money tells even in them, once consideration gets beyond the question of dimensions, for they are lined with satin and finished with high collar and edging all about of white, fluffy fur. Still, they are, with good judgment in selecting materials, not expensive, either to purchase outright or to make, and are very serviceable. The general use of dark skirts has made the need for the long cloak less urgent than ever before, and these little affairs are especially pretty and convenient for theater use. They make a pretty background, as they rest over the chair, and they are not in the way or liable to be crushed and spoiled as is a longer garment.

With the time for discarding heavy wraps passed, the tailor girl will, in all probability, be much less numerous; but gowns that put her in mind will be plentiful. The first picture of full column size shows an example. Of dark gray broadcloth, it is made with a gored and funnel pleated skirt, and lined with heavy black silk. The garniture of skirt and bodice consists of interlaced straps of light gray cloth, and the jacket which turns back in large revers with turned down collar, is piped with a wide bias fold of the same. The bodice fastens in the center beneath the strap garniture.

With nothing about them that suggests the tailor maid are the next two gowns shown, though they are not elaborate, and in that respect constitue a straw that acts as a vane for fashion's coming breezes. It may be relied on that with spring well advanced there is a marked departure from the passing season's frivolity of design. At the left side of the picture there is a dark-brown silk dress trimmed with jet passementerie. The gored skirt is stiffened, lined with silk and edged with a jet border. The jacket bodice has a short pleated basque, but is plain over the hips. A velvet belt encircles the waist and the gathered vest laps over. Jet trimming edges the fichu collar and sleeves.

The dress beside this is composed of royal blue silk, trimmed with pale lavender ottoman silk and open jet galloon. The skirt's front breadth is garnished with three two-inch bias folds of the light silk and passementerie. The same appears on the bodice, which fastens on the side and has a small round yoke with collar to match, of the light silk. Lavender points edged with jet show through slashes in the cuffs and the belt ends in a big bow in front.

Many new bodices have fronts and backs that apparently do not belong together. One in mind has a close-fitting back of peach velvet, the front being a blouse of pale green chiffon laid in close pleats, every seven pleats being separated by a band of spangled gold galloon. The chiffon blouse front is made over peach-colored satin, but the foundation does not show. Sleeves of green satin so encrusted with gold that the color of the satin is hidden, have great puffs to the elbow and are completed by a little fold of gray velvet that is lined with blue satin. Tiny handkerchief ends peep out from under the droop of the great gold puff. The idea of the touch of gray is to harmonize the sleeve with the dove color glove that is now the correct wear for dress occasion. With a model like this in mind no woman need despair of a bodice if she can muster enough odds and ends.

That doesn't look much like the beginning of an era of simplicity, and neither does the next pictured dress, though its details are less fanciful, but the era is beginning, nevertheless. Plum-colored velvet is used for this dress, and spangled and jetted galloon trims it. Plum-colored moire lines the skirt, which is cut with a tiny train and trimmed at the foot of the front breadth by a wide galloon band. The bodice fastens at the side, the front being ornamented with a yoke banded with narrow galloon and a full vest of spangled net. It is further enriched with several bows of plum-colored satin ribbon.

Finally there is shown a bluet cloth gown with a very wide skirt trimmed with two rows of black velvet appliqué figures. A deep velvet yoke and vest show on the waist, the remainder, with the sleeves, being of cloth ornamented to match the skirt. Gilt spangles are embroidered on to the yoke.

Little side bows are appearing to flutter over the softly bunched rolls of hair that now cover the ears of our belles. These bows as yet are purely ornamental and serve only to increase the extension of the coiffure from side to side. Later they will have a more practical excuse in covering and securing the ends of the little false side curls that are sure to come into use, for fashion demands a bigger showing of hair over the ears than any ordinary head can supply.

To Sweeten the Breath.

A woman who adores onions and says she would eat them anyhow because of their salutary effect on her complexion, avers that the scent can be entirely removed, no matter how they have been served, if you drink a cup of black coffee immediately after eating them. She says also that a clove or wintergreen cream will remove the smell of wine from the breath, and that she uses a gargle of camphor and myrrh if she gets the idea that her breath is the least bit tainted.

Theodorus—"I always read the parliamentary reports very carefully, but have never come across any speech of yours yet." Bernard (M. P.)—"How is that? Have you never noticed the words 'Cheers and Hear, Hear?' That's where I come in."—Stulvers Blad.

"Men are such inconsistent creatures," sighed Mrs. Witterby. "It was only the other day they were enthusiastic about smashing the machine at the polls, and now I see that they are going to vote by machinery. What won't they do next?"—Brooklyn Life.

Whimsicus—"I always knew that thirteen was an unlucky number! Jollicus gave an awfully swell dinner the other night, and there were just thirteen at table." Flimsicus—"Well, what happened?" Whimsicus—"What happened? Why, I wasn't invited!"—Judge.

"Dear me," said Mr. Meekins, "it seems absurd for men to be constantly talking about their wives having the last word. I never object to my wife having the last word." "You don't?" "Not a bit. I always feel thankful when she gets to it."—Washington Star.

Jenny Lind, the Swedish Nightingale

The Swedish nightingale, Jenny Lind, rivaled either Mara or Catalani in the purity and flexibility of her vocal organs, and excelled both in the fortunate circumstances that in her retirement she was complimented with more attention than during the height of her career. She was well paid, too. In a single season in this country, to which she came in 1850 with Barnum as her manager, she cleared over £20,000, or $100,000, as her share of the profits, for the people went wild about her on every public appearance.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25, 1895.

It is a toss-up whether Congress will, during its remaining week of life, make, the immediate calling of an extra session necessary. It can do this by the adoption of objectionable amendments to the regular appropriation bills, or by failure to pass one or more of the regular appropriation bills. President Cleveland will certainly veto any appropriation bill that has objectionable amendments tacked upon it, and there is no question that several of those which are pending belong to the objectionable class. There is an enormous lot of work yet to be done to get the appropriation bills through, and some of the proposed financial amendmends will be certain to cause bitter and more or less extended debate, which will leave just that much less time for solid work There is no good reasons why any of the appropriation bills should fail, and if any does it will be the result of a put-up job, and the republicans dread an early extra session too much themselves to engage in that sort of thing just now. But in Congress there are others.

No appointment made by President Cleveland has given more satisfaction in Congress, regardless of political opinions, than that of Senator Ransom to be minister to Mexico. The unanimous confirmation of his nomination without references to committee was moved by Senator Sherman, who took occasion to speak in the highest terms of the fitness of the nomination and of the ability, character and patriotism of Senator Ransom. He will be thoroughly at home in Mexico, as he speaks both French and Spanish.

There was a meeting of silver men here Saturday and it is understood that they discussed plans for a silver Presidential ticket. It was significant that none of the republicans silver men in Congress attended this meeting

Hon. Walter B Ritchie of Lima, Ohio, Supreme Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, is in Washington on Pythian business. He keeps posted on the political situation in his state, and he does not consider McKinley's prospects bright. He said: "It is doubtful whether Gov. McKinley will command the solid support of his own State delegation for the Presidential nomination Some of the leading men of his party care very little for McKinley, and will knife him at the first opportunity. State pride may cause them to give a sort of lukewarm adherence to his candidacy, but they will not stand by him through thick and thin. They realize that the McKinley idea of the tariff has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. It would be too heavy a load in 1896, and they are not going to assume the burden."

In accordance will the opinion that President Cleveland has several times expressed, the Senate committee on appropriations has agreed to an amendment to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, appropriating $5,238,289 to pay the bounty on sugar produced in 1893 at the old rate and to pay eight-tenths of a cent a pound upon the crop of 1894.

Secretary Herbert is much pleased that the House adopted his recommendation for building three battle ships, and he has no expectation that the Senate will do otherwise, but he deeply regrets that so many democrats worked and voted against the battle ship clause of the Naval appropriation bill, in the House, although fully aware that it was a matter of conscience and principle with those who did so.

The Senate still insists upon acceptance by the House of its Hawaiian cable amendment, although the latter has once by a yea and nay vote refused to do so. The amendment is now for the second time in conference.

The Howgate trial ended with a hung jury. The District Attorney says he has other indictments upon which Howgate will be tried. It is said that the reason the trial was so tame and free from the expected sensational developments was that parties who might have been compromised convinced Howgate that the art of "fixing" a jury was still practiced, for consideration, by experts, and further that he would not have to furnish the "consideration."

It is believed that the railroad pooling bill was finally shelved when the Senate by a vote of 42 to 24 refused to take it up.

Senator Wolcott is afraid that some of the European countries might during the Congressional vacation get in the notion to hold an international monetary conference and find the United States unprepared to take part therein. In order to avoid such a predicament he has offered an amendment to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, authorizing the President to appoint three commissioners, should they be needed, to act with a joint Congressional committee of six as representatives of the U. S.

A POPULAR TRAVELER.

The Sky Terrier, of the U. S. Mail Service, Honors Columbia City with a Visit.

Columbia City Post.

For some time past a good photograph of a one-eyed Sky terrier dog has been the property of the present postmaster of Columbia City. Yesterday the photo was on exhibition over the money order window at the postoffice and within the pigeon hole enclosure with the P. M. and clerks was the dog himself, and he certainly could not deny that he had "sat" for the picture. There is a slight discrepancy in the picture compared to the dog of to day and that is, he does not wear the belt around his middle which is as thoroughly covered with metal labels and trinkets as old Ben. Blair's celebrated cane. Last summer the weight of the belt, during the heated term, chafed the dog's skin and made him sore, and it was removed

The visitor in question is the noted dog traveler, Owney, who for seven years has made his home in mail cars among the mail bags, one of which almost always constitutes his bed. He has traveled to all parts of the United State and has come to be a fixture of the U. S. mail service. The department at Washington is constantly informed as to his whereabouts and all his movements are carefully recorded.

Last summer Owney visited the Ft. Wayne postmaster, at which time an invitation was extended to him to "drop off" at Columbia City some time. Being reliably informed that the P. M. at this place was an admirer of the canine race, the invitation was favorably received, and Monday evening he concluded to fill his engagement here. The mail clerks introduced him to Mail Carrier Baker and the two U. S. officials rode up town seated side by side on the mail wagon. Owney met the postmaster and by the rapid motion of his stumpy tail manifested both pleasure and delight over the meeting. He had already been to supper and politely declined a nice bowl of bread and milk.

Owney started upon his career of itineracy at Albany, N. Y., when very young and the habit has grown on him so that he is a confirmed tramp. His presence in this city caused a throng of people to call at the postoffice and pay their respects to him. However, he is not fond of notoriety and apparantly cares nothing for pomp and glory. In fact the gaze of the curious throng seemed to annoy him and he sharply rebuked them for their impertinence.

On his collar are a number of medals bearing various inscriptions, most of them bearing the names of eastern cities. Spokane, Washington, is among them, and is the only western town represented. Owney is in splendid condition and is evidently not troubled with dyspepsia or indigestion. His right eye is blind. He is a dirty blue color and about as handsome as the average sky terrier. He departed last evening for Chicago, well pleased with his visit in Columbia City, and will no doubt recall it with pleasure for many years to come.

To Our Advertisers.

Now is a good time to speak of several things that concern both the COURIER and its advertisers. Copy for new ads. or for a change of ad, should be brought in as early as possible, even if it comes in the next day after the paper is out. Do not put it off till we are in a rush at the last moment. Whenever the copy is prepared bring it right in. Then if for any reason it is absolutely necessary to change someone's ad at a late hour, it can be done, whereas if all wait till late someone will get left. It takes no more work or thought to prepare an advertisment on Friday than it does on Tuesday.

Again each advertiser should keep watch of his advertisment, and see that it is in proper shape. Sometimes it happens that the advertiser forgets to state how many times he wants it inserted in its present form, and as the printer may not know, an unseasonable ad will be running that is of little or no value. There should be constant care on the part of both advertiser and paper, but the advertiser is the one most interested and who best understands just his wants.

A Poultry Association.

Quite a number of our people are talking up a poultry association for this county, with a view to the improvement of this very important interest. In an interview with E. T. Cochran, we learn that steps are being taken to this end, and a meeting will be held to-morrow evening, Friday, March 1, at the express office of Weaver Brothers, when an organization will be effected. All interested in poultry should be present and assist in the good work. Let it be remembered that generally through the recent hard times and low prices, that the price of eggs and poultry has kept up better than any other product. There is always a demand at fair prices.

SILVER men are hard to suit. Cleveland's new loan is made payable in 'coin' that is either silver or gold. Yet they object to it.

SENATOR MATT W. RANSOM of North Carolinia has been appointed minister to Mexico in place of Gov. Gray. It is considered a good choice.

WITHIN a few days gold that had been shipped abroad has been coming back by the millions. The President's plan may after all be a good thing and stop the outflow of gold from this country and from the U. S. treasury.

IF CONGRESS did not like Cleveland's plan of selling bonds payable in "coin" why did they not invent a different plan. He almost begged them to enable him to make a loan that would bear a lower interest and save 16 millions. But they refused and many are now complaining about the high rate of interest he agreed to pay.

RESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

Mrs. J. B. Shaffer is on the sick list.

Dexter Faucett is having a siege with the chickenpox.

Mr. and Mrs Dan Leas attended the hop at Angola on Friday night,

Mrs. Rowland residing east of town was buried Saturday at 10 a. m.

Miss Ollie McClure came over from Auburn and spent a few days with her mother.

The little son of Mrs. Edward Ettinger was taken suddenly very sick last Saturday, but is better now.

Charles Carr and Bertia Rickel were married last Thursday. Both are well known and popular young people.

Saturday evening Mr. and Mrs. Lee Stamets entertained a number of friends at pedro. There was a fine social time, and a dainty lunch was served.

Mrs. Sam. Beck is at Toledo visiting friends. About March 15, she will start for Tacoma, Wash., where her daughter, Mrs. Frank Blattner and husband reside.

E. R. Shoemaker has again been seriously ill. But we learn that his physician, Dr. Showalter, thinks he will succeed in bringing him out all right.

Miss Ida Shaffer was married to Mr. Lee. Beggs, of Butler, on Saturday evening Feb 23, at the home of the bride's mother.

James Till a well known resident of this place was buried here Sunday. The funeral was at the Evangelical church and conducted by Rev. Mr. Snyder.

Mrs. Sarah Lutz invited about twenty ladies to a quilting and rag bee on last Thursday. A feast of good things was prepared by the hostess, to which all did ample justice.

Mrs. Tim. McClure, who has been in the hospital in Cleveland for some time has returned home much improved in health, and her family hope now for her full restoration to health.

Mrs. Sarah Edge and little granddaughter, of Warsaw, who have been here for two weeks, returned home Saturday. Their visit was shortened by the ill health of the child. She spent some days with her sister in the country.

James Till died last Thursday morning and was buried Sunday. The services were held at the U. B. church. Mr. Till was one of the old settlers here. He had been in failing health for some time. His wife died some years ago. He leaves four sons and five daughters.

Cyrus Bowman met with a serious accident Friday. In felling a tree pinning him to the ground. Those who were with him got him loose, and he was taken home. He was seriously bruised but no bones broken. At latest reports was doing well.

Rejected all Bids.

The commissioners met on Tuesday to receive bids for the three bridges they have to put up this year. The various bridge builders had men on the ground as early as Monday, and by the time they were all here there must have been about thirty of them. At all events, the bids for the stone work numbered ten and there were twenty three for the bridges. The Board took them under consideration that day and yesterday forenoon, and examined them all carefully. It was found that none were satisfactory in the bids on bridges. Some were too high and some were defective in not being plain enough or in not agreeing with the plans of the board. So all were rejected and a new trial will have to be had. The Board will fix its plans, and bidders will have to make their bids so as to conform to the sort of work and material required. For instance, if the work must be of a given strength and quality, and of a certain construction, the bids must have that in view. The stone work, however, was more nearly satisfactory, and they may accept one of the bids for that. The Board have their eyes opened to the needs of this expensive work and do not propose to take any chances.

Paid in January.

The following patrons have paid various sums on subscription during the month of January.

DeKalb County Endeavor Rally

J. F. Shuman informs us that the County Rally of the Christian Endeavor will be held in Butler on Saturday, March 16, both day and evening. The evening sermon will be delivered by Rev. F. C. Colvin, of the Auburn Presbyterian church. Those who attend from this place can go over on the 5:21 train on the Wabash, or at 2 o'clock afternoon, though that would be pretty late. Returning, it is hoped that the evening trains on both the Wabash and Lake Shore can be held an hour, to enable all to hear the evening's exercises. We hope to see a good turnout to this meeting.

LOST:—A garnet pin. Finder will be suitably rewarded by calling at A. J. Ralston's.

George Clark has bought out John Keeran in the Union Bakery, he and Lin Thomas being now the sole proprietors.

J. R. Steves has returned from an extended visit with Mr. Purinton's folks at Angola.

If you want good Fire, Life or Accident Insurance call on Walter C. Hartman.

Judge Powers came down from Angola Tuesday, on some legal matter we suppose.

FOUND:—at the Presbyterian church Monday evening a gold headed umbrella, Owner can get it by calling on Mrs. J. A. Barns.

Miss Annie Ilgers went up to Morenci, Mich., to visit relatives a few days, after which she returns to her home in Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

Dr. Matheny looks quite cosy in his new office across to the north of the Swineford House. He and Dr. L. A. Hines are partners and have without doubt, their share of business.

FOR SALE:—I have two Fire and Burglar Proof Safes, Hall's Patent, either of which I will sell cheap and on terms to suit the purchaser. Call on or address,
CHAS. M. BROWN, Auburn, Ind.

Mrs. Aurelia Parsons Strong has been visiting her cousin here, Mrs Wm. Ashelman for about three weeks. Her father was Orla A. Parsons who kept a hotel in Auburn on North Cedar Street about 1843.

Elton Campbell, at Detroit has been promoted in the railway service being now a baggage man, and getting $15 a month more. His wife is visiting his people, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Campbell at Wabash.

Mrs. James McIntosh and daughters, Mrs. Addie Prout and Mrs. Clara Hulce, visited the family of W. H. McIntosh on Monday. Mrs McIntosh and Mrs. Prout reside at Honey Creek, Wisc, and Mrs. Hulce is a teacher of Elocution in the College at Hillsdale Mich.

The Musical Club had its first public night at the Presbyterian church Monday evening. The room was crowded, for our people have come to look forward to this "last Monday in the month" when the public are admitted. The club labored under difficulties to some extent as they had not been able to meet recently for practice, still they did well and won the usual generous applause.

A great revival has been going on at the new church at Butler Center. The meetings are conducted by Rev. Mr Scott of the M. P. church. Over 50 have united with the church. Among these are such prominent citizens as W. H. Fair and family, John Heitz, Adam Heitz, Ambrose Heitz, Gust Helmuth, Nicholas Lung, Adam Lung, Henry Zerns, Henry L. Houser, Geo. Reeves, Elmer Haines, John Kitchen and wife, Jacob Chisholm, Frank Batdorf, the mother of the Heitz brothers, now 78 years old, and many others.

C. P. Houser and family go this week to their new home at Kokomo to be nearer Mr. Houser's field of work as he has several counties there to write up the biographal sketches of old soldiers, a work in which he has met with signal success. He and Virgil drive through to Peru and at that place Mrs. Houser will join them Saturday evening. She remains here till that day to attend the entertainment given to the children of the club by the L. L. C. They have been citizens among us so long that they will be greatly missed. We trust, however, that they may be eminently successful in their new field.

While in Chicago last Thursday evening Archie McIntyre had the opportunity of hearing Miss Stella Merica, daughter County Superintendent Merica, play a violin solo at an entertainment and reception given by the Y. M. C. A. He says judging from the applause she received even before her piece was finished and after she was through, that her music was highly appreciated for they were long and vigorous. Miss Merica was accompanied on the piano by Prof. Garwood, one of the finest players in the city. Mr. Garwood is a brother of Don. A. Garwood of this place. The intertainment was a rare treat.

The Indiana University has issued an announcement for the spring and summer terms of 1895. It is a pamphlet of 31 pages and gives a list of the faculty as at present constituted, a brief synopsis of the courses offered for the spring term, and a somewhat fuller statement of the work offered for the summer session. In these terms a considerable number of courses is offered especially for teachers, as there are many who are engaged in teaching during the rest of the year who find it possible to attend the University during one or both of these terms. The University has seventeen departments and forty-five active members in its faculty. The brief educational history of each member of the faculty which follows his name shows that a large number of colleges and universities, both American and European, has contributed to the training of the faculty of our State University. The summer school this year offers attractive courses in each of the ten following departments, English, Mathematics, Chemistry, Physics, Zoology, Psychology and Pedagogy, History, Botany, Latin, and German. All university publications will be sent to any one upon application to President Joseph Swain, Bloomington, Ind.

Sanders VanAuken, eldest son of Frank VanAuken is repoated very sick at his father's home at Pleasant Lake.

The Zimmerman Mfg. Co. have resumed buying elm hub timber for a short time.

Hon. E D. Hartman was at Angola last week, as special judge to try several of the U. B. church cases, about which there has been so much trouble.

Mrs. Julia E. M. Hodge went to Ann Arbor Tuesday and will remain there a month or more with her daughter Julia, who is attending the University.

Surveyor VanAuken went up to Angola Tuesday, and will visit his brother Frank at Pleasant Lake before returning.

After the regular program of the S. H. G. Saturday Mrs. McIntyre surprised the ladies by serving a light tea. It was greatly enjoyed by all present.

Elmer E. Stamets, of Waterloo, was here Tuesday, to qualify as administrator of the estate of the late James Till. His wife is Mr. Till's eldest daughter.

Will Heck who had been to attend the funeral of Myron Lawrence at Columbia City stopped here over Sunday on his way back to Lansing. He was the guest of Helen Ralston while here.

Henry Reichard of Fairfield was among our callers last week. Like a great many farmers, he came to pay his taxes while work was slack, so that when spring work begins he will not have to stop.

Mr. Gordon is having the postoffice rooms fixed up in good shape and neatly papered. It will improve things there very decidedly. Steele and Son do the work.

INSURANCE AGENCY:—People desiring good insurance should remember that Geo. Lanuing has an office at the Davis Harware store, and works some of the very best companies in the country. Good farm risks taken. Call on him. 32tf

Geo. Shugers was down here the first part of the week but returned to Coldwater Tuesday. He and his brother Frank are doing an extensive business making bicycles, the "Shugers Special," having already finished over 400.

The Misses Shull & Askew will go to Chicago Saturday to make selections for their stock of new spring millinery. The ladies will have a trimmer from the city, and expect a much nicer line of millinery than they have ever before handled.

DeKalb county now has two of its young men in prominent positions at the State University at Bloomington. Horace A Hoffman is professor of Greek and Dean of the Department of Liberal Arts; Charles J. Sembower, of Garrett, is Instructor in English;

Noah Lung, father of Mrs. Robert Showers, died at the home of his son, Samuel, near Cedar, Ind., Monday of last week after an illness of only a few days. He was 80 years, 6 months and 22 days of age. He leaves children, grandchildren and great-grand-children,

Geo. Duncan came down from Elkhart last week, to attend the funeral of his wife's father, James Till, who was buried Sunday, Monday he came over here and spent a few hours. He reports the DeKalb folks well in general. Will Hornberger has sold out out to his brother Charlie, who is going on with their manufacturing business. Will is on his own hook putting in electric fixtures, etc.

A new opera house, to be located on the site of the one that was destroyed by fire, is now talked of The parties who have the matter in hand are men of enterprise and should be encouraged in every way by our citizens. The building will likely be of brick with a stone basement. The basement, we are told, will be fitted up in nice style and can be used for balls, etc., while the Opera House itself will be on the first floor. There may also be another story above the Opera House for offices or lodge rooms.

C P. Houser came up from Peru last Saturday night to attend the entertainment given at the Armory by R. H Hendershot, the Drummer Boy, and to confer with him in reference to securing data and his consent to publish his biography in the Soldier's History which he is representing in this state. Mr. Houser will leave nothing undone to make his work interesting to the many soldiers who more than thirty years ago left friends and home to take their chances for life or death on the desperately fought battle fields of the civil war.

South Bend Tribune—That is not a bad idea adopted by a Lafayette, Ind., church which provides three nurses to care for the babies while the mother listens to the preacher's sermon. The minister is probably the originator of the plan which was evolved after he had been interrupted in a flight of eloquence by the unearthly screech of some poor infant belonging to an unfeeling mother. It is a christian motive which prompts the attempted inculcation of a religious sense in the infant being, but the infusion process should be confined to the nursery and not practiced in the church auditorium.

Smoke the K. & B. ten-cent cigar.

O. C. Clark, of Garrett, was in town Saturday.

Mrs. Nate Alvord is visiting relatives at Ligonier.

Wanted: Everybody to smoke Kessler & Bros. cigars.

Charley Hoff is again at his old place as clerk in Frank Hoff's grocery.

Miss Lena Zimmerman was the guest of friends in Waterloo over Sunday.

The more "Dingers" you smoke the more you want to smoke. At Bishop's tobacco store.

A. H. Gillis of Kendallville, was in town Friday, looking after business matters.

If you are crazy for something good in cigars try Kessler Bros. brands.

Mrs. S. J. Zimmerman is in Chicago visiting her daughter, Mrs. Frank Davenport.

Dingers! DINGERS!! DINGERS!!! Oh, what good smokers Bishop's Dingers are!

S. J. Lige one of our earliest subscribers remembered the COURIER very kindly last week.

There has been a change in prices on the telephone. It is now 20 cents for three minutes and 30 cents for five.

Dr. Johnston, dentist, has the new method of filling teeth without pain, as well as painless extraction of teeth.

Miss Mary Essig, who is teaching school at Butler Center was in town over Sunday the guest in the family of J. K. Stafford.

The neatest, sweetest and completest smoke is the "Dinger." If you don't believe it just try one. Manufactured by E. M. Bishop.

Engine and boiler, all attachments complete, will be sold cheap. Together or separately. Now in operation at 65 E. Columbia St. Fort Wayne, Ind.

The C. L. S. C. will meet Saturday afternoon with Mrs. S. M. Nickey.

The L. L. C. will meet this week with Mrs. Davenport.

The Rathbone Sisters will give an entertainment at Armory Hall March 12 and 13, Burlesque imitiation. Very laughable. All come.

The nickel social of the Presbyterian church will meet with Mrs. W. Askew, on VanBuren St., one door north of Lutheran church on Friday afternoon. The ladies of the church are requested to be present.

A QUIET WEDDING.

A quiet but very pretty wedding took place at the beautiful and commodious home of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Henning of Waterloo Tuesday evening which united in the bonds of holy matrimony their daughter, L. Estelle, to George C. Clark of Auburn. The wedding march was played by Miss Allie Grube and at just eight thirty o'clock the happy couple appeared taking their stand directly in under the arch connecting the sitting room and parlor when Rev. W. R. Suman, pastor of the M. E. church at LaGrange, in a very pleasing manner performed the ceremony.

The bride was attired in a lovely white brocade silk dress trimmed in faille silk and carried a boquet of bridal roses. The groom wore a plain black dress suit. After congratulations Mr. and Mrs. Clark and friends were invited to the dining room where the table was spread with many delicious fruits, ice cream and other substantial necessaries.

Miss Henning is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H M. Henning and is highly respected by all who know her. She is a member of the M. E. church and Epworth League and one of the foremost workers in the church. She will be greatly missed by the young people of Waterloo and most cordially welcomed to Auburn by our young people. Mr. Clark is one of our business men, having recently purchased an interest in the Union Bakery. He is a worthy young man. They immediately came to Auburn and now reside on west Eleventh street. Mr. Clark's mother had planned a dinner and yesterday Mr. and Mrs. Henning and other relatives were invited to dine with them at their new home. The COURIER joins with their many friends here and at Waterloo in congratulations.

Miss Allie Grube, George Bishop, John Clark and Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Lochner were the only friends and relatives present to witness the ceremony,

The Hendershot Entertainment.

The entertainment at the Armory Saturday evening was well patronized and the audience highly pleased. Mr. Hendershot was of course the chief attraction though there was plenty of other good exercises. The "Drummer Boy of the Rappahannock" is no longer a "boy" for he has a grown son with who plays the fife and both together make stirring music. Hendershot is a wonderful drummer and his drums are no less wonderful. Ordinary drums could not stand the vigorous pounding he gives them. He has greatly improved since his other two visits here. He was assisted by the Auburn Musical Club who did some fair singing. Capt. Kuhlman gave a splendid recitation in his best style and Pres and Iva Wilcox assisted by giving several cornet duets and solos. All agree it was a good entertainment.

Goes to Albany, Indiana.

We learned last week that W. D. Rickel, of the firm of Rickel & Sprott, real estate dealers here for a number of years, will go to Albany, a new town in the gas belt in Delaware county, this state. He will be in substantially the same business there, only on a larger scale, for the new town is to be boomed and put on a business basis. They will find Mr. Rickel a valuable man to do this and they will never regret their success in securing his services and his experience. We feel like commending him especially to the newspapers there or in that section, for the firm of Rickel & Sprott is solid with the fraternity up this way. They are not only liberal and judicious advertisers, but they are "spot cash" and no grumbling. We hope to hear of the best possible success for him. The real estate office in Auburn, will be continued as heretofore, and in the same rooms, Mr. Sprott remaining in charge here.

From Nebraska.

J. N. Wilson addressed a postal card and placed it in the pocket of a coat sent with other goods to Nebraska a couple of weeks ago and here is the reply which came back on the card.

The New York World has asked the banks why they are hoarding $81,000,000 of gold for which they have absolutely no use whatever. Their replies are evasive, shifty, insincere. They have no obligations payable in gold. Their notes are redeemable not by themselves but by the government, and not in gold but in greenbacks. The checks drawn by their depositors are payable in paper alone, and, in fact, are paid in nothing else. There is no possible reason for them to hoard gold except that they expect a premium upon it or that they wish to force the government to borrow money which it does not need. Their talk about country banks occasionally demanding gold remittances is folderol. They can go to the subtreasury upon every such occasion and exchange greenbacks for gold in any quantity they please. The banks still owe to the public an answer to the World's question.

Chicago Times: Owing to the faulty construction of the Pullman dining-cars two of the cooks on the Chariton of the Chicago and Alton Road, which burned, escaped. When one considers how seldom Providence comes up with the dining-car cook it does seem that some ingenious inventor ought to arrange a device that would hold the culprits safely while they burned. Of course we are referring to the class, not to the individuals. If the two men who escaped from the Chariton will consider the burning of that car as a lesson to them and reform, the Times will have nothing further to say. But they will not reform. They will go on cooking an arrangement of canned meats which is variously entituled on the menu, but which flavors the palate of the pilgrim for weeks with one flavor. They will make coffee which is weaker than anything on this earth except dining-car tea. And they will conspire to produce dyspepsia with a kind of pie that is simply unique in its billousness.

A bill has been introduced in the Massachusetts Legislature making it a misdemeanor to catch a trout that is less than six inches in length. Such a law is entirely unnecessary; any angler will tell you that he never has seen a trout that was less than six inches long.

It is reported that Czar Nicholas II. intends to remove the press censorship that has made it impossible for Russian newspapers to exist, or for foreign correspondents to make the truth concerning Russian affairs known to the world. We shall believe this when it is done, not before. That the result of freedom of the press in Rusia would mean constitutional government is certain. That the Czar has made up his mind against such a concession is proved by his declaration that he will maintain the autocracy. So far the persecution of the Jews and Stundists continues, and expectations of radical changes still remain expectations.

Guy Fawkes seems destined to immortality through the profound conservatism of the English people. Dispatches from London say that when the fourth session of the thirteenth parliament of Queen Victoria opened at 2 o'clock the Lord Chamberlain, Lord Carrington, accompanied by ten yeomen and a number of policemen, made the customary Guy Fawkes search of the vaults of the houses of parliament, in order to see that no preparations had been made to blow up the buildings. James I. has slept with his ancestors these many seasons. It was early in his reign the Guy Fawkes plot was engaged in. For more than 200 years upon the assembling of any parliament the first business has been that which is gone through to-day as carefully as it was when Guy Fawkes' performance was fresh in the public mind. Conservatism is a great potency in the English mind, leading at times to absurdities. It remained for a curious Yankee to abolish a custom for which nobody could give an account. Visiting London, he saw some of the Horse guards at a particular place every day regularly relieved, and observing no particular reason for their presence he pushed his inquiries for information to the headquarters of the army. The Horse guards were unable to say why this guard was kept, but concluded to ascertain wherein the origin was, and found that some treasure was ordered to be guarded at this particular point in the reign of Charles II. and the Horse guards had been sending soldiers to the same spot ever since. Even when the New Zealander will have taken his place upon a broken arch of London bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's he will observe a few dingy officials looking through the ruins of Westminster for a repetition of Guy Fawkes' plot.

though the prosecution had him indicted for burglary in the second degree. For unlawful entry the extreme penalty would be one year in prison, but it is not likely that he will get nearly so long a time. It was evident that the prisoner was but half-witted and he seemed to have a penchant for sleeping. The warden at the prison where Garvey was incarcerated awaiting trial testified that he slept most of the time. Garvey went to sleep in court during the progress of the trial. After the verdict he was remanded for sentence.

How Fish Come to the Surface.

A curious physiological discovery has been made in the last year by Professor Bohr, of Copenhagen, in regard to the mode of storage by which a fish accumulates so much oxygen in the air that distends the swimming or air bladder.

The air contained therein has a percentage of oxygen that may rise to as much as 85, an amount in excess of the percentage in atmospheric air. Prof. Bohr tapped the air bladders of codfish and drew off the gas by means of a trocar and air-tight syringe. The gas had 52 per cent. of oxygen. In a few hours the air bladder was refilled, apparently by a process of secretion of gas from the blood in the capillaries on the wall of the bladder. In one experiment the gas thus secreted had 80 per cent. of oxygen. When the nerves connected with the organ were severed, the secretion ceased and the organ was not refilled.

It thus appears that when a fish descends to a great depth, and his body is reduced in size by increased pressure of the water about him, he is able to attain his former size and rise by secreting the gas he needs and not by absorbing the water. Support is thus given to the theory that the gaseous exchanges that occur in the lungs of animals are not merely physical.

Cent Pieces in the South.

A year or so ago when the average Savannahian found himself in possession of a copper cent he felt tempted to flip the little coin into the gutter as a nuisance. Cents were unpopular; nobody wanted them; even a newsboy or a bootblack disdained to waste time in waiting for a cent in change. But things are different now. The little copper coin cuts quite a figure in the city's circulation, and it is as much respected as the more pretentious nickel. Hardly a person fishes up a handful of change in which there is not a plentiful sprinkling of bronze color. The reduced street car fares and the odd cent prices in some of the leading stores have brought about the change. And it is probably a good thing. People have come to understand the value of a cent better than they ever did before.—Savannah News.

THE COUNTRY'S LOSS.

EFFECT OF THE LOW PRICE OF FARM PRODUCTS.

In 1894 Uncle Sam Gained $20,000,000 Over 1893 on Cattle and Provisions, and Lost $61,000,000 on Breadstuffs.

Farmers Suffer Most.

How much has the country lost by the low prices of farm products? In speaking of prices, a gentleman remarked a few days since: "I pay now just the same for a five-rib roast of beef that I do for a barrel of flour." His statement was substantially correct, as twenty pounds of choice beef are selling for about the same price as a barrel of the best family flour. The incident is only important as serving to point out and accentuate the fact that provisions have held their prices fairly well, while many products of the farm, such as wheat, cotton and wool, have declined very heavily. It is partly owing to this condition of affairs, too, that on the exports of 1894 the United States gained $20,000,000 over 1893 on cattle and provisions, and lost $16,000,000 on breadstuffs.

If we take the same authority which has been accepted in previous years, the United States Agricultural Bureau, for the crop estimates of 1894, we find that if the three great crops of wheat, corn and cotton could have been laid down in New York on the 1st of January, 1895, their aggregate value would have been $1,178,256,938, against a valuation of $1,253,187,716 for the crops of 1893, and $1,544,749,724 for the crops of 1892. This is, of course, an arbitrary standard, but it is probable that the New York price is, upon the whole, as good a standard by which to judge of the relative value of the year's crops as any other that can be adopted.

First, as to prices: The following table, compiled from the reports of the statistical bureau of the Department of Agriculture, will give a record of the average prices for various staples received on farms and plantations since 1888, compiled from the rates ruling on or about Dec. 1 of the respective years:

Prices of Products on Farms Dec. 1.

	1888. Cts.	1890. Cts.	1892. Cts.	1894. Cts.
Wheat, bu.	92.6	83.8	62.4	49.8
Rye, bu.	59.1	62.9	54.8	50.5
Oats, bu.	27.8	42.4	31.7	32.9
Barley, bu.	59.6	64.8	47.2	44.3
Corn, bu.	34.1	50.6	39.4	45.6
Cotton, lb.	8.5	8.6	8.4	4.9

The corn price, 45.6 cents per bushel, is 6.3 cents higher than the average price for the decade 1880-89, and is 4 cents higher than the average of the last four years.

The wheat price, 49.8 cents, is the lowest for twenty-five years, and is 33.9 cents lower than the average for the decade 1880-89, and 22.1 cents less than the average for the last four years.

The price of cotton, it will be noticed, is at its very minimum. Discarding for the moment all other elements which enter into the problem—such as the total yield of the crop or the comparative cost of production, and comparing the prices for 1894 with those for 1892 (inasmuch as 1893 was also a year of unusual depression), it appears that, with the exception of corn and oats, prices have declined 20, 30, and even 40 per cent.

That startling variations exist in various estimates of the wheat crop of 1894 we are well aware. The United States Government's last estimate is 460,000,000 bushels, but, in view of the fact that this is 30,000,000 in excess of the Government's preliminary estimate, and that the United States official estimate for last year's crop is believed to have been widely erroneous, we may discard these figures in favor of some of the trade estimates, which run as follows: W. M. Grosvenor, 530,000,000; Liverpool Corn Trade News, 520,000,000; Cincinnati Price Current, 515,000,000; Statistician Thoman, 503,000,000.

Assuming the estimates of the Corn Trade News for 1892 and 1893, and the conservative figures of Mr. Thoman for 1894, further assuming all wheat of a uniform grade, and all sold on farms about Dec. 1 at the prices quoted in the Government's farm price list, we have the following:

Year.	Crop (bu.)	Aggregate value on farm.
1892	580,000,000	$361,920,000
1893	475,000,000	247,475,000
1894	503,000,000	250,494,000

This would indicate that, while the aggregate money yield from wheat for 1894 is approximately equal to that for 1893, the loss in money, compared with 1892, is over $100,000,000; or, more exactly, the loss on the 1894 crop, as compared with that of 1892, is $111,426,000. Assuming the United States official statement of the 1894 wheat crop—namely, $225,900,000, the loss, as reckoned on this comparative basis, would be $136,020,000.

Gain in the Price of Corn.

As a partial offset to this loss there appears to be a gain in the item of corn, where the high price per bushel would seem to net an aggregate sum in excess of that obtained for the crop of 1893. The following table is made on the basis of Mr. Thoman's estimate of the 1894 corn crop and the United States official estimates for 1892 and 1893, and combines with them the Government's farm prices:

Year.	Crop in bu.	Total value on farm.
1892	1,628,464,000	$641,614,816
1893	1,619,496,131	591,116,087
1894	1,496,943,000	682,606,008

If the Government's doubtful figures for the crop of 1894 be taken (viz., 1,212,770,000 bushels), the farm value is only $554,719,000.

The excess in the total market value of last year's crop over that of the previous year appears, according to Mr. Thoman's figures, to amount to over $80,000,000; or compared with the yield of two years ago, to over $40,000,000. The Government's figures would turn these estimated gains into losses of $45,000,000 and $87,000,000, respectively. It is worthy of remark, however, that the probable total gain on this item has been very unevenly distributed among the various agricultural sections. In the South the corn crop has been heavier than in 1893, and has partially offset the loss on cotton, while in some sections of the West, especially Nebraska and Kansas, the corn crop has been an almost total failure, with little compensation from other crops.

TERRIBLE LOSS OF LIFE.

Rio Janeiro Ferryboat Catches Fire Costing Over a Hundred Lives.

The Rio News of Jan. 8, received in the latest mail, gives the particulars of a terrible calamity in the Bay of Rio Janeiro. It says:

"About 7:15 Sunday evening, the 6th inst., a fire broke out on the ferryboat Terceira. The boat left Rio de Janeiro with from eighty to 300 passengers, the greater part of whom disembarked at San Domingas. It is generally estimated that there were from 100 to 150 persons on board at the time of the disaster. Although the Terceira was barely 300 meters from land when the fire appeared, nothing effective appears to have been done to save the passengers except the forethought of the engineers in opening the safety valves of the boilers to prevent an explosion. There was apparently but few life-saving appliances on board. The fire burned with such rapidity that the passengers were driven overboard and many were drowned. The ferryboat Quinta had just left the Nictheroy slip when the fire broke out, and the master promptly hurried to the scene. On approaching the burning vessel he was suddenly surrounded by an excited crowd of passengers, some with revolvers in their hands, who threatened his life if he ventured near the burning boat. He was therefore compelled to turn away and leave the passengers of the Terceira to their fate. Before doing so, however, he had all the benches and other means of saving life thrown overboard for those struggling in the water."

BORN IN SLAVERY.

Career of Frederick Douglass, the Noted Freedman Orator.

Frederick Douglass, the noted freedman, orator and diplomat, who died Wednesday night at his residence in Anacostia, a suburb of Washington, D. C., of heart failure, was born a slave at Tuckahoe, Md., in February, 1817. His mother was a full-blooded African woman; his father a white man, presumably the owner of his mother. He learned to read and write through the favor of a relative of his master-father, and at the age of 15 was permitted to hire his own time, paying $3 a week, retaining and saving the balance of his earnings with the intention of ultimately purchasing his freedom. His progress was slow, however, and in 1838 he ran away, reaching New Bedford, Mass, in September of that year. He married and lived there for two or three years, supporting himself by day labor on the wharves and in various work shops. While there he changed his name to Douglass. He had previously been called Lloyds, the name of his old master. William Lloyd Garrison took an interest in the young fugitive, and assisted him in procuring a higher education. He soon developed great talent as an orator, and attracted the attention of leading members of the American Anti-Slavery Society. They employed him as one of their lecturers, and he delivered a course throughout the Northern States, portraying in vivid and forceful language the injustice of American slavery and the African slave trade.

In 1845 he went to England, where his eloquence attracted large audiences and brought him to the notice of many of the prominent anti-slavery agitators of that country. His friends in England raised a purse of £150, which was sent to his former owner, and he received in return his manumission papers, which on more than one occasion in after life served him in good stead when threatened with arrest as a fugitive slave.

During the civil war Douglass was one of President Lincoln's advisers relative to the status belli of the slaves, and early advised that they be invited to join the Union army against the slave power. Mr. Douglass was twice married, his first wife being colored. His second marriage was to Miss Helen Pitts, a white woman clerk in one of the departments at Washington. He accumulated a competency from the proceeds of his lectures and from the fees of the several offices he held.

RUSH FOR NEW BONDS.

Sale Closed in 20 Minutes in New York and Two Hours in London.

J. Pierpont Morgan, acting for himself and August Belmont, managers of the new government loan syndicate, took just twenty minutes Wednesday to receive and close the bids for the $62,500,000 new 4 per cent. bonds, says a New York dispatch. The amount allotted to American investors will not be made known for several days. There is, however, good authority for the statement that, in view of the heavy oversubscription in London, a comparatively small portion of the issue will be allotted in this country, as it will suit the purposes of the syndicate to dispose of the bulk of the loan abroad in the interest of the agreement with the government to maintain the cash gold reserve. A premium of 16½ was bid for the new bonds in this market. Under the terms of the agreement between the bond syndicate and the government, some $32,500,000 was to have been deposited with the treasury for the home account, the rest of the gold required to pay for the bonds having to come from abroad. That amount of gold had been deposited with the treasury Wednesday morning. In the afternoon Mr. Morgan made a deposit of $1,123,000 gold at the sub-treasury, taking in exchange therefor legal tenders. This action was probably taken to further instill confidence in the financial stability of the treasury, and is in line with the policy of the syndicate to hold the gold reserve at the full limit.

Reports received at the Treasury Department show that $23,062,370 in gold coin has already been turned into the subtreasuries on account of the recent gold purchase. Gold coins to the amount of $1,123,000 were Wednesday deposited in the sub-treasury at New York in exchange for United States notes, and $500,000 at Cincinnati. Of the deposits received on account of the gold purchases $15,637,747 was at New York, $100,000 at Philadelphia and $7,314,622 at depository banks. The treasury officials are especially pleased with the favor with which the loan was received in London, as it shows most conclusively faith abroad in our financial strength and purpose to pay all obligations in gold. The good effect of the recent gold purchase is already shown, it is asserted, in the upward tendency of American securities in London.

In London, N. M. Rothschild & Son said that the new American loan had proved a colossal success. The amount of the loan allotted to Europe was covered many times over in two hours, both with them and with J. P. Morgan & Co.

As to Figures.

The journey was long and the old lady with the plaid shawl thought to beguile the time by conversation with the tailor-made girl who sat with her.

"Live in the city?" asked the old lady.

"Yes. Work there," answered the girl, and said nothing more.

"Might I ask what you work at?"

"Figures."

This seemed discouraging, but the old lady plucked up her nerve and asked:

WOOL TRADE IS BRISK

UNUSUALLY LARGE NUMBER OF MILLS IN OPERATION.

Cheaper Woolens and More of Them What the People Voted for in '90 and '92—G. O. P. in the Grip of Plutocracy.

Free Wool Facts.

The American Economist, the great McKinley organ, on Feb. 15 contained an editorial entitled "Cheap Woolen Goods." This editorial declares that (1) "prices for woolen goods are extremely low;" (2) "the consumption of wool has greatly increased since the wool schedule of the new tariff came into effect;" (3) "imports and reimports coming must, of course, curtail the output of American woolen mills;" (4) "still lower prices must mean lower wages for the people who are working in the American woolen factories."

Cheaper woolens and more of them will not scare us. With the thermometer below zero, as it has been much of the time during this cold winter, there are worse bugaboos to think of than plenty of cheap, warm woolen clothing. In fact, this is what the people voted for in 1890 and 1892. It shows that the Democrats were right when they promised to give us less shoddy and more woolens by means of free wool and reduced duties.

Cheaper woolens would be a blessing to over 60,000,000 people, even if thereby some of our woolen mills had to close, and if wages of a few thousand weavers were reduced. But the Economist is greatly mistaken on both of these points. If it will consult the files of the American Wool and Cotton Reporter, since wool became free, last August, it will find that more new mills have been planned and built, more old ones have been enlarged, and more closed mills have been started up than in any six months during the whole McKinley period.

Moreover, the decline of wages, which has been going on for ten or twelve years in the textile industries, has been so checked that for the first time in five years many mills have been compelled to advance wages to get workers. Scarcely a week passes but wages are advanced in some big mill. Thus on the same day that these editorials apeared in the Economist, the Wool and Cotton Reporter said that the Johnson Woolen Company in North Adams, Mass., had voluntarily raised the wages of its fancy weavers 12 per cent. On the same day it mentioned that the woolen mills in Rockville, Conn., were in operation much more generally than last year; that the Mohawk Knitting Mill was running overtime four nights in the week; and that a woolen mill in Maine is running overtime. Of the blanket trade it said that, while there are no indications of a boom, "there is every reason for believing that a steady, healthy demand will be enjoyed."

It's a shame that the Economist can't be accommodated by either closed mills or lower wages, but it has to confront facts—free-wool facts—now, and its theories are proven to be false and worthless.—Byron W. Holt.

Free Trade!

Such sheets as the Port Byron Chronicle and Weedsport Sentinel, which never use the God-given power of reason, continue to ascribe every case of destitution incident to hard times and a severe winter to "Democratic free trade." The utter idiocy of this cry excites derision. These prints do not seem to comprehend that this country is not under "free trade," or anything like it. The Gormanized Wilson bill is a higher protective tariff than Henry Clay ever dreamed of. It is higher than the Morrill tariff passed by the Republicans. It is only slightly lower than the extreme McKinley tariff against which the people revolted.

The argument of these rabid partisans—if their assertions can be dignified by the name of argument—proves altogether too much.

They tell us this country is languishing, while English manufactories are flourishing—that England is drawing our gold out of the treasury, enriching her citizens. But England is, in truth and in fact, a free trade country, while America is not! These blind partisans who conceive it their duty to keep talking about something they know nothing about, have not paused to consider the ridiculous figure they cut. They have learned the words "free trade," as a parrot might chatter them, and they throw them in with as little regard to the fitness of things.

It is certainly a very remarkable fact that the "hard times" have affected every civilized nation on the globe, but that the country least affected is England, which has had free trade ever since Sir Robert Peel and his fellow patriots wiped out the odious tariff laws of that country. There is food for reflection in the fact. But blind and heedless partisans are incapable of reflection.—Cayuga Chief.

Inconsistent Republicans.

There is something amusing—or would be if the matter were not a serious one—in the Republican attitude concerning the protests of Germany, Austria and France against our tariff legislation and their threats of retaliation. For quite a quarter of a century, and in the cases of some for much longer, the Republican leaders and organs have been telling the people that what we need is a "home market," and that the great evil of the age is foreign trade. Volumes of the Congressional Record and innumerable columns in the papers of the Republican party have been given to an elaboration of this contention; and one result has been that a great many of the people, especially in the agricultural districts, have been led to believe in the argument and to sneer at the foreign market as utterly unworthy of consideration in comparison with the home market. Yet the moment there is a faint prospect of the farmer being permitted to keep his grain and meat at home for sale here, the leaders and organs are up in arms, lambasting the Democratic party for irritating foreign countries into taking the course they threaten. Another feature, scarcely less humorous, is the solicitude these same organs and leaders are manifesting concerning foreign opinion. Almost as vehemently as they have advocated the home market theory, have they proclaimed their indifference to what foreign countries think of us or do in reference to us. "What have we to do with abroad?" was for a long time their pet cry; and the severest charge they have ever brought against political oponents has been one of too much consideration for foreign opinion or action. Yet if they can be believed they are all in a tremor now because two or three European nations are dissatisfied with the legislation of the United States, and with one accord they are clamoring for deference to foreign threats. It really is a very funny case of backing down on the part of the g. o. p.

In the Grip of Plutocracy.

John M. Thurston is to be sent to occupy a seat in the United States Senate, not because he represents the people of Nebraska, for he does not, but because he is a professional lobbyist who has been of great service to corporations interested in using the law-making power of the people for their own enrichment.

For exactly the same reasons Stephen B. Elkins, who is another professional lobbyist, is to be sent to the Senate from West Virginia, and the Pennsylvania Railroad has apparently been successful in its scheme for buying the New Jersey Senatorship for Lobbyist Sewell. If Gasman Addicks is defeated in Delaware it will be because of the World's exposures, and not because of any objections from those who now control the Republican party.

It is true that the plutocratic influence has attempted to control the Senate through the Democratic party, but with Democrats that has been the exception which has now become the rule with Republicans. When the Standard Oil Company sent Henry B. Payne to the Senate from Ohio the Democrats of the country repudiated him and he served his term under constant protest from the Democratic press. When Calvin S. Brice through like agencies secures the succession to Payne's purchased place it is only that he may become more odious to Democrats everywhere than if he called himself a Republican. But in the Republican party there is no longer an attempt to resist the plutocratic influence. Corrupt corporations are openly purchasing Senatorships for their lobbyists, and are too little regardful of the decencies of politics to keep up the threadbare but useful pretense that their action is the action of the people.

Having won a great victory because of the protest of Democrats against plutocratic influence in the Democratic party the Republican politicians are using their new lease of power to remove all doubt that their triumph is the victory of usurped privilege over right of money over manhood.—New York World.

That Sugar Tax.

Looking at the matter in its serious aspect, the Republican attitude is even more indicative of dishonesty than of rank inconsistency with previous professions. The pretense they are making is that the protest of Germany and Austria is based on the abrogation of reciprocity, when the fact is that it is directed specifically at the discriminating duty on sugar for the perpetuation of which the Republican party is just as much responsible as anybody. President Cleveland in his last annual message recommended the repeal of that provision in the tariff act—not because of any protest from foreign countries, for none had been made—but because the provision was the result of domination by the sugar ring. The Republicans in the Senate could have prevented the passage of the provision had they wished—or, to put the matter accurately, had they not been ruled by the sugar combine, as were certain Democrats. They could secure the repeal of the provision now, but it is well known that they have combined in the Senate to prevent such repeal, on the flimsy pretense that they do not mean to allow any tariff legislation on the part of the Democracy. Whether their attitude is due to domination of the sugar ring, or partly to that and partly to partisanship, is immaterial. It is alike unpatriotic in either case, and it robs the party organs of any excuse they might otherwise have for charging the strained relations with foreign countries to the Democracy. The discriminating duty on sugar ought to be repealed, not on account of Germany's or Austria's threat—for we are not accountable to either of these nations for our legislation—but because it never was right or for the public interest. Its passage was due to the corrupt influence of the sugar trust upon the Senate, and that body will always be disgraced in the estimation of the public as long as the enactment remains on the statute book.—Detroit Free Press.

Flourishing Under the New Tariff.

The Illinois Steel Company, according to authentic announcement, is about to construct, equip and operate the largest tin plate factory in the country. The new tariff law cuts the duty on tin plate square in half. Yet the Illinois Steel Company, composed of intelligent and capable men, sees that there is an opportunity to make profit by operating a tin plate factory of large proportions. No doubt that company would have erected its plant if the old law had continued, but in that event its profits would have been abnormal and the expense of the consumers needlessly great, while under existing conditions the country will have the benefit of the industry without the cost of the protective tax.—Kansas City Times.

Knock Off the Shackles!

The American people will learn in time that freedom is better than restriction for trade. American enterprise should not be of hothouse growth. A few immense fortunes may be accumulated under fostering tariff laws, but generally prosperity is not promoted. Knock off the shackles. Let industry be free, not a slave.

It is said that Calvin S. Brice will be a candidate for President in 1900 or 1904, and is already laying his plans. If any other member of the sugar trust Senatorial ring has Presidential aspirations he will be wise if he also dates his campaign in the next century.

CURRENT COMMENT.

The Elbe Disaster.

The loss of the Elbe is one of those things that unfortunately will happen—events unpreventable by human ingenuity in its present stage of development.—Chicago Post.

Such a tragedy brings home the uncertainty of life to the most heedless. May we all comprehend it better, and live more in accordance with our knowledge.—Courier-Journal.

The collision at sea has come to be recognized as the one accident against which neither seamanship nor water-tight compartments nor any other marine equipment can afford entire protection.—Chicago Record.

The statements of the rescued passengers of the Elbe leave no room for doubt that the officers of the vessel—at least the surviving ones—acted in a cowardly, brutal and selfish manner.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

It is not strange that Emperor William should be indignant and chagrined that a German crew should have saved only one woman in a shipwreck when they managed to save so many of themselves. A court must deal unflinchingly with the Elbe crew.—Chicago Herald.

Voyages by sea have been rendered remarkably safe within recent years. Scores upon scores of steamships cross the Atlantic weekly, yet there is seldom an accident or loss of life. The loss of life is made impressive chiefly because it was concentrated.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Tired, Weak, Nervous

Hood's Sarsaparilla Restores Strength and Bodily Vigor.

The cause of that tired, weak, nervous condition, in which so many people find themselves, is the failure of the blood to properly nourish the nerves and tissues. Feed the nerves upon pure blood and they will be steady and strong. Read this:

Mrs. C. H. Venable
Keithsburg, Ill.

"It is with pleasure that I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as an excellent nerve tonic and blood purifier. I have taken it more than once and am taking it now. I was tired, my body ached, and I felt very badly all over. I was afraid I would be sick. I thought I would take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and and I find that it is cheaper than the doctor's bills. Hood's Pills are the best I have ever taken, and I use no other. I am glad to have an opportunity to recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla." MRS. C. H. VENABLE, Keithsburg, Ill.

It Has Cured Me,

Two of a Kind.

Several months ago F. W. Perry, of Shortsville, N. Y., bought a box of No-to-bac of his druggist, and began taking it. Recently he wrote the Sterling Remedy Co., of Chicago, that No-to-bac cured him so completely that he even dislikes the smell of tobacco. He further stated that a friend of his was cured of the habit and now dislikes tobacco in any form.

Mirror Writing.

With left-handed people, a reversed writing is not uncommon when the left hand is used. It is really the natural way in which writing would be done under such conditions. It is taken advantage of by such as can use it freely and readily in writing, say postal cards, for it is a simple and easy way of concealing the meaning, so long as those through whose hands the document passes are ignorant of the simple solution. For this it is only necessary to hold it before a mirror, when the writing appears as ordinary left to writing. Hence the name "mirror writing" is the one commonly applied to it.

Clever Imitation.

"Treated" birch becomes mahogany of rare beauty, and "soaked" maple goes into all "ebony" pianos now. So cleverly is the "fake" wood "weighted" that nothing short of borings will prove the deception. Maple mahogany is soaked through to a depth of four inches, and will polish even better than the genuine wood.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

"NICK" AND "JOE" SLAUGHTERBACK, against whom suspicion had rested from the first, were arrested at the home of their brother, John Slaughterback, in Lawrence county, Ill., on a charge of being the men who shot John Niblack, at Wheatland, Friday night, in an attempt to rob his father's store. The prisoners were taken into the presence of young Niblack, who identified them both as the men that entered the store. The prisoners were hurried into a carrage, taken to Vincennes and placed in jail just in time to escape the vengeance of a mob which was gathering. Had the prisoners been left there until night they would have been mobbed.

WHILE drilling for gas at Parker City, a fine flow of petrolium was struck. It is a fine quality of crude oil and the company will take immediate steps to put in an oil plant. Hedgecock, Frankfort, vice president; George Todd, Lagro, secretary and treasurer.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

THE House, Monday, passed the resolution providing for an amendment to the constitution requiring that foreigners shall reside in the country five years before they shall have the right to vote in the State. A resolution for another amendment to the constitution providing for the use of the voting machine was also adopted.

The firemen's pension fund bill as amended and passed by the Senate, was considered and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution for a constitutional amendment providing that the General Assembly shall not pass local or special laws reimbusing public officers who have lost public money, was adopted.

The bill defining prize fights and prohibiting such contests in this State, came up on third reading, and passed almost unanimously. It provides for the arrest of spectators, as well as principals, seconds, and timekeepers.

The bill providing for the teaching of the effect of narcotics and intoxicants on the human system in the public schools was passed.

Senator Ellison's oleomargarine bill came up in the Senate on second reading and was advanced to engrossment. The bill as it stands, and as it will probably be passed, is a stringent measure. It provides that oleomargarine shall be stamped and sold as oleomargarine, and that restaurants, hotels, and boarding-houses that serve it shall announce the fact on a playcard, conspicuously posted.

The Soldiers' Home bill was before the Senate for some time, and a number of amendments were offered, relating to perfecting title, &c. The bill was referred to a committee of three to make changes suggested bearing on this subject.

THE majority entered upon its long delayed political legislation Tuesday in the House, and within an hour committee reports had been received upon two measures, the constitutional rule suspended and the bills passed, all discussion being cut off by the operation of the previous question.

The first bill abolishes the soldiers' and sailors' monument commission, created in 1887 for the erection of a state soldiers' monument' and establishes in its stead a regency, which is to consist of three persons to be appointed by a board of state officers.

The second bill rushed through under the previous question was for a legislative apportionment, being the measure introduced early in the session, but permitted to lie dormant in commitee till acted upon by the party caucus.

Five republican representatives—Howe, Dinwiddie, Melendy, Garriot and Gibson voted with the democrats against the bill.

The interest the Nicholson bill has engendered throughout the state was clearly manifested in the House when its consideration was resumed, by the presence of men and women from different sections of Indiana, and the discussions were listened to with the most marked attention. The bill was still under discussion when the House adjourned.

In the Senate the apportionment bill of Senator Wishard was made a special order for Thursday.

The day was spent in discussing the building association question. Senator Newby's bill was up for passage, which was finally referred to the Committee on Corporations, there to die.

THE House, Wednesday, passed the following bills:

Giving the Governor the power to suspend sheriffs and appoint temporary sheriffs and prosecuting attorneys; appointing two free holders by circuit judges to every county board to review taxes; making commercial paper due on holidays payable the preceding day; allowing counties to pay one-third of the purchase price of toll roads out of the general fund; for the division of estates.

There was an immense crowd in the House when the Nicholson bill was resumed, section by section. The bill is being fought inch by inch by its opponents.

The following bills passed the Senate: Making it unlawful to operate a saloon withing a miles of a State or national soldiers' home; providing for free license to ex-soldiers and ex-sailors for the peddling or handling of goods; requiring township trustees to keep a record of all township orders issued; providing that surety companies may go upon the bonds of officers, administrators, and executors; providing that manufacturers of oleomargarine shall stamp it and sell it as such, and that hotels and restaurants that use it shall placard the fact; requiring that the manufacturers of horse and mule meat shall label the packages in which it is done up; making it incumbent for courts to appoint court reporters where either party in a suit demands it; providing regulations for private detectives and spies; making it unlawful to take fish from lakes, except to stock other lakes and streams, between April 1 and June 15; to prevent the padding of school enumerations.

THE house, as a committee of the whole, finished the consideration of the Nicholson bill Thursday.

After adopting resolations of respect to Minister Gray the house adjourned.

There was but little business transacted in the senate Not more than a dozen senators were present when the session was called. The senate adjourned in honor of the late Minister Gray.

The Nicholson bill was reported to the House Friday by the committee of the whole, and the report was adopted. The bill was then made the special order for Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

The House passed the libel bill. It is the bill that was introduced by Representative Stutesman, but a similar bill having been passed by the Senate, introduced by Senator Shiveley, the Senate bill was substituted. The bill creating a Superior Court for Madison County also passed.

The Senate was without a quorum when it met, but this did not interfere with the presentation of a large number of committee reports.

THE House, Saturday, adopted a resolution which provides that in future any member who absents himself without permission or good and sufficient reason shall be docked his salary for the day he is absent.

The bill providing for free text books, and which is compulsory, passed. It creates two new officers in each county in the State, and entails an enormous expense, rendering necessary for the purchase of bookcases alone the sum of $225,000.

The bill making railroad companies liable for fires originating from sparks from locomotives also passed.

The Committee on Corporations reported favorably an amendment to Senator La Follette's bill concerning voluntary associations, by which the management of the Big Four Railroad Company may incorporate its hospital project.

Senator Wishard introduced a bill in the Senate giving to the State Board of Charities power to establish civil service rules in all penal, benevolent and correctional institutions, and power to enforce the rules.

In his last book Dean Hole tells the following story: "Bishop Jackson much enjoyed a doubtful compliment which was paid to him by the young curate of the parish in which he lived, who was much attached to him, and who said to him one day in conversation: 'I can assure you, my lord, that my rector is such an exceptionally good man and his wife such an exceedingly good woman, and they are in every respect so infinitely my superiors, that if it wern't for your lordship and Mrs. Jackson I should feel quite uncomfortable.'

Nothing Like Printer's Ink.

James Gordon Bennett is very erratic in his movements. He "drops in" upon his branch offices in Paris or London without any notice being sent of his coming, and delights to surprise the clerks by overhauling their books and examining their accounts. On one of these occasions, says the Utica Observer, one of the pressmen, a man who had worked for the elder Bennett, and was an excellent workman, though guilty of an occasional lapse from sobriety, had a black eye and was in a quandary as to what excuse he should offer if Mr. Bennett noticed it. Acting on a sudden inspiration he seized an ink roller and rubbed a daub of ink on the side of his face completely concealing the discoloration of the skin. Presently Mr. Bennett came into the pressroom, and with the superintendent, John Hays, went carefully through, criticising every detail, and looking sharply at each employe. When about to leave he turned suddenly, and, pointing to the besmirched pressman, he said:

"Mr. Hays, what is that man's name?"

The culprit quaked in his shoes until Mr. Bennett said, slowly:

"I want you to give that man $3 per week more wages; he is the only man in the room who looks as if he had been working."

Stepniak on Russia's War Power.

As regards Russia's military capacity, Stepniak is disposed to think that on her own soil, for defensive purposes, she might be able to put into the field, though somewhat slowly, an army equal to that of the German empire. But he insists that she could not muster one-fourth as large a force for a war of invasion, which is much more expensive, and which alone can trouble the imagination of foreign politicians. A conclusive test of Russia's fitness for an aggressive contest was furnished, he thinks, by the last war with Turkey, against which power Alexander II. could send only about 300,000. Since that time things have gone from bad to worse in a financial way. The conclusion is that the new Czar cannot, unless he loses his mind, think of embarking on an aggressive contest. If he should think of it, the whole of his family, his ministers, and his court, would interpose to prevent madness. They at least would recognize that any arduous, not to say unsuccessful war, unless it were a defensive one, would cause the collapse of the system by which they live and thrive.—New York Sun.

Samaritans Among the Birds.

Once upon a time a pair of robbins built their nest upon a fence, and a pair of catbirds (thrushes that are so called because their cry is like the mewing of a cat) in a bush close by. Baby birds appeared in each nest about the same time, and all went well for a few days, when one morning the parent catbirds were both missing, probably slain. Their young would have starved but for the robins. Whenever the robins lit on the rail with a worm or other food, the catbirds set up a hungry squeak, and so the kind birds of the red-breast determined to feed the stranger fledglings as well as their own. Both families were successfully reared, the catbirds being so strong and lively that they looked as if they had been brought up by their own parents.

The County Line.

The line dividing the counties of Hancock and Henderson in Illinois, writes a contributor, runs through the dining-room of the principal hotel in Dallas City, and a man sitting at the table in Hancock County frequently has to reach over into Henderson County for the butter. If a couple are married in the hotel they must be careful how they locate themselves, or they will be married in Henderson County under Hancock license. A man who has committed an offense against the law can sit on the Henderson County side of the table and make faces at the Sheriff of Hancock County and vice versa. A person can sit at the end of the table and be in both counties at once, and not get tangled up in the county line when he leaves the table.

Unequal Punishment.

In some states there is no capital punishment for murder; in others, the death penalty is inflicted for what in comparison are minor crimes. Nearly all the Southern States punish arson with death, and in some burglary is a capital crime. In Missouri the punishment for perjury is death, while in New Hampshire, Connecticut, and Kentucky the maximum sentence for perjury is five years. In Maine, Mississippi, and Iowa, however, the perjurer may be sent to prison for life, while in Delaware the offence is punishable by fine. It is clear that when the punishment for a given crime varies from the exaction of a small fine to hanging, great injustice is done somewhere.

Small Beginnings

Make great endings sometimes. Ailments that we are apt to consider trivial often grow, through neglect, into atrocious maladies, dangerous in themselves and productive of others. It is the disregard of the earlier indications of ill health which leads to the establishment of all sorts of maladies on a chronic basis. Moreover, there are certain disorders incident to the season, such as malaria and rheumatism, against which it is always desirable to fortify the system after exposure to the conditions which produce them. Cold, damp and miasma are surely counteracted by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. After you have incurred risk from these influences, a wineglassful or two of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters directly afterwards should be swallowed. For malaria, dyspepsia, liver complaint, kidney and bladder trouble, nervousness and debility it is the most deservedly popular of remedies and preventives. A wineglassful before meals promotes appetite.

Scraps of Paper.

In the Chinese quarter of San Francisco there is not to be found either in the streets or the alleys, a scrap of paper with Chinese characters written or printed upon it. These people have the great admiration and respect for the characters, not only on account of their beauty and antiquity, but because the great Confusius himself, they say, gave them to his countrymen. At the entrance of every house, and at all the street corners, waste paper baskets are hung, upon which are inscribed "Respect the Characters," and men are hired to go about and gather up any pieces that may have fallen or blown down.

Accept None of the Pretended Substitutes for

Royal Baking Powder

BECAUSE inferior and cheaper made baking preparations are bought at wholesale at a price so much lower than ROYAL, some grocers are urging consumers to use them in place of the ROYAL at the same retail price.

If you desire to try any of the pretended substitutes for ROYAL BAKING POWDER bear in mind that they are all made from cheaper and inferior ingredients, and are not so great in leavening strength nor of equal money value. Pay the price of the ROYAL BAKING POWDER for the ROYAL only.

It is still more important, however, that ROYAL BAKING POWDER is purer and more wholesome, and makes better, finer, and more healthful food than any other baking powder or preparation.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 WALL ST., NEW-YORK.

Stupendous Stupidity.

All the stupidity in the world is not confined to employes of American hotels," remarked a traveling salesman, who has had a vast deal of experience. "They have it in the hotels of Canada as well. I was in Toronto not long ago, and when I went to my room I told the clerk I was expecting a telegram, and wanted it sent up as soon as it came. Half an hour later, when I was not ready to receive visitors, a knock came at the door.

"Who is it?" I called.

"'A telegram for you, sir,' replied a boy.

"'All right; shove is under the door.'

"I went over to the door, but the telegram didn't slip under.

"'Shove it under the door!' I called to him peremptorily.

"'I can't sir,' he answered in a helpless tone; 'it's on the tray, sir.'

"You see," added the traveling man, "that the wooden-headed fellow had the telegram on a tray, and it never occurred to him to deliver it in any other way."

One Sermon.

It is said that the Pope of Rome is the only priest in Christendom who never preaches a sermon. Only once during three hundred years has this rule, if rule it be, been departed from. This was in 1847, when Pius the Ninth was Pope. Father Ventura, a famous orator, was to have preached at a church in Rome. A great crowd assembled to here him, but at the appointed hour there was no priest. Presently the Pope arrived: probably he, too, had come to listen to Ventura. Taking in the situation at a glance, Pio Nono was equal to the occasion, for he preached the sermon from the text that the other had selected.

The Goat.

Some years ago a tame long-haired goat formed part of the regular crew of a passenger steamer on service between an English port and a continental one. After a time the customs authorities discovered that it wore a false coat many sizes too large for it. The goat's own hair was clipped very close; round its body were packed cigars, lace, etc., and then the false coat was skillfully put on, and fastened by hooks and eyes.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

MOTHERS

and those soon to become mothers, should know that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription robs childbirth of its tortures, terrors and dangers to both mother and child, by aiding nature in preparing the system for parturition. Thereby "labor" and the period of confinement are greatly shortened. It also promotes the secretion of an abundance of nourishment for the child.

MRS. DORA A. GUTHRIE, of Oakley, Overton Co., Tenn., writes: "When I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, I was not able to stand on my feet without suffering almost death. Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

A Battle Scarred Veteran.

Nearly every one in Medina Co., Ohio, knows Stephen Rolph, of River Styx, the one legged veteran, who lost his leg at Winchester, Va., March 23, '62. In all probability the exposure and privations of army service, the effects of which are felt as they grow older by nearly all old soldiers, were the cause of the serious nervous prostration and sleeplessness of which Comrade Rolph complained. He says: "People hereabout know me pretty well, but you can tell others that I was down for about six months with nervous prostration and sleeplessness for which I tried various doctors and medicines, but Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer has done me more good than all the doctoring I had done. The first bottle gave me such great relief that I have used several and feel almost restored to my former good health." Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer can be relied upon by any who are suffering from nervous troubles, sleeplessness, etc. If all tried out and run down, you need a reliable nerve and system tonic and health restorer as this remedy is Sold in Auburn by F. E. Davenport. 6 9

Chronic Diarrhœa.

The experience of Geo. A. Apgar, of German Valley, N. J., is well worth remembering. He was troubled with chronic diarrhœa and doctored for five months and was treated by four different doctors without benefit. He then began using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, of which one small bottle effected a complete cure. It is for sale by Robbins & McCord. 6 9

Cures Colds.

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner, with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. For sale by Robbins & McCord. 6-9

A Chance to Make Money.

I am out of debt, and thanks to the Dish Washer business for it. In the past five weeks I have made over $500, and I am so thankful that I feel like telling everybody, so that they can be benefited by my experience. Anybody can sell Dish Washers because everybody wants one, especially when it can be got so cheap. I believe that in two years from now every family will have one. You can get full particulars by addressing the Iron City Dish Washer Co., E. E. Pittsburg, Pa., and you can't help but make money in this business. I believe that I can clear over $3,000 the coming year, and I am not going to let such an opportunity pass without improvement. We can't expect to succeed with without trying.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for March.

In the March number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly the wonderful story of the life and inventions of Thomas Alva Edison is set forth, in an article by Henry Tyrrell, with the apparent purpose of contrasting an actual living hero, a modern conqueror of science, with the dark and sinister shadow of Napoleon as projected anew by the curious contemporary revival of his sanguinary legend. The paper is accompanied with some interesting illustrations, including new portraits of Edison, of his parents, wife, children, and scientific collaborators. Other important contributions to this unusually full and interesting number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly are M. V. Moore's striking account of "The Great Salt Lake, and Mormondom"; Captain H. D. Smith's stirring and patriotic account of "The United States Revenue Cutter Flag"; a delightful art paper upon "Cameos and Cut Gems," by Theo Tracy; "How Bronze Statues are Cast," with the latest works of American sculptors, by S. Millington Miller; "Bulgarian Village Life," picturesquely illustrated, by Celia R. Ladd; Personal Reminiscences of Charles Reade, by Howard Paul, and of Anton Rubinstein, by Mrs. W. K. L. Dickson; and a practical article, with many distinguished canine portraits, on "Dogs and their Keeping," by S. H. Ferris. There are good short stories and poems by Charles Edwardes, Louise Morgan Sill, Gertrude F. Lynch, Jessie M. Andrews, H. E. Armstrong, Julia D. Young, Annie L. Muzzey, Ernest Delancey Pierson, Norman Gale and others.

The Art Amateur grows more interesting with each number. What with its charming color plates (two are given this month—"Sunset in Conneticut," a winter landscape with snow illuminated by the sunset glow; and "Chrysanthemums"), its practical Working Designs for China painting, wood carving, needlework, etc, and its instructive articles on "Drawing for Reproduction," "Flower Drawing in Pen-and-Ink," "Artistic Anatomy," "Landscape Painting," "The Painting of the Head in Oil," "Glass Painting," "China Painting," Designing for Bindings," "Wall Paper Designing," "Needlework" and "An Inexpensive Country House," it is indeed indispensable to the artist, the teacher and the art student. All these articles are well illustrated. Besides all these there is an article on Carolus Duran, an account of "An Art Student's Year in Paris," Drapery Studies by Jules Lefebvre and Jan Monchablon, Drawings by Martin Rico, Carolus Duran and J. L. Sargent, and Engravings by Charles Baude from paintings by trotter, V. Gilbert and Maris Roy. "My Note Book" is especially interesting. Price, 35 cents Montague Marks, Publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

"Any Port in a Storm"

That's a good maxim, but it will not work as a rule in the purchase of a remedy for rheumatism. Any of the cheap nostrums will not effect a cure—in fact none of them will. Get Dr. Drummond's Lightning remedy, and a speedy cure is certain. One bottle is worth a hundred of anything else, and for that reason it is the cheapest when a cure is wanted. CORUNNA.

David Shook is back at his post of duty again in his railroad office.

Emanuel Treesh's little girl is very low, and it is barely possible that she will recover.

The ice king did finally loosen his grip, although he held on with a tenacity that was astonishing.

Jas DeLong put up a fine lot of ice last week. It is said to be the nicest put up in Corunna for several years.

The la grip, or epidemic or something of the sort, is getting in its work in this vicinity again. About four out of every five are complaining with it.

Mrs. Ellen Chaffee returned home last Thursday after a three weeks' visit with friends and relatives in Salem and York townships, Steuben county.

The union meeting is still in progress at this writing, and with the very best of results so far. There have been twenty some conversions and the churches very much revived.

We noticed last Saturday that Willard Trumbull was considerably excited about something, and couldn't imagine what was up, unless he had just received word that he had fallen heir to a fortune. Later in the day, however, we learned the cause of his excitement. Sure enough he did get a fortune, but it was not gold or silver, but something more precious—his wife presented him with a pair of twins, both girls, and weighing eight pounds apiece. All doing well.

One day last week the following conversation was overheard between two school chums: "Say, don't you think it's real mean for a young fellow to call about eleven evenings in a week, and give lots of candy and things, and get off six or seven yards of poetry each time, and talk nice things, and—and—now don't you think it's real mean in him unless he means business? I think he just ought to be ashamed of himself. Don't you think so?" "Well I should snicker!"

LAST WEEK.

Mrs Joseph Rohm is on the sick list.

Mrs Sadie Duncan is not feeling so well at this writing.

Mrs. Lavina Gramling visited her daughter Mrs. Thomas Lacy last week.

Edward Meek and family visited his father near Angola Thursday and Friday.

Mrs. J. Thomas of Hamilon is visiting her mother Mrs. P. H. Gramling.

Wesly and Wm. Zimmerman, Henry Myers, John Penick with their families came to Catharine Zimmerman's Monday Feb 11th with their baskets well filled with good things and made a surprise for her, it being her birthday.

Warren Boyer and wife of Hamilton; Wes McDougle and wife of Pleasant Lake; Henry Snowberger and wife of this place took dinner with Henry Lawson and family last Sunday, it being Mrs L's. 40th birthday.

BUTLER

Mrs. Cousins, of Toledo, Mrs. R. C. Campbell's mother, is visiting with them.

Mrs. Scranton is reported as improving.

Mrs. Peter Helwig seems to be scarcely holding even. The severe cold weather has left her much enfeebled.

Mrs. Enoch Grindle, of whose illness mention was made last week, is improving with fair chances for recovery.

J. A. Campbell was confined to his home the greater part of last week by a sore eye.

Rev. Duehnan, the new Lutheran minister, is holding a well attended continued service at the old brick church on West North street and East Avenue.

Sam. G. Stone, our well known druggist, is lying at his home seriously ill from a complication of disturbing causes. We hope for his speedy recovery.

Russell Stevens has gone to Ann Arbor to try the virtue of whatever treatment that learned institution may afford. Hopes are entertained for his early return to his family and friends.

A very destructive fire occurred last Wednesday about 1½ miles northeast of Newville, originating in the residence of Mr. Benningdoof. Mr. B. had recently sustained very serious physical injuries from a falling tree, and was confined to his home. Henry Webster had called on him, and during his visit a noise upstairs attracted their attention, and on going up to learn the cause the whole upper part of the house was found to be in flames. Hasty efforts were made to save something from the burning house, and a portion was saved. Fire soon communicated to the large barn near by, and it soon went up in smoke. During the excitement someone discovered that Henry Webster's large barn fully three quarters of a mile north, was also on fire, communicated by flying shingles carried by a high wind, setting fire to a new straw-stack near the barn. Mrs. Webster, who was alone, succeeded in getting the horses out, and about everything else perished. Mr. Webster had the best barn in his township, almost new. His loss will reach nearly $1,500, upon which he had $1,000 insurance in J. A. Campbell's agency. Mr. Benningdoof had no insurance and [illegible] almost everything, his loss falls very heavy on him.

Much for Little.

We cannot refrain from further mention of that most beautiful of all monthly publications, Sarony's Living Pictures. It is so highly meritorious and so fitly calculated to afford to its possessor the greatest amount of entertainment for the smallest outlay, that we are doing our readers a kindness in again calling their attention to it. Compared with its real worth, its cost, 25 cents, is but a trifle.

Palpitation of the Heart

Shortness of Breath, Swelling of Legs and Feet.

"For about four years I was troubled with palpitation of the heart, shortness of breath and swelling of the legs and feet. At times I would faint. I was treated by the best physicians in Savannah, Ga., with no relief. I then tried various Springs without benefit. Finally, I tried also his Nerve and Liver Pills. After beginning to take them I felt better. I continued taking them and I am now in better health than for many years. Since my recovery I have gained fifty pounds in weight. I hope this statement may be of value to some poor sufferer."

WHAT WE HAVE TO SAY ABOUT MNOEY.

The Indiana Mutual Building Loan Association, which we represent in this part of the state, have again reduced their interest, which has always been from 2 to 5 per cent less than any other Building Loan Association Do you know that if you are about to borrow money and give a mortgage on your home, you should take the time and trouble to investigate the plan of different associations, so that you may know, regardless of what any agent may tell you, which is the cheapest andthe best?

There are three items which should also be considered and thoroughly understood, especially by the borrower, before he makes his application for a loan:

First: The rate of interest and premium he is charged per annum.

Second: What the earnings of the Association are.

Third: How economically the Association is conducting its affairs.

We are prepared always to compare our company with any other, and can prove to your entire satisfaction that we are the cheapest, and

REMEMBER

That in our company you have no membership fee to pay, no advance payments to make and there will be no delays, so that should your loan for any reason be declined, you will lose no money. We are prepared to make loans where the security is sufficient; for any amount from $2. 00 to $25,0)

FRED J. YESBEBA,
The Auburn Jewler.

Our work departmeet is without fault. Everything must be satisfactory.

They Were Jiners.

Last Wednesday evening three prominent members of the Waterloo Maccabee lodge came down to Auburn to visit the lodge here and assist in some initiatory work. Not knowing exactly where the lodge room was situated, they went up the stairway near the postoffice and made a mistake and turned to the left instead of the right and got into the A. O. U. W. hall. The looge was not in session and of course the doors were open. They passed into the ante room, removed their coats and walked into the hall and were seated with the other gentlemen present. A. O. U. W. members began to look at one another as if an introduction, or sign of some kind would be in order and were just at the point of testing the gentlemen by the grip and password when A. N. Wilson asked them if they thought they were in the Maccabee hall. Their answer was, "Yes, are we mistaken?" and they were informed so. They were less than a minute in getting their coats and leaving the room, and at the same time got the laugh, for it was impossible to keep straight faces when one saw how surprised they looked. One gentleman, we understand, is commander of a Tent.

The Children's Day.

The L. L. C. have added a new feature to their program this year by entertaining the children of the club one afternoon in the year, and it will be known hereafter as "Children's Day." Last Saturday afternoon this event took place at the home of Mrs. W. B. Brown, and over forty children with some young people enjoyed a special literary program prepared for the occasion. The members and guests were called to order by the president, Mrs. H. J. Ralston, and the secretary called the roll. A few words of welcome from the president were followed by a piano solo by Mrs Ashley and a recitation, "Up and Down Old Brandywine," by Mrs. Hattie Wilson. Then came the drama, "The Mouse Trap," that completely captivated the little folks, as it was quite laughable and created a great deal of amusement for them to see "grown up people" standing on chairs and tables, afraid of a mouse. The members then took special pains to have them enjoy the rest of the afternoon by playing games with them until lunch was announced. This was served with all the delicacy and grace that would have been given to older guests, In fact everything was done to insure them a delightful afternoon, and no pains were spared that they might feel themselves honored guests. The lunch consisted of sandwiches, egg salad, pickles, jelly, ice cream, fancy cakes and coffee. Each member was allowed to bring all her children, but those who were so unfortunate as to have none, could borrow one of a neighbor. We understand this is to be a permanent feature of the annual program of this most excellent club, and in the language of one of its members, "We have enjoyed a happy day for we derive our greatest happiness in giving happiness to others"

Annual Meeting.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the Auburn Mining Co. will be held on Saturday of next week, March 16, at 1 p. m., to elect directors for the coming year. Books will close March 9.

Auburn Talent Recognized.

Monday's Daily:

Each season, the various "assemblies" that are held at favorite gathering places like Lakeside and Chautaugua, suitable talent must be engaged, not only because the benefit of summer gathering come largely from the opportunity they give of hearing the best of singing, preaching, lectures etc. but because the reputation of that especial locality must be kept at a high standard in order to secure its popularity and prominence. Yesterday we alluded briefly to the engagement of Mrs. Sadie Yesbera of this place, to sing for a week at Lakeside the Lake Erie resort that is so popular. To those who have heard her, this will be gratifying news especially if they expect to attend a part of the assembly serson at Lakeside. The management there, will find they have made no mistake in coming to Auburn to secure a high class of vocal music which is always in demand at such gatherings and our own people feel pleased that the selection comes from one of their number. She is also on the program for the meeting of the Ft. Wayne Presbyterial Missionary Society, that meets at Goshen, April 10 and 11.

Will Wed To-morrow.

Our citizens will be surprised to learn of the marriage of Mrs. Anna Bengnot to James Freeman, a prosperous farmer living in Butler township, tomorrow at 12 o'clock. They will go at once to the farm where dinner will be severed.

Junction Items.

Dr. F. B. Wood, of Garrett, passed through this place this morning on his way to Fort Wayne.

Ed. and Al. Bishop started for Chicago last night on B. & O. No. 47.

Ora Snyder, son of S. C. Snyder of the Kiblinger Carriage Co., started for Chicago on No. 5. this morning.

Last evening Henry Mossey's place was visited by three sports who Henry claims exhibited money enough to start a national bank, and wanted to bet him a couple of hundred on the turn of a card. But Henry is too sly a fox to be caught by that old gag, and furthermore he does not allow gambling in his place.

One of Garrett's business men while returning from Auburn last evening seemed desirous of giving the people of this place a temperance lecture. He got out of his wagon near the saloon and when getting in again he started with so much energy that he walked right up over the wagon head foremost out of the opposite side, hitting the hard ground an awful crack with his complexion. After a few minutes he was able to stagger around, and repeated the operation again bruising the ground, But the third attempt was partially successful, as he did not fall out until he had gone nearly half a mile, when his team left him beside the road and proceeded to Garrett. Mr, Robbins escorted the gentleman home. We expect his face has holes enough in it for a "God Bless our Home" motto to be worked in it. His wife will probably work it.

Ed Romeis, operator for the Lake Shore at Auburn, will relieve the agent at Summit for a few days. Mr. Crossley, of this place, will relieve Mr Romeis.

Harry Culbertson, Wabash agent, went to Albion to-day on a business trip.

Levi Holler and Hattie Green, of Newark, Ohio, father and niece of R. E. Holler, of Auburn, will be his guests for a few days.

Yesterday a German purchased at Garrett water tranporation from Baltimore Md., to Bremen, Germany, and evidently forgot that he would have to go to Baltimore. He boarded No. 8. without a ticket to Baltimore. His legs did him great service in getting back from the Junction to Garrett where he will probably get the required credentials and start over again.

All persons interested in fancy poultry are requested to meet in the parlor of the Brunswick hotel at Auburn Jc, Friday afternoon, March 8, for the purpose of organizing an association to be called "The Northeastern Indiana Poultry Fanciers' Association." The expense of joining will be very light and the result will be that Auburn and vicinity will be able to show some very fine specimens of blooded poultry. We all know that there is more money in first class poultry than in the common stock, consequently it will be to the interest of all poultry growers to be present.

Lester Till, of Waterloo, has taken a position with Cory Shugers in the lunch room.

Mrs. Sol Heberling returned to Fremont Saturday after visiting here for a week.

Miss Lipsett, of Goshen, is here visiting in the family of her uncle, D. Z. Hoffman.

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency, Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."
UNITED HOSPITAL AND DISPENSARY, Boston, Mass.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Known Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, Commerce and Crops, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

Robbed and Tortured.

Toledo special: News of a robbery, accompanied by fiendish torture, inflicted on Mr. and Mrs. John Schonbrich, residents of the little town of Ai, west of this city, has reached here. Between $5,000 and $6,000 in cash was taken by the robbers. Schonbrich was known to have a fear of banks and he was suspected of having a large amount of money hidden in his house. The other night his home was entered by four masked men, the 14-year-old daughter admitting them. A demand was made on the old man for his money, and, upon his refusal to tell the hiding place, the robbers roasted his legs over the flames. When the agony became unbearable he told where $1,200 was concealed. His wife was subjected to the same cruel treatment and she finally told her torturers where $4,000 to $5,000 could be found in a barrel of salted meat.

Rescued.

The anchor line steamer Anchori, which arrived at New York from Glasgow recently, rescued at sea on February 25, the crew of the British brigantine Confederate, which was in a sinking condition. The Confederate sailed from St. Johns, N. F., January 8, for Bristol with a cargo of fish oil. On February 21, after having experienced a succession of hard storms the vessel sprang a leak. The water gained steadily and had not assistance come when it did the crew would have been obliged to desert the brigantine. The Sueva brought in to port Capt. Warren and crew of the schooner, Mary E. Amsden, from Calais, Me., for Barbadoes with lumber, wrecked February 10, in latitude 65:16, longitude 48:40. The crew saved nothing but what they had on.

Fatally Shot by Highwaymen.

David Miller, a prosperous farmer residing near Osnaburg, Ohio, while on his way to his farm was attacked by two negroes. He resisted and attempted to draw a revolver, when one of the robbers pulled a gun and shot Miller. He sank to the ground, but, frightened at what had occurred, the colored fellows took to their heels. When picked up Miller was unconscious. The bullet passed through his body an inch below the heart. The wound will prove fatal. Miller is married and has a large family. A posse of Osnaburg citizens and the Sheriff of Stark County are out hunting for the desperadoes.

Get a New Trial.

The case of Francis A. and Percival B. Coffin, who were indicted in Indiana in 1893, on fifty counts, for complicity in the failure of the Indianapolis National Bank, was decided in the United States Supreme Court in an opinion by Justice White. The contention of the defendants that non-officers of a bank could not be convicted for complicity was not sustained, but the refusal of the Judge to charge there existed a presumption of innocence was sustained, and a new trial ordered.

American Ship Needed.

Secretary Herbert has received disquieting advices from Colombia, believed to be from Captain Cromwell, of the Atlanta, relative to the progress of the revolution in that disturbed country. The large American interests on the west side of the isthmus, including the terminal of the Panama Railroad, are very much exposed, there being no warship nearer than Benventura, Colombia, about 300 miles distant, where the Ranger has been stationed since February 20.

Burned to Death.

While preparing dinner for her husband and children by a campfire, near Earlington, Ky., Mrs. Thomas Lundson, who was moving with her family in wagons through the country, was burned to death by her dress catching fire from a stray spark. She came near burning up her children as she ran wildly among them. When she fell to the earth all the clothing was burned from her, and she lived in agony only a few hours.

A Bridge Swept Away.

Lancaster (Pa.) special: The bridge of the Columbia & Port Deposit railroad, over the Susquehanna river at Safe Harbor, was carried away by the great flood and volume of ice together with ten loaded coal cars. A big gorge has formed at McCall's ferry and the water is backing up. Weise's island, a large tract of land in the Susquehanna is nearly covered with water.

Still Another.

While a crowd of young people were rehearsing for an entertainment at Bueker's Schoolhouse, near Massillon, Ohio, Miss Josie Lantz, daughter of John Lantz, was shot in the mouth by a young man named Cloyd Roush. The bullet tore out several teeth, and lodged in the neck. In a drama to be given is a shooting scene. Roush says he forgot the revolver was loaded.

Fearfully Scalded.

The little son of Peter Gnau, who resides at 13 Fourth street, Fort Wayne, Ind., while playing around the house, accidentally fell into a pail of scalding water. The cries of the child quickly called its mother, who was in another room. The child was seriously scalded in the face and will probably die.

Accidentally Drowned.

At Hopkinsville, Ky., While out in a skiff fishing upon Little River, Dora Moss, colored, accidentally fell in the water and was drowned. Several persons were near her and saw her go under the last time, but could not save her.

Wealth Weds.

The marriage of Miss Anna Gould, daughter of the late Jay Gould, to Count Paul Ernest Boniface De Castellane was solemnized Monday at noon, Archbishop Corrigan officiating, at the residence of her brother, George J. Gould, Sixty-Seventh street and Fifth avenue New York.

A Crossing Killing.

Austin Marony, a coal miner and old resident of Shawnee, Ohio, was instantly killed at a crossing on the C., S. and H. Railroad.

Spiritualists Exposed.

Mr. Jacob Garnett's residence at Dora, Wabash County, Ind., was the scene of great excitement the other night, when Prof. Henderson of Anderson, and Doc Small of Wabash, spirit mediums, were exposed and a free fight ensued. Garnett is a Spiritualist, and had invited Henderson and Small out to give a seance. A seance at which a small admisson was charged was given at Garnett's house, which was closed tightly so as to shut out all lights. The audience was treated to various materializations, while tables and chairs danced and spirits addressed those present in poor English. The little town was set agog, and next night the attendance was larger than ever. During a spirit conversation Wilber T. Teegarten struck a match, disclossing Henderson talking through the large end of a horn 10 feet long while Small capered around the room. The circle broke up, furniture was overtured and Small and Henderson were knocked down and tables piled on them. They were finally got out the back way and escaped further punishment.

DISASTROUS FIRE.

Over $600,000 Worth of Property Consumed.

A disastrous fire which started in the heart of the west side factory district, Chicago, caused a loss of $600,000 worth of property. The fire began in the five story brick Kaestner building at 245 South Jefferson street. The burning building stood in the very center of the factory district, flanked on either side by big manufactories and soon the efforts of the fireman were directed entirely to fighting the spread of the flames. Despite the efforts of the fireman the flames spread to the south portion of the Crane Elevator works, which adjoined the Kaestner building on the north. A brisk wind fanned the fire and the loss to the elevator company was heavy.

Five dwellings which were clustered in the vicinity were totally destroyed, and the flying embers started numerous small fires in buildings several blocks away. A panic which will probably result in the loss of life, occurred in the Landcaster caramel factor on Harrison street, several blocks away from the scene. Two hundred and twenty children were at work in the factory, and when the flames from the Kaestner building were seen, some one sounded an alarm. A wild rush for the exits followed, the children becoming crazed with terror. They rushed down the stairways, trampling under foot those who had fallen and several boys jumped from the second-story windows. Help was summoned and eleven children were removed, unconcious, by the ambulances. It is feared that several of them are fatally injured.

HALTING

Seems to be the Condition of Trade in the Country.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: No gold goes out, though sterling exchange has risen close to the exporting point, and it does not yet appear that the syndicate has made any effort to control the exchange market. London has sold about 40,000 shares of stock during the week and the market is distinctly lower for railroad shares, though a shade stronger for trusts. The stock market waits abjectly for London, and foreigners show thus far more disposition to sell than to buy. The withdrawals of gold by the redemption of legal tenders have not ceased, but since the closing of the syndicate contract, have averaged about $120,000 per day. Wheat is ½ cent higher, but clearly not because western receipts are a trifle less than a year ago, nor because exports from the Atlantic coast are small. Spasms of speculative activity must be expected during every season, and when prices are at the bottom, such spasms can only mean an advance. Nothing is seen to justify any material rise, as supplies in sight do not decrease more than they would naturally on account of bad weather.

CUBAN REBELS.

Garcia and Marrero Disband Their Forces.

Tampa (Fla.) special: The Spanish Vice Consul has received from the Governor General of Havana the following cablegram:

"Lopez Colomo, Marrero, and Manuel Garcia have disbanded their forces. Gualbert Gomez surrendered to the Mayor of Sabonilla and asked for clemency."

This was posted in the Spanish Casino under the Consulate seal, and aroused much enthusiasm among the Spaniards. A letter was received by Colonel Figueredo from a party in Colorado stating that a number of soldiers and officers in our late civil war were equipped and ready to fight for Cuban liberty.

Cubans from all over Florida are volunteering. A young Cuban here gave $1,000 to the fund and has left with a party of friends for Cuba. The concentration of revolutionists around Baire is authoritatively stated as being for the purpose of forming a republic and choosing a chief, who will be General Gomez. The Cubans here are entirely satisfied with reported results.

A Death Cage.

A distressing accident occurred at the Fluhart Mine No. 2, near Wellston, Ohio, At the deep shaft mines they use a code of signals similar to those employed by trains in plying the heavy iorn cages from the top to the bottom of the shafts. A car of coal had just been hoisted, and when the cage descended to the bottom four men stepped on it, and one of their number started to give the signal on the bell cord, three taps. Just after he gave the first tap the cage was jerked off the bottom by the hoisting engines above and at the same instant two miners, Henry McNellis, aged 19, and Robert Thompson, an older man, were stepping into the cage, and were thrown between it and the side wall of the shaft. The cage sped upward like a meteor, crushing McNellis and killed him instantly. Thompson sustained terrible injuries from which it is feared he cannot recover.

Wilson to Succeed Bissell.

The President has sent to the Senate the nomination of William L. Wilson of West Virginia, to succeed William S. Bissell as Postmaster General.

The fact that President Cleveland intended to appoint Mr. Wilson to the position has been known for several days to the most intimate friends of Mr. Wilson and to Mr. Wilson himself. The selection is one which the President made of his own motion, without any urging from Mr. Wilson's friends and largely in recognition of the member's service in leading the tariff fight in the House. Few members have been on more intimate terms with the President than has the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and his speeches in the House have always been understood to voice the opinion of the administration.

Trouble in Cuba Ended.

Washington special: It is a question if official dispatches have been received by the Spanish legation here in regard to Cuba, but from unofficial information Minister Muruga thinks that the trouble is about over. None of the many filibustering parties that were announced as ready to start from Key West, Costa Rica and San Domingo have reached Cuba, and the bands of revolutionists in the interior seem to be dispersed. Garcia, the rebel leader, who has been announced as having been killed, has for years occupied a stronghold in the mountains and has occupied himself and his band by carring off plantes and holding them for ransom.

Buried Beneath Falling Walls.

The rear wall of the old six story malt house on the northeast corner of Forty-three street and Tenth avenue, New York, in course of demolition, fell suddenly at 9 o'clock carrying with it and burying in its ruins over a dozen workmen. One man was found dead in the ruins; one man died on his way to the hospital and two are know to be buried in the ruins. They are supposed to be dead. Seven men were injured, some of them fatally. It is thought there may be others in the ruins. The building belonged to A. D. Schewyer. The workmen were engaged in tearing it down.

Over $1,000,000 Loss.

Fire started in Simpson's Dry Goods Store, the largest establishment of the kind in Toronto, Ont., and in less than thirty minutes had completely destroyed it. The fire spread across the street and destroyed Wanless' big jewelry establishment, Love's drug store, Imperial Branch Bank, T. F. Brown's furniture store, Charles Milnes' hardware store, Tremont Hotel, Confederation Life Insurance big brown stone building, Jamison's clothing store, Knox Presbyterian Church, Sutcliff's dry goods store, Bonner's gents' furnishings, and Toronto Furnace Company building. The loss will reach over $1,000,000.

Fiery Blast.

A special from Salina, Kan., says: A terrific fire is raging in the business portion of this city. Already four of the finest brick blocks are in ruins, and although the firemen are fighting heroically, it looks as though all the west side of Santa Fe avenue, from the Ober Block north to Iron avenue, will go up in flames. Fire started in the basement of the Ober Block, a fine three-story structure. The fire has consumed the Ober Block, the Greer Block, the Masonic Temple and is now in the Grand Central Hotel, where a desperate effort is being made to check it. The loss so far is over $300,000.

It Was Loaded.

Homer Hinshaw, aged about 12 years, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Garner Hinshaw, Wilmington, Ohio, went to the home of Mr. Holaday while his parents attended an entertainment at the Opera House. He and Robert Holaday, of about the same age, were alone studying their lessons when young Holaday, getting a 32-caliber revolver of his father's, began snapping it. Hinshaw spoke up and said: "Aim at me if it is not loaded," and he did so. The gun was discharged, the ball entering just over the right eye, lodging in the base of the brain. His parents are prostrate from grief.

Lied About It.

Paris special: The embargo placed upon American cattle is due to the representations made by numerous deputation which have recently been calling upon the minister of husbandry, notably an influential deputation which called upon him on February 22. For some time past a violent crusade against American cattle has been waged in the French press, and description of the alleged terrible condition of American cattle arriving at La Vallette, saying how the animals were a mass of skin, bones and sores. This also appeared in the English newspapers.

Morgan Convicted.

Stafford Court House (Va.) special: The jury in the case of the Aquia Creek train robber, Charles Morgan, brought in a verdict of guilty and the sentence was placed at eighteen years in the penitentiary. To say that the State rejoices over the matter is putting it mildly. Prosecuting Attorney W. Seymore White received in twenty minutes after the verdict the following telegram from Gov. O'Ferral: "Congratulations on your splendid prosecution. Train robbers will seek some other State for their nefarious work. Virginia juries will uphold the law."

Robbed a Depot.

Three masked men entered the Air Line Railroad office at Mt. Carmel, Ill., and held up the agent, William McMahan, and took his money and gold watch. Three waiting passengers were also held up and relieved of their valuables. The robbers tried to make McMahan open the safe, but he told them that he did not know the combination. The robbers then locked the three passengers up in a box car, and after handling the agent pretty roughly told him they would return and blow his brains out if he gave an alarm, and then left.

Two-score Dead.

A special from the City of Mexico, via Galveston, Texas, says: An excursion train coming into the city on the Inter Oceanic Railroad, while rounding a curve on the side of the mountain, five coaches jumped the track and went down the canon. Forty-two people were killed and thirty or more seriously injured. The wreck occurred about twenty-five miles from the city. The wires have been down and it is impossible at this early hour to obtain the details.

Fireman Fatally Hurt.

While the Indianapolis Fire Department was answering an alarm Joseph Keys, of the No. 2's truck, attempted to catch the machine as it galloped by his house. He missed his grip and was hurled headlong against the curb stone. His skull was fatally fractured.

Coinage for February.

The coinage at the mints of the United States during February was as follows: Gold, $6,143,800; silver, $491,000; minor coin, $57,300; total coinage, $6,692,100. Of the silver coined, $200,000 was in standard silver dollars, the same as during the month of January.

All Rescued.

A dispatch from Normanton, England, says that all of the 500 miners who were imprisoned in a pit of the Whitwood-Haighmoor Colliery at that place by a collision of the cages in which the men ascend and descend were rescued during the night.

Ex-Lord Mayor Dead.

Sir Francis Wyatt Truscott, who was Lord Mayor of London the year President Garfield died, and who had the stars and stripes carried in the Lord Mayor's show, is dead.

African Troops Mutiny.

A dispatch from Zanzibar says that a company of imperial East Africa troops marching into the interior a few days ago mutinied because of the cruelty of their leader, Captain Fromm.

Sunday Base Ball Permitted.

The bill to make base ball playing on Sunday a misdemeanor, was defeated in the lower house of the Missouri Legislature.

CABLE TO HONOLULU.

IT IS BADLY NEEDED IN HIS BUSINESS BY UNCLE SAM.

Cost Would Be About $3,000,000; Value Until Added to Commercial and Diplomatic Interests—If We Don't Build It John Bull Will.

Senate Favors It.

The world has waited long for a Pacific cable, but there is a good prospect that it will not have to wait much longer. The recent petition of the Hawaiian republic for permission to grant a cable concession or lease to a British company, transmitted to Congress by President Cleveland with a favorable indorsement, has resulted in emphasizing two important facts—first, the vigorous opposition of the American people to a British cable from Hawaii; and, second, their equally strong desire for an American cable to Hawaii from San Francisco. A Hawaiian cable means a trans-Pacific cable eventually, for a southern link already exists from Australia to the Fiji Islands, and its continuation to Hawaii and the extension of the proposed American cable onward to China and Japan are bound logically to follow soon, for commercial reasons. The proposition engrafted by the Senate on the diplomatic and consular bill, authorizing the President to contract for the laying of an American cable to Hawaii, and appropriating $500,000 as a beginning, probably cannot be deferred beyond the next Congress at the farthest.

The present cost of ocean cables is about $1,200 per lineal mile, for making and laying, and according to the Government survey of 1891 by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department—the best Hawaiian cable route ascertained—that one lying within a favorable natural lane 300 miles wide, with oozy bottom, from Salinas Landing, in Monterey Bay, California, to Honolulu—covers a distance of 2,107 miles by a plumb line. Hence at that rate the cost of making and laying the Hawaiian cable would be $2,528,400; and, allowing $471,600 as expenses for equipment, concessions, franchises, and unforeseen contingencies, the total cost would be $3,000,000—the precise limit of cost fixed in the item incorporated in the diplomatic and consular bill for 1892 as it passed the Senate at the second session of the Fifty-first Congress, but which the House rejected.

MAP OF THE SOUTH PACIFIC—SHOWING CABLE SURVEYS.

Uncle Sam Must Do It.

But since that time the sentiment for a Hawaiian cable has waxed strong, the stirring events in Hawaii during the last two years having illustrated the necessity for quick communication. Clear-headed statesmen in Washington now agree in urging and advocating an American-Hawaiian cable, and the conviction grows steadily that it must come without delay. And since the reciprocity treaty with Hawaii prevents the Hawaiian Government from granting a cable lease or concession to any other power, the only way out of it is for us to lay the cable ourselves, just as Great Britain laid a military cable a few years ago along our eastern seaboard, from Bermuda to Halifax, for the advancement of her own interests, although incorporating it under the quasi-private title of the Halifax and Bermuda Cable Company. If we do not do it, either as a Government or through individuals with Government patronage, it is almost certain that a British cable will be seen to creep before long from the Fiji Islands northeastward to Vancouver, British Columbia, by way of Fanning Island, instead of Neckar, which the British failed to secure last summer, thanks to the vigilance of the Hawaiians, or lease by way of Midway Island, or Ocean Island, or Gardiner Island, all lying northwest from the Hawaiian group.

RIOT AT SAVANNAH.

Mob Attempts to Put a Stop to an Ex-Priest's Lecture.

Savannah, Ga., had been liberally placarded with notices that ex-Priest Slattery and his wife, described as the ex-nun, would lecture Tuesday night on Catholicism. Members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians at once asked Mayor Meyers to refuse permission for the lecture. The petition said that if Slattery was allowed to speak there would be disorder and riot. About 500 signed the petition. The Mayor submitted a written opinion from the corporation attorney to the effect that he, as Mayor, had no power to abridge the right of speech guaranteed by the constitution of the United States and the constitution of Georgia. Mayor Meyers also asked the committee to advise all Catholics to keep away from the lecture.

"I cannot stop this man from lecturing," said the Mayor, who is a Hebrew, "but I can prevent disorder, and I will do so. If the police are not sufficient to do so the military will be appealed to. Riot will not be tolerated." The committee stated that it was their desire to avoid trouble and that they would use their influence in that direction. They did so, but their efforts utterly failed.

By 8 o'clock a mob of some 3,000 to 4,000 surrounded Masonic Hall. In the hall was an audience of about 400, including a number of ladies. The lecturer had hardly begun before there was a shower of brickbats and cobblestones on the window shutters, which had been closed. Cries of "Kill him," "Down with Slattery," "Death to the renegade" were heard. Chief McDermott summoned the Mayor. The lecture closed at 9:30 o'clock, and it was apparent that it meant the loss of many lives for the lecturer and the audience to leave the hall.

Upstairs a number of members of secret organizations, who had cheered Slattery's declaration that he belonged to them, had gathered around the ex-priest to defend him as he left the hall. A number, it was evident, had come armed in anticipation of trouble. As the ex-priest was about to leave the hall with his friends the chief of police stopped them and refused to allow any one to go downstairs. Outside Mayor Meyers and Col. William Garrard were in consultation. The mob hissed at the police and hooted at their orders to disperse. The military alarm, eleven taps on all fire bells in the city, was sent in, but when it sounded the mob derided it.

"Bring on your military," some of the leaders shouted. "To —— with them; they can't save Slattery."

The Georgia Hussars (dismounted), under command of Maj. Mildrim, were the first to respond. The organization contained thirty men in all. The mob evidently believed that this was all it was intended to bring out and laughed at them as they drew up in front of the hall. Soon after the tramp of other military companies was heard and four companies of the Savannah Volunteer Guards, under command of Col. Garrard, swung into position in front of the hall with fixed bayonets and rifles loaded with ball cartridges. By order of the Mayor the guards formed in two single lines and charged the mob with fixed bayonets in hope of dispersing the crowd. The mob was shoved back slowly, but refused to break, and occasionally stones were thrown at the hall. The mob was sullen and defiant, and apparently determined. Six companies from the First regiment, under Lieutenant-Colonel Reilly, came up soon afterward, making eleven companies on the ground.

While a consultation of the commanding officers and the Mayor was held Capt. J. H. Dillon, one of the most prominent Catholics of the city, tendered his services as a peacemaker. He brought Vicar General Cafferty, who is in charge of the diocese in the absence of Bishop Becker, to the scene of the trouble. The vicar general addressed a portion of the mob. "This man Slattery," said he, "can do your church no harm. I plead with you to disperse and go home." A few of those he addressed shook the vicar general by the hand and left, but the majority stood still. Maj. Mildrim and others urged the mob to disperse, but to no purpose. With a double line of soldiers an avenue was formed, and while the rest of the military kept the crowd back nearly all of the audience passed out of the hall amid hisses.

Slattery and his wife were then escorted to their hotel by the military, and several companies were kept on guard during the remainder of the night.

Moans Were Melody.

To gloat over the sufferings of the dying is admittedly an inhuman—a fiendish—thing, yet that is what one woman, who was once wealthy and respected, did in New York city the other day.

Kate Ledwith, aged about 19, had been terribly injured by an explosion of kerosene oil, and lay dying in Manhattan Hospital. Her sufferings were horrible, and yet they gave satisfaction to one woman who saw in the frightful accident the fulfillment of revengeful longings. This woman is Mrs. Christian Meinecke. Two years ago Miss Ledwith appeared as a witness in an action brought by Mr. Meinecke against his wife for divorce. In the court room Mrs. Meinecke called Miss Ledwith a perjurer, and said that she would give all she possessed to see her in a lake of fire.

This revengeful spirit has since remained with her, and when she heard of the explosion she exclaimed: "Thank God, I have now my revenge." When she went to the Manhattan Hospital she was denied admission. However, she expressed her pleasure at the girl's sufferings. Later she was visited by a reporter and this is what she said:

"This Kate Ledwith was my servant in happier days when I lived in luxury with the husband who has now abandoned me. She swore falsely against me, and has met the fate she deserves. I am penniless tonight, with rent unpaid and not a dollar in the world, but my heart is overjoyed.

"The moans of that dying girl were notes of melody to me. If I could have reached her bedside I would have torn off her bandages and shrieked my laughter in her dying ears."

THE western part of Gibson County and northern part of Posey County, is to have the biggest drain ditch in the State. Its source will be five miles west of Princeton and will empty into the Wabash River. It will be 40 feet at he top and average 12 feet deep and 10 miles long, at an estimated cost of over a $100,000. It will be contructed under the laws of 1892. Bonds, covering a period of 20 years will be sold to the highest bidder. The route will be surveyed at once and the contract let. Bids will be advertised for.

A resident of the Indian reservation states that James Sasaquo, known as Jame Sassafras, the venerable Miami Indian, lately died of starvation in his little hut on the reserve. Sasafras was never a Chief of the Miamis, nor was he related to a Chief. He was of plebeian strain, inclined to be lazy and with a passion for firewater, characteristic of the degenerate remnants of his tribe. The Township Trustee had wearied of supplying Sassafras with food and clothing, and requested him to go to the Poor-house, but Sassafras was obdurate and was left to starve alone. A messenger from Gabriel Godfrey, one of the few industrious and thrifty of the Miamis, with a basket of clothing and victuals, called at the little shanty which Sassafras called home, just before the latter's death, but he was too weak to accept the present.

JOHN GRAY, a prominent business man of Logansport, has been honored by one of the leading fire insurance companies of the country for doing something that was without precedent. A large portrait of Mr. Gray has been hung in the directors' office of the insurance company, and beneath it is told that it is the picture of the only man who ever in the history of the company returned excessive insurance money. Mr. Gray some time ago had part of his stock damaged by fire. The loss was immediately adjusted by the insurance company. Later Mr. Gray found that he had been overpaid by the company, and returned the amount to the insurance people.

The buildings will cost $25,000, which has been derived from the stock subscriptions. The place will be known as the "Indiana Chautauqua." The trustees are E. S. Scott, Logansport; E. F. Yarnelle, Fort Wayne; S. C. Dickey and G. W. Brown of Indianapolis, and Charles H. Conner of New Albany.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

FOR lack of a constitutional majority the Senate, Monday, failed to pass the bill giving Brown County the right to vote for a change of county seat from Brownstown to Seymour. The vote stood 20 to 15.

The bill passed appropriating $2,500 for the expenses of a commission to investigate the feasibility of a ship canal from Lake Michigan to the Wabash River, incidentally draining the Kankakee.

A strong fight was made against that section of the military bill which gives militiamen who kill or wound rioters when ordered to fire, the right to be tried by a court-martial, but the provision was retained and the bill was sent to engrossment.

The House passed a bill to provide for the election of county superintendents of instruction in September instead of June as under the present law.

A bill was passed providing for mutual farmers' fire insurance companies. Also a dog law that requires Township Assessors, at the time he makes his visit to assess property, to collect the tax on the dogs reported.

The committee on elections killed most of the bills to amend the election laws, except that of Mr. Leedy, which seeks to regulate the party primary and bring it under some responsibility. The adverse report upon this was set aside on motion of Mr. Leedy, and the bill was ordered to be printed.

THE House, Tuesday, passed the Nicholson temperance bill under the previous question, by a vote of 75 ayes to 20 nays. Other bills passed as follows: To relieve a citizen of Greencastle from double taxation; providing that where a public highway has been of a certain width for twenty years, it shall not be widened; to appropriate $600 for two years for the publication of Indiana Academy of Science reports.

The following bills were engrossed in the Senate: To fix the salaries of county commissioners; to amend the law concerning proceedings in criminal cases; to amend the law concerning public offenses; concerning commercial paper maturing on legal holidays; authorizing the sale of bonds to pay the State debt; relating to partition fences; to repeal an act on the subject of railroad crossings at grade; to regulate the sale of convict-made goods; concerning the incorporation and government of cities having more than 25,000 and less than 49,000 population. The bill refers to Fort Wayne alone; to promote the science of medicine and to provide for subjects for dissection; to provide for repairs on highways; to regulate the practice of dentistry.

THE Senate passed the Wishard-Newhouse legislative apportionment bill Wednesday after nearly four hours of haranguing. The bill now awaits the action of the Governor, having passed both branches of the legislature.

The following bills were also passed: Abolishing the 80 per cent. clause in insurance policies and providing for the full payment of a loss where the insurance covers it; legalizing deeds issued under illegal tax sales; providing for attorneys' fees where an employe has to sue for wages; to create a State Board of Regents to succeed the State Board of Monument Commissioners; limiting the time of service of County Assessors; providing for the relocation of county seats in counties having an area of over 500 square miles; for the protection of owners and keepers of hotels, restaurants, etc.; regulating the powers and duties of township trustees.

The House legalized the fee and salary act of 1891, as it was before a false sheet was inserted in the body of the act by some designing person.

For the first time of the session a Democrat was allowed to act as Speaker for a while, Mr. Adams showing this courtesy to Mr. Bobilya of Allen County.

The second reading of bills was made the order of business of the day and a large number went to engrossment.

THE House Thursday, settled down to the appropriation of money, the direct tax bill for the support of the State educational institutions was passed under suspension of rules. This bill gives Indiana State University at Bloomington a tax of one-fifteenth of a mill on each $100, and one-twentieth each to Purdue University at Lafayette and the State normal at Terre Haute.

The House in committee of the whole passed the appropriation of $234,000 for the Central Hospital for the insane in Indianapolis. The Northern Hospital for the insane at Logansport was given $90,000 for maintenance.

The House passed the fee and salary bill only two Republicans, Dinwiddie and Hunt, voting against it. Like action was taken with the bill ousting custodian Griffin of the State House, and wiping out the 12 per cent. grab of the Attorney General.

As a committee of the whole the house agreed on the appropriation bill, making few changes over the original bill.

The senate passed the military bill providing for an appropriation of $75,000 for the state militia, an increase of $20,000.

The senate also passed the bill abolishing the 12 per cent. clause in the fee and salary bill as a compensation to the attorney general for the collection of the surplus school funds held by township trustees and school trustees.

The bills concerning drainage and the repairs of ditches and supplemental to existing laws for the drainage of swamp lands were passed.

THE House in committee of the whole, Friday, decided upon the following salaries for State officers: Governor, $5,000 salary, $600 house rent, $1,000 for private secretary; Auditor, $7,500; his deputy, $2,000; Treasurer, $6,000; deputy, $2,000; Superintendent, $2,500; State Librarian, $1,500; Reporter of the Supreme Court, $4,000; State Statistician, $2,000; Geologist, $2,500.

The House passed

CHAPTER XII—Continued.

"Oh, Rody, do not be hard upon me! I have nobody in the world to come to but you. How am I to get rid of my husband? Not harming him—I'll not harm him—only let me escape from him. I will do it, and I'm right; your wife says so."

Roderick started.

"Yes, she is quite right," said Silence, not lifting her eyes, but speaking as her husband knew she could speak sometimes, with unmistakable decision.

"My wife is a daring woman to say such a thing."

"Am I?"

She looked up a minute with a quivering lip, and did not attempt to put back her hand, which he had let go, but folded her fingers together, after a way she had, as if to give herself strength, when she had any difficult or painful thing to do.

"This is a very strange advice for my wife—I hope a happy wife—to give to my sister. Your reasons?"

"They are not easy to explain, but I will try." She stopped, then with a firm, clear voice went on again. "If Bella had only herself to sacrifice she might do it, though I am not sure. It is a sin against heaven to condone sin, even in one's own husband. But in this and similar cases a woman does not sacrifice herself alone. There are others upon whom the sins of the father may descend, generation after generation. She must think of them. She is responsible to God for them. If I were in Bella's place"—her voice sunk almost to a whisper; she turned deadly pale and then flushed crimson all over her face—"if I were in your sister's place I would die rather than be mother to a drunkard's children."

There was a total silence. Bella, accustomed to make self the standpoint of all her opinions and acts, perhaps could scarcely understand; but Roderick did. Startled he might be, yet there was something in his wife's stern righteousness which he could not gainsay. As he looked on that small, sweet face, so sweet, yet so strong, he saw in her for the first time not merely his wife, but the woman, the cojoint and yet separate existence, intrusted by God and nature with far more than her own petty life, inheriting—and conscious that she inherited—the destiny which came to her from sacred Eve, "mother of all living."

Man as he was, with a man's natural leaning to the masculine side, with a man's natural blindness to much that women see by instinct, still his wife's words smote him with a certain respect, even awe. That she had strength to say them at all, she so timid, so shy, so reticent, proved how deeply she must have thought and felt on the matter.

"Dear," he said, holding out his hand, "if all women were like you—especially if all sons had mothers like you—there would be fewer bad men in this world."

She answered nothing; but her whole face brightened in recognition of what is to women like her as sweet as being loved—honored. And so, without more arguments, all three seemed tacitly to accept the position which poor Bella had so fiercely insisted upon—that for her, married life, or rather that unholy travesty of marriage which had been her self-inflicted doom, was over and done forever.

"Let her live as a widow," Silence said. "Her life is lost—I know that—but let the sacrifice end here. Let her not submit to be the ruin of some other lives."

"But she may be the ruin of her husband's whom she took 'for better, for worse.' How do you answer that?"

Silence shrunk back, full of pain. "Oh, it is difficult, so difficult, to see the right; worse, perhaps, to do it. Still, still—No," and again the strong, clear Abdiel look came into her eyes—"no, there can be but one right and but one wrong alike for men and for women. She must leave him. Think, Roderick, if the case was reversed, if you, or any other husband, were expected to keep as mistress of your house, as mother of your children, a drunken woman."

"God forbid!"

"Then men ought to forbid it, too. Drunkenness, dissoluteness, anything by which a man degrades himself and destroys his children, gives his wife the right to save them and herself from him, to cut adrift, like a burning ship, and be free. Poverty, contumely, loneliness—let her endure all. Pity her lot, if you will, but to ignore it, to accept it, and submit to it, above all, to let the innocent suffer from it—never! Bella tells me that the law gives her possession of her child for seven years. My advice is let her take it in her arms and fly—anywhere, so that her husband cannot get her back, or make the law follow her. Nay, if I were she, I would defy the law; I would hide myself at the world's end, change my name, earn my bread as a common working woman, but I would save my child and go."

As Silence stood, holding close to her breast the poor babe—she had fetched it, and was walking up and down the room with it, for no one else seemed to have patience with the miserable, sickly, wailing creature—she looked the very incarnation of womanhood in its highest form—motherhood; absolutely calm, absolutely fearless, as mothers ought to be.

Roderick, touched with many new thoughts which come crowding to a man when he has ceased to be merely a young man, absorbed in himself alone, and begun to look into the far future, the future of those who may yet bless or curse him for his part therein—Roderick caught her arm as she passed and drew her to his side.

"Perhaps you are right—I do not quite know. We must take time to think. But just at this moment you must give baby to its own mother and come and sit down by me. Remember, you are mine."

"Yes."

She obeyed, apparently without a thought of disobeying, for the authority was that of love, and the voice, though decisive, was thrilled with unspeakable tenderness. "Mine!" Ah, she acknowledged the possession—the subjection. You could see by her look that she would have served him like a slave; but only him, her just and righteous lord. Never for one moment would she have submitted to unrighteousness or to tyranny.

"What a fierce little woman this is!" he whispered, with a smile. "I never could have believed it of her!"

"Oh, forgive me! It is because I am so happy—so happy! that I can understand what it must be to be miserable."

But Bella's misery, however deeply it had moved her sister-in-law, did not seem to have overwhelmed herself. She began talking over all her affairs, volubly and freely; silent endurance was not her gift. Once having got her brother to agree with her in the opinion which, at any rate, she held to-day, though it might change to-morrow, she became quite cheerful, and planned her future life as a "widow bewitched" with an eagerness that a little astonished Silence.

"If mamma would only give me some money, I could spend the summer in Switzerland, the winter in Paris. I always wanted to travel abroad for awhile; and to be traveling without him, able to go where I liked, and do what I wanted. Oh!"—a sigh of intense relief—"Rody, you must try and persuade mamma to give me plenty of money."

"You forget——" he began, bravely.

"Dear me, yes! I had forgotten all about it. But never mind, Rody dear," in a coaxing tone; "can't you put your wrongs in your pocket, and write to her for me? You always wrote such capital letters; and she would listen to you when she listened to nobody else. Her only son—worth all her daughters put together—at least she thought so. Come—do it. This morning I objected to her being told where I was, but now I see it must be. You'll save me the trouble of it by writing to her yourself."

Poor Bella! She was always ready to lay her burdens upon anybody who was willing to bear them. He knew that, and yet when he looked at her, and heard her familiar caressing voice, the good brother felt again like the little boy who had carried his big sister's parcels, flowers, garden tools, even her doll sometimes, when she got tired of it.

"I cannot write to my mother," he said, with a sad earnestess; "but I will telegraph to her in your name, saying where you are, and that you wish to stay with me—you really do wish it?—till something can be settled between you and your husband—reconciliation or, if it must be, separation."

"Separation—only that; she says so," cried Bella, always ready (another peculiarity—how strangely, cruelly clear they all came out now!)—ready and eager to lay the responsibility of her doings and opinions upon somebody else.

"What I say is," Silence answered, "that if your husband is as bad as you aver, and if you have that hatred to him which you profess to have, there is no righteous course for you but separation. But you must not wander about the world as you propose. Live simply and quietly. Be a real mother and take care of your child. You can never be quite desolate with a child."

Bella shrugged her shoulders. "You have the most extraordinary ideas! But you are a good woman—a very good woman. I shall tell mamma so. It shall not be the worse for you to have been kind to me, my dear," she added, with a certain touch of feeling, and then plunged back into her own affairs, which absorbed her so entirely, and which she expected every one else to be absorbed in too.

Far into the night they talked, for Mrs. Alexander Thomson, who never rose early, was accustomed to sit up late; and, besides, she seemed to take a certain satisfaction in discussing her misfortunes. It was like a person with an ugly wound, or a remarkably severe illness, who at last comes even to take a sort of pride in the same. The self-respect, the reticence, the silence of a broken heart, was not hers at all, though unquestionably she had been a cruelly wronged woman. Taking advantage of her folly, worldliness, and love of wealth and position, her husband's family had married him to her, just to shift from themselves the burden of him—a man who, as she truly said, "wanted a keeper" rather than a wife. She had walked into the snare, open-eyed, but it had been a snare nevertheless; and Roderick, as he heard her revelations, felt his blood boil with righteous indignation, that instinctive chivalry in defense of the injured and weak, which if every strong man felt as he ought to feel there would be no need for feeble women to vex the world with clamors about their rights or their wrongs. The truly noble of either sex never care to put forward either the one or the other.

While Bella talked, Roderick and his wife were almost entirely silent; and when, afterward, day after day passed by, and no answer came to the telegram, or is a second, which, weary of waiting, she sent after it, still they made as few comments as possible on what now began seriously to perplex them both.

Mrs. Thomson did not seem in the least perplexed. She made herself extremely comfortable, without much regarding the comfort of other people, exacted a great deal of attendance, and amused herself with suggesting many luxuries hitherto unknown at Blackhall.

"No, there's no fear of my husband's coming to fetch me," she said one day, in answer to a question of Roderick's. "He is a Richerlieu man all over—hates the country; would never face a Highland pass in winter, and if he came he would run away again. You haven't big enough rooms or grand enough dinners for him. By-the-by, Blackhall is rather a cold house, Silence, and a little gloomy, you'll allow. You ought to keep up good fires, and I think, if I were you, I would have entirely new curtains and carpets before next winter."

Silence smiled. It was one of those numerous little remarks which she had already learned quietly to smile at without showing offense, even if she felt any. As days sped on, the constant presence of an idle woman in a busy house, had, to say the least, its difficulties. The master did not feel them—his wife took care of that—but the mistress did. Many a time would Roderick notice how tired she looked, and why was it so? Had she not Bella to help her?—women were always company for one another at home, while the men were away. His wife's only answer was that silent smile. The fact that her guest was his sister tied her tongue, even with her own husband.

"It is not for very long," she said every morning to herself, and went through the day's work as well as she could. At night she would often creep away, leaving the brother and sister together, and mount to the attic (which Bella had insisted should be made into a nursery, "because there one can't hear the little wretch crying"), to sit with the child in her lap—the ugly, elfish, troublesome child, doomed to disease and weakness from its cradle—and wonder with an agony of pity how it would fight through life, or whether, after all, God's mercy might not be best shown by taking it back again out of a world where nobody wanted it, and into which it had never asked to be born. A great mystery, which none can solve.

She and Bella were always friendly, even affectionate, in a sort of way; but nevertheless she often felt weary, so weary, like a person who had to speak all day long in a foreign tongue. At least such was the moral effect of her sister's companionship. The two women might have been brought up in two hemispheres. Their views of life were so altogether different that they could not understand one another's language at all. Still, this must be borne; and it was borne. Things might have been a great deal worse.

Only when she heard her husband's restless call for her all over the house, and noticed a nervous irritation in him whenever he was left long alone with his sister, Silence began to wish for some sign of their suspense being over. Evidently both husband and mother had discarded the runaway wife, either on her own account or that of her brother with whom she had taken refuge.

"We row in the same boat now, Rody," Bella said one morning, when the seventh day's post had gone by. "I don't care; do you? Clearly you will have to adopt as waifs and strays both me and the child. I'll call it after you, 'Roderica,' or perhaps 'Silence,'"

"No, not Silence," he answered, hastily. "I beg your pardon, but there can be only one Silence in the world for me," taking lovingly his wife's hand. "Advise with her, Bella; she will be sure to suggest the wisest and best thing."

But when the sisters-in-law talked things over, which they had full opportunity of doing, for a deep fall of Christmas snow shut them in, and made Blackhall impregnable even to more courageous and less luxurious folk than Mr. Alexander Thomson, they came to no satisfactory conclusions. Though strong on the question of her wrongs, and her corresponding rights, Mrs. Thomson seemed to have a very feeble idea of her duties. To any course which involved the slightest trouble, or exertion, or self-denial, she always offered innumerable mild but insurmountable objections.

"It's all very fine to tell me that if I cut my husband adrift, and refuse to live with him, I can't expect him to maintain me, and must maintain myself; how can I maintain myself? It isn't genteel for women to work, and it isn't pleasant, either. You talk of independence and all that, and the comfort my child will be to me; but I don't like children; and I'm sure, Silence, I shall never enjoy being poor. You know"—she glanced round the old-fashioned room, and helped herself with an air of exemplary condescension to the best dish of that meal which had been considered dinner, but which she always called lunch—"you, my dear, who have always been accustomed to that sort of thing, may find it easy, but I should not."

"No," said Silence, absently. She was thinking, not of herself, but of her husband—of his long, hard-working days spent at the mill, amid surroundings not too pleasant and with the perpetual whir of machinery in his ears; and to sensitive organizations incessant noise is of itself a torment almost indescribable, though unexplainable to those who do not understand this. He did, and felt it, too, yet he never complained. Even now, as Silence watched him come up the brae, with somewhat lagging steps, she knew he would enter with a cheerful face, and when he had "put off the mechanic, and put on the gentleman," as he said, laughing, one day to Bella, be his own tender self to both of them. For the common notion that a man may justifiably vent all his business worries on his womankind at home did not seem as yet to have occurred to Roderick Jardine. Whatever vexed him out-of-doors, in-doors he was always the kind, pleasant master and husband—always, under all circumstances, the gentleman.

"Yes, I like my work," he answered, when his sister inquired about it, which she rarely did, evidently considering it a topic which had better be ignored. "And I like working. Once, Bella, I was a great idler, and she has cured me of that. If I had ten thousand a year even, I could never could be idle any more.

WEASEL KILLS A RAT.

A Battle in an Oat Bin in a Country Store in Maine.

"During my recent trip to Maine," said a commercial traveler, "I was at the store of a country merchant one morning trying to sell him a bill of goods. Happening to step into the back room, used in part as a store-house for potatoes and grain, I saw a slender little white animal running about as if perfectly at home, which I recognized as a weasel in his winter coat. I threw a potato at him, which of course failed to hit and did not seem even to alarm the weasel, and coming back into the front store I spoke to the merchant about the wild beast running at large on his premises.

"'Oh, that's all right,' he said. 'I'm very glad he's taken up his quarters with me. I wouldn't have him hurt or driven away on any account. The rats have been bothering me a good deal, eating my potatoes and grain, but he'll make short work of them. They'll never stay in any place where a weasel is.'

"We were still sitting by the stove talking when there came a loud squeaking from the back room.

"'I'll bet the weasel's caught a rat,' cried the merchant, and we both ran back to the store-room to see what was doing there.

"Surely enough, there was a hot fight on between a big rat and the weasel. The weasel had the rat cornered in a bin half filled with oats. He had evidently failed in his first attack and the second round was about to begin. The rat was bleeding from two fine punctures in the neck, but he presented a determined front, his teeth snapping savagely at each approach of the weasel, which ran lithely to and fro watching for an opening for an attack. Neither animal apparently took any note of our presence.

"The weasel's tactics plainly were to drive the rat from the corner, and it was interesting to watch his feints and rushes. At his close approach the rat would dart forward to snap at his elusive foe, and immediately back into his corner again. The weasel was everywhere at once, feinting to attack him in front, running around him along the top and sides of the bin, and working to keep the rat on the move.

"At last he ran down the side of the bin behind the rat as if to attack him in the rear. The rat whirled, snapped viciously at the weasel, which drew back out of reach, whereupon the rat, seeing his enemy upon one side and a clear space on the other, turned and bolted from the corner. Before he had half crossed the bin the weasel was upon him and had seized him by the neck close to the head, his slender body hugging close to the rat's, so that animal could not turn his head sufficiently to bite him. That took the fight out of the rodent, which ran about squealing, the weasel holding fast and sucking his blood until the rat dropped.

"When quite sure that his victim was dead the weasel tried to drag him from the bin, but was not equal to the task. It was with some difficulty that we drove him from his prey, and so long as we remained in the store-room he repeatedly tried to seize the rat, which the merchant took to the front door and flung far out into a vacant lot across the road.

"'If I left the rat in the bin the weasel would bury it among the oats, after he found he couldn't drag it away to hide,' he said. 'It's only a week that I've seen him round, and I've taken five rats out of that bin already.'"

An average of eighteen suicides each day are annually recorded in Paris during the month of June; in December the average is eleven.

THE 53D CONGRESS.

ITS RECORD BETTER THAN THAT OF THE FIFTY-FIRST.

What Has Been Done Will Remain Forever a Permanent Benefit to the Country—Price of Sugar Is Highest Where Duty Is Highest.

Has Done Much Good.

Many things expected of the Fifty-third Congress have not been accomplished. Its record has not been such as to make all true Democrats rejoice, and it has been called "incompetent" by not a few prominent Democrats and Democratic newspapers. Many of its most severe critics, however, recognize that, as compared with the Fifty-first, or McKinley Congress of 1890, the record of the last Congress is excellent.

It is not disputed that the McKinley Congress was more effective in that it did more of what it was planned to do. But that is just why the record is so bad—it planned nothing for the good of the country at large. It accomplished nothing—aside from making ordinary appropriations—for the good of manufacturers, mine-owners, bounty grabbers and subsidy hunters.

It greatly increased the protection to the mill-owners, but left labor unprotected, to compete, on a free-trade basis, with the Italians and Huns imported by the mill-owners to beat wages down. It added considerably to the sawdust protection given to farmers, and attempted the new bunco game called "reciprocity," which was to open up great markets for our farm products in South America, as if the great desire of South Americans was to exchange their wheat and pork for our pork and wheat. It threw bounties and subsidies in all directions, so that, by March, 1893, the $100,000,000 surplus held by Cleveland in 1889 was entirely exhausted and the treasury was on the verge of bankruptcy.

The Fifty-third Congress has accomplished a great deal. First, it undid the Sherman silver purchase act of 1890, which, with Republican extravagance, was responsible for the panic and depression which had already begun before Harrison left the White House. Second, it repealed the Federal election laws, which no leading Republican, except Senator Force Bill Lodge, would now rehabilitate. Third, it gave us fre wool and reduced tariff duties generally about as much as McKinley increased them. Fourth, it gave us the income tax, which, though it is not perfect, is yet a great improvement upon any tariff system of taxation. It is noticeable that Republicans are not advocating the repeal of this tax. Fifth, it abolished the payment of bounties to sugar producers. Sixth, it lessened the net protection to the Sugar Trust, but, unfortunately, increased the duty on refined sugar about one cent per pound. But for two or three traitors in their ranks—"Senators from Havemeyer"—the Democrats would have given us free sugar and left no protection to the trust.

It is noticeable that the most that the Fifty-third Congress did, or attempted to do, was to undo the work of the Republican Congress of 1890. So far as it has succeeded, it has done excellent work. Practically, all that the Fifty-first Congress did was bad, and all that the Fifty-third Congress has done is good. And yet the Democratic Congress receives kicks and cuffs from all sides, because it could not, in two years, undo all of the evil legislation that Republicans have, for thirty years, been fastening upon this country. The Democrats have partially failed because they undertook too big a contract. What they have done will remain forever a permanent benefit to this country. Not even the Republicans will dare to advocate many of their old laws which the Democrats have repealed.—Byron W. Holt.

What Free Wool Is Doing.

The Dry Goods Economist, one of the best authorities on the subject, said editorially Feb. 23, on the effects of free wool: The American woolen industry has now entered a period when the heat of the conflict has passed and the combatants are in a frame of mind to listen to the sober logic of cold facts. Never have these been better presented for the consideration of those interested than in the letter prepared by Abraham Mills, the well-known New York wool broker, for the use of the Chamber of Commerce, a copy of which will be found on page 9 of this issue. Mr. Mills very justly characterizes the adoption of free wool under the new tariff as a revolution; for so it was, succeeding, as it did, a policy of protection which had lasted for upwards of eighty years, during many of which years the tariff rate was preposterously high. According to the opponents of reduced tariff rates, the reduction of duties on the manufactured fabrics was to result in the closing of the majority of the mills and the abolition of the wool duties was to annihilate the flocks. But what are the facts as they stand revealed to-day? More woolen factories are open than in the active times of 1892, and a considerable number of new woolen mills have either been built or are now commenced.

The sheep flocks of the country numbered at the end of 1894 42,294,064, against 45,048,017 at the end of 1893, and showed a decrease in value of 20 per cent., against 25 per cent. in other farm animals, such as horses. This, it must be remembered, is the result five months after the removal of duties which had been supposed to be the back bone of the sheep raising industry for the greater part of a century. Further comment is unnecessary.

Mr. Mills draws attention to the fact that since the abolition of the wool duties foreign wools have not found so large a market here as was anticipated, and those that have are chiefly in the coarsest and finest grades, the domestic wools being preferred in the medium prices and qualities. The deluge of foreign wools, which was to sweep everything before it, has not materialized and the prices of the domestic product have held their ground with wonderful firmness when it is considered that the world's product of wool is now admitted to be in excess of the requirements.

Equally delusive and without foundation were the statements of the high protectionists that the inrush of foreign woolen fabrics under the new tariff would supplant the larger portion of the products of the domestic manufacturers, facts already demonstrating that the quantity of foreign goods entered early in the year was less than expected. So far from the domestic woolen industry being destroyed, nothing is more plainly apparent, after five months' experience, than that the majority of the best makes of domestic woolens and worsteds are well able to hold the home market against foreign competition.

Prices of Sugar in Different Countries

The Sugar Trade Journal (organ of the sugar trust) cannot understand why there is such a howl from one end of the country to the other, because the duty on refined sugar has been increased. To show us how well off we are the Journal of Feb. 21 quoted the prices of sugar in various countries. "The retail price of granulated sugar in the United Kingdom," it said, "is now 1¼d per pound (2.54 cents), while the same sugar sells in Germany at 3d (6.09 cents), in Russia at 4½d (9.13 cents), in France and Belgium at 5½d (11.07 cents), and in Italy at 6d (12.18 cents), and in the United States at 3.74 cents per pound. If there was no duty the price would be 2⅝ cents per pound for American granulated and 2½ cents for foreign granulated in the United States, or quite as low as in the United Kingdom. All the other countries tax the consumers of sugar heavily and pay the bounties on the exports out of the money so raised. Compared with the people of the world the United States is the most favored nation as regards the cheapness of its sugar supply."

These prices prove too much. Comparatively we may be better off than most other protected countries in which sugar is highly taxed. But why are not our people entitled to 2½ cent sugar? As the Sugar Journal says only the duty is in the way. And this would not have been in the way but for the sugar trust—which now is undoubtedly the most hated of all our large brood of protected trusts.

Do we see any evidence of the blessings of high-priced sugar in Italy, France, Russia or Germany? Does it make their citizens happy and prosperous? The great masses of the citizens of these countries cannot afford to eat sugar at all, at the prices which they must pay for it. The per capita consumption of sugar is small in all of these countries as compared with the consumption in this country or in Great Britain. Let the United States be as wise as England rather than as foolish as Italy or Russia. Cheap food and clothing is a blessing to the citizens of any country.

The only point thoroughly demonstrated by these prices is that the tariff—at least on sugar—is a tax. Prices of sugar are highest in Italy, because the duty is highest there; and lowest in England, because sugar is free there. If sugar were free in all of these countries the price would vary but little in different countries.

He'll Bet the Tariff's a Tax.

He sat at his door at noonday, lonely and gloomy and sad,
Brooding over the price of his corn crop and figuring how much he had.
He had worked from early springtime, early and late and hard,
And he was counting his assets and figuring out his reward.
He figured that it took two acres to buy his two boys new boots,
And ten acres more on top of this to fit them out with new suits.
To buy his wife a protected dress took a hundred bushels more,
While five acres went in a solid lump for the carpet on the floor.
His taxes and his grocery bill absorbed his crop of oats,
While the interest on his farm mortgage took all his fattened shoats.
The shingles on his cowshed and the lumber for his barn
Had eaten up his beef steers and the balance of his corn.
So he sat in his door at noonday, lonely and gloomy and sore,
As he figured up his wealth a little less than it was the year before.
"By gum, they say I'm protected, but I know there's something wrong;
I've been deceived and gulled and hoodwinked by this high protection song.
They told of rebellious traitors and held up the bloody rag,
And I followed along like a pumpkin, and now I am holding the bag.
But from this time on I'll investigate, and get to the bottom of facts,
And I'll bet four dollars, to begin with, that the tariff is a tax."
—Kingman, Kan., Democrat.

Our Labor the Cheapest.

Two of the largest exporting firms in New York have recently consolidated under the name of Flint, Eddy & Co. Mr. Eddy, in discussing our export trade the other day, made some significant statements that knock the bottom and sides out of the "protection to American wages" argument of the McKinley tribe of Republicans. In no other country, he says, is the motive power for manufacturing so cheap as it is here. No other country has so much water power or such supplies of cheaply produced coal. Wages are higher here than abroad, but the cost of labor is not; "it is made so much more efficient by the use of improved machinery that the cost per dollar of production is at least as low as in any other country." Raw materials are produced here in enormous abundance, and nearly every article required for manufacture is now admitted duty free. Mr. Eddy therefore sees no reason why American manufacturers should not enter into general competition with European manufacturers in the markets of South America. South American merchants are already beginning to learn the advantages of dealing with this country; they are overcoming the force of habit, and the drift of South American trade is toward the United States, which is already the chief purchaser of South American coffee and rubber, and has now removed the duties that had been levied upon Argentine wool. It is of the more importance to us to extend our exports of manufactured goods, for the Argentine Republic is becoming a serious competitor as a wheat exporter, and our export of meats to Europe is always subject to attacks from the land-owning classes.

In a careful investigation by two Italian meteorologists, it has been found that a veil of cirrus clouds absorbs as much as 30 per cent. of the sun's rays, while a slight fog, equally diffused in all directions, may intercept from fifty-eight to ninety-two per cent. of the solar rays that would be transmitted with a clear sky.

More about that Problem.

CONCORD, IND., March 4, 1895.

MR. EDITOR:—

In regard to L. J. Miller's beef problem, I am like Mr. Shatto, Mr. Winslow's solution may be right, but I don't exactly agree with him. Here I have solved it my way:

As A and B. bought half of a beef which weighed 200 pounds, it is obvious that one quarter weighed 100 pounds and the other also weighed 100 pounds. Then the fore quarter, 100 pounds, at 5½ cents per pound, is equal to $5.50, and the hind quarter, 100 pounds, at 6½ cents per pound is equal to $6 50, and the two are worth $12.00 Now the question is how much beef should each man receive if each gets $6.00 worth. Well. we will say B takes his share, or $6 00 worth, out of the hind quarter. Then there is left 50c worth of the hind quarter which A takes to make him $6 00 worth Fifty cents worth of the hind quarter at $06½ per pound is equal to 7 9 13 pounds hind quarter, 100 pounds less 7 9 13 pounds equals 92 4-13 pounds, which is the number of pounds B gets. Fore quarter, 100 pounds plus 7 9 13 pounds equals 107 9 13 pounds A gets.

Respectfully,
CHAS. GIBFORD.

Washington Letter.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, March 4, 1895.

President Cleveland certainly had cause to be glad when the fall of the gavels of Vice President Stevenson and Speaker Crisp announced the legal end of the Fifty-third Congress. It is not believvd that any other President has ever had as hard a physical task imposed upon him as has been performed by President Cleveland in the last 48 hours of almost continual work of the most wearing sort. Up to Saturday only two of the thirteen regular appropriation bills had become laws an unprecedented state of affairs and eight of them were still in conference. Since then they have all been acted upon. To get an idea of the enormous amount of work the President had to perform it must be remembered that the more important of these appropriation bills consist of hundreds of pages of itemized appropriations, and that President Cleveland never signs his name to anything without knowing just what it is, although he had in this case to sign bills containing items and amendments that were decidedly objectionable, because the bills containing them could not be vetoed without making an immediate extra session necessary, something that he had no desire to do, if it could possibly be avoided. Later on there may have to be an extra session of Congress called, but there is at present a good prospect of escaping it entirely, unless there shall be another run on the Treasury for gold.

It is not often that members of the opposition party pay as high a tribute to the ability and patriotism of a member of the cabinet as Senators Aldrich, of R. I., and Lodge, of Mass, did to Secretary Herbert in their speeches in the Senate against a reduction of Secretary Herbert's estimates for the Naval Appropriation. Secretary Herbert has every right to feel proud of such compliments, deserved though they were.

Among those who extended congratulations to Postmaster General Wilson, who succeeds Mr Bissell, was General John E. Mulford, of New York, now visiting his old-time colleague in the arrangements for the exchange of Union and Confederate prisoners, Representative Hatch, of Mo. It was the first time that Mr. Wilson had met Gen. Mulford since the war. Grasping him warmly by the hand the new Postmaster General said, "General, I am overjoyed to meet again. You had me in charge as a prisoner of war. I have never forgotten from that hour to this your soldierly bearing, your genuine courtesy, and the kindly interest you took in every prisoner on you boat on that occasion. I greet you with the greatest kindness and respect."

SUPPLEMENT

CONCORD.

B. Phillips and family left last Tuesday for their eastern home.

Ricketts, Hull and Sheldon's attended the funeral of baby Wasson, a relative, in Spencerville last Tuesday.

J. A. Wyatt is visiting his sister Mrs. H. H. Bhler, near Canton, Ohio.

The measles and mumps have almost subsided, Cora and Marie Baker are the only ones reported at this writing.

J. L. Woodcox is taking the census of this township.

Nelson Morr, of Auburn, is visiting his aunt.

L. D Nelson and Abe Culbertson are making arrangements to erect their new barns shortly.

Lester Cobler and Laura Layman were quietly married Sunday evening.

Victims of grip, Alice Draggoo, James Henresey, John Milliman.

Saturday Kert Watt came over to the store horseback, made his purchases and started home on foot, when the thought struck him about his horse. It must be his girl or the new barn that engrossed his thoughts so deeply.

Mrs. Ida McClure and two children, of Payne Ohio, are visiting her father, Uriah Johnson.

S. T. Lutz and family entertained friends from Warsaw last week.

Anna Baker and two children spent a few days visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs Joseph Koch, of Fairview.

G. W. Reed, who has been visiting his many friends will shortly leave for his Michigan home.

BUTLER.

William Fields has moved back to Edgerton and left a few mourners.

The sick people are generally improving except Mrs. Scranton, who is reported not so well.

The sad news was received last Saturday that a son of Timothy Dunn had been accidentally killed in a saw mill in Michigan. He was grown up and well known by many of our people. His remains were interred there.

The Chicago clothing store, that unfurled its wings for a few brief days at Butler in its eastward flight from Chicago, has not been a very great success.

Tom Malvern, of Ashley was here last Monday. He was unloading the old Mays property on east North street, on Jerry Barber. We hope Jerry will fix the old place up as it will improve that end of town The place can be made into a pleasant home by a little improvement.

All the revival efforts have closed and considerable good has been accomplished.

Sam G. Stone is improving, but not well enough to return down town.

John Gaff, living one and a half miles east of town, is about to sell his little farm and move to town.

CORUNNA.

Ugh! How it did chill a feller Monday after having a few sunshiny days.

Emmet Stearns was at home last week.

Mrs. Doctor Snyder is still very poorly.

Garry Rudolph, of Chicago, visited his parents and sister, Jessie, last week.

Mrs. Jeff Orr is down sick with something like the lagrippe.

The union meeting, instead of closing last Sunday, still seems to be growing in interest.

Mrs. Murphy's mother, of Findly Ohio, is visiting with her and family this week.

Jim DeLong and family are away on another visiting tour.

The wells are dry, the cisterns are dry, and some of the "wets" are dry, in fact it seems like every is getting dry.

A SEVERE WINTER.

The Cause of Suffering and An Increase of Diseases.

This winter has been the most severe for many yeats. North, South, East and West have cold and blizzards have prevailed. This will surely cause a great increase of sickness and death. Chronic catarrh and consumption always begins by catching cold. Thousands have started on the road toward a lifetime of misery from chronic catarrh or a sure death from consumption. It is not too late yet to be saved and restored to a life of health and activity. Pe-ru-na will do it. It never fails to quickly cure chronic catarrh less than two years old. Of course Pe-ru-na cures thousands and thousands of cases of chronic catarrh that have run for many years, but in cases that are of more recent origin it cures, quickly, certainly and permanently. Every case of cold or cough that has resulted from the effects of our severe winter could not be cured in a short time by Pe ru-na. Not a single one need fail.

All those taking Pe-ru-na who desire the advice of Dr. Hartman about their cases should write, giving age, sex, disease and time of sicknes, and he will answer free. A few weeks' treatment now will prevent years of suffering, and in many cases death. Address The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio, for a free book on catarrh, colds, cough, lagrippe and consumption

Notice of Final Settlement of Estate

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the estate of Christopher Cloy, deceased, to appear in the DeKalb Circuit Court, held at Auburn, Indiana, on the 15th day of March, '95, and show cause, if any, why my Final Settlement Accounts with the estate of said decedent should not be approved; and said heirs and all others interested are notified to then and there make proof of heirship or claim and receive their distributive shares.

Witness my name this 20th day of February, 1895.

FRANK CAMPBELL, Executor.

CHAS. EMANUEL, Attorney for Estate.

Notice of Administration.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned has been appointed by the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, of the State of Indiana, administrator of the estate of James Till, deceased late of said County.

Said estate is supposed to be solvent,

ELMER E. STAMETS, Administrator.

February 26, 1895.

NOTICE OF FINAL SETTLEMENT OF RECEIVERSHIP.

Simon J. Peabody vs The Indiana Dimension Stock Company.

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in said Company to appear in the DeKalb Circuit Court, held at Auburn, Indiana, on the fourth day of April, 1895, and show cause if any, why my Final Settlement accounts as receiver of said Company should not be approved; and all persons and claimants interested in the distribution of the effects of said Company are hereby notified to be present at said time and place.

Witness my hand and seal this 4th day of March, 1895.

Court.

Frank Jones is grand jury bailiff and Charlie Crew is bailiff of the court room The case of Jones, vs. the Grand Rapids road, which was tried last year is to be re-opened and tried before Judge Adair. It will be remembered that the verdict at the original trial, was set aside. A. B. Walsworth, administrator of the Bassett estate reports the completion of inventory of the property. Aldrich vs the Monitor Co. has been dismissed, Aldrich paying up the costs. R. D. Delba and Lillie Mead were married and that ended a bastardy suit.

Court started up to-day promptly, with plenty to do and people enough to do it The attorneys in the case of Kelly vs. Wabash road, that was tried last term were on hand again. They are Stuart and Hammond They are determined to fight it out in spite of the decision against them. Mr. Shuman, representing Shuman and Roby was also on hand. Attorneys Phillips and Loss, of Waterloo, Coats, of Butler, Coyell, of Garrett. and Judge Morris, of Ft. Wayne, and Bratton, of Angola, were all here at the beginning and ready for business. Our home attorneys except Baxter who is on the Purdy case at Ft. Wayne, are all on hand and as busy as bees. It is evident that this will be a working session. The cases against J. G. Johnson, of Waterloo were expected to come up early, but of course no work of that kind comes on till several days later.

Joke on Himself.

A. J Ralston don't object to telling a joke, even at his own expense. For a month or more he has been of the opinion that in common with many other citizens his own had gone dry. So he has been melting snow to supply the deficiency, or carrying water from the neighbors' cisterns. Last week he concluded to investigate, when he discovered that the sucker on his pump was played out. He put in a new sucker and it threw water all right. There was about ten barrels of water in the cistern The day the rain set in he had the cistern emptied and cleaned so as to secure a fresh stock of clean water. But just as the job was done the rain stopped and he was "out of water" again. We presume the later rain helped him out.

William Gulick and Mrs Nora Shepherd were married last Saturday evening. They will go to housekeeping in one of Mr. Brinkerhoff's houses on south VanBuren street.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phœbe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her, and she says it saved her life. Mr Thomas Eggers, 139 Florida St., San. Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption. He tried without result, everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medecine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50c. and $1 5

ATTEMPTED BURGLARY AT GARRETT

Guy Mallonee Tries to Steal Money in the Postoffice.

Guy Mallonee, a young man about eighteen years of age, and whose home is in West Virginia, attempted to rob the money drawer in the Garrett postoffice yesterday. He asked Miss Dolan, the postmistress, for some envelopes and paper, and as she passed to the front of the room to get them, he reached in at the delivery window and opened the drawer. This drawer contained only stamps and he closed it and opened the one under it, and was trying to get the paper money, and by so doing jingled the silver. Mrs. Thumma was in the rear of the office and this called her attention and she was at the drawer before he could remove any money. Mallonee was taken by Marshal Schreiner and the two went before Attorney Gengler and he advised them to bring him to Auburn for safe keeping as United States marshals would take charge of him Marshal Schriner brought him over last night and he was placed under Sheriff Stroh's care and was taken to Fort Wayne this afternoon by a United States marshal. Mallonee was visiting night foreman, Elmer Creal, at Garrett, and it is a surprise to all that he attempted this robbery. He has relatives at Baltimore who are connected with a bank as president and cashier and had over $16 on his person!

THE legislature passed the legislative apportionment bill. On Monday Gov. Mathews vetoed it on the ground that it was unconstitutional. The constitution says it to be done at the next session after the enumeration of voters is taken. They are to be taken this spring, so the apportionment should be made two years later, in '97. But both houses passed it again over the veto. The republican members from Lagrange and Steuben voted with the governor's views. The rest voted with their parties.

BILL to put a stop to winter racing at Roby has been passed, but on Monday, it was stolen The matter is being investigated.

Bro. Weamer, of the Bristol Banner, has this to say of our fellow townsman: "Chas. Eckhart and wife, of Auburn, Ind., were the guests of the Banner family over Sunday, returning to their home via Elkhart Monday morning. Mr. Eckhart is the founder of the Eckhart Carriage Co, of Auburn. Twenty years ago Mr. Eckhart began the buggy business in that place, doing all the work himself except the iron work, and we are not sure but he even did that. He was strictly honest and manufactured an article that made for him a reputation that has built up a business of which himself and his city are proud, for now from three to four thousand buggies and carriages are made and sold annually from this small beginning. Auburn has not more advantages than has Bristol, and a factory might be built up here that would enrich its projectors and build the town at the same time. There are three or four carriage factories in Auburn, all doing a large, profitable business, and these factories are the life of that city. We enjoyed the visit of our good friends and we shall look forward with pleasure to another visit promised for the coming summer when we can show the beauties of Bristol and vicinity."

On next Sunday evening, March 10 there will be held in the First M. E. church of this place, a union temperance meeting to which all are cordially invited. Rev. A. S. Wooton will deliver a sermon on the subject of Scientific Temperance instruction in our Schools Ministers from the other churches will be present and take part in the exercises of the evening.

The Elbe disaster has found its way into the German reichstag, where the government representatives in debate warmly defended the steamship company while the Socialists bitterly attacked it, saying that the discipline on the ship was bad and the water-tight compartments anything but water-tight. Most unreasonable fellows, those Socialists. They don't seem to understand that the primary purpose of a steamship company is to make money and they really cling to the idea that such a corporation owes some duty to the people who travel in its iron coffins.

In one of its latest decisions the Supreme Court declares that negligence as a cause of action against a railroad company must be proven, and that the finding of the body of a man on the tracks does not create a presumption that he came there by reason of the company's negligence. This ruling will have a far-reaching effect upon damage suits brought against railroad companies for injuries received on their property. The assumption will be made that the tracks were amply guarded, and the plaintiff will be compelled to prove his point and show by evidence that they were not. It is notorious that the law regarding protection at railroad crossings is constantly and flagrantly violated. When, however, the victim to this negligence has been killed it becomes almost impossible to bring witnesses to the fact of violation at the particular time.

The worm has turned. The biter has been bitten. Let the unusual fact be duly recorded. A few days ago Farmer John Sheffield, of Manchester Cross Roads, N. Y., received a mysterious circular letter inviting him to go to New York City and buy "green goods." He went. He was taken in tow by a "green goods" operator as soon as he reached the town and was steered into a den in an obscure hotel, where he met two other men who had money to sell at cut rates. These gentlemen showed him $1,600 in crisp new bank notes, and assured him that he could have the bundle for $200 spot cash. Whereupon Farmer Sheffield, while examining the alleged counterfeits, hastily gathered in the pile, planked down $200 in payment and pocketed his purchase. The three swindlers made a united rush upon him, and in just ten seconds he had pummeled all of his assailants into insensibility and sauntered out of the place humming, "This is the way I long have sought and mourned because I found it not." Farmer Sheffield reported the occurrence to the New York police, and is held to await the appearance of some one to lodge a complaint against him. Let him go—and give him medal for being the only man who ever beat a gang of New York sharpers at their own game. The Sheffield currency game is a daisy.

In the death of Isaac Pusey Gray the State of Indiana and the field of American politics lose a most familiar and interesting figure. During a lifetime which was filled with activity and useful work, he held and discharged acceptably a number of posts from which he often seemed prepared to step into the coveted office of the Presidency. His public career began with the civil war, when he assumed command of one of the Indiana regiments. After the war he became President of the Indiana Senate, being elected as a Republican. It was not until seven years after quitting the battlefield that he joined the Democratic party, in which he figured so prominently. During his terms in the Governorship of Indiana he acquired the prominence which made him a "Presidential possibility," but for some reason due either to the man himself or the destiny which orders the affairs of politics his career never brought him higher than a State position. It was in recognition of good and faithful services that President Cleveland made him Minister to Mexico, but it would seem that the limitations of the man confined him to a career in which he could do valuable work as a State leader, but could not break out into the larger field of national politics.

While the pungent paragraphers are inveighing against the ten-acre theater hat, they should aim a few shafts of sarcasm at the thirsty members of the male persuasion who slide out between acts to "see a man," and return with a breath that causes those sitting near them to imagine that the opera house has suddenly been metamorphosed into a distillery or a gin fizz factory. There is also the sweet scented masher who is always nudging any attractive young lady who happens to occupy the next seat. There are just as disagreeable things in theaters as the overgrown hat.

Bravo, Baudelon! So long as there are ships and machinery, cylinders, cranks, piston rods, shafts or rudders will give out at some time; and if this time happens to coincide with the occurrence of a hurricane, then are gathered together the conditions of a great calamity. Out of the night, the storm, the awful sea, the crippled ship, have come all those chronicles of calamity that freeze the blood in the old shipwreck stories. In such a case the one hope is a hero. All depends upon a man. If the right man is there all will go well, though the way be through gloom, danger and doubt. If the right man is not there, if one of the feeble brethren is in his place, that is the end of the story of that ship. The man must be one of stout heart and cool head; undismayed by danger and unshaken by the sense of his enormous responsibility; skilled in trouble and in the ways to meet it. For such a man great critical occasions are after all only opportunities. Baudelon was the man for the occasion in the Gascogne's great battle, and so we say, Well done, Baudelon! Lucky fellow to have such a chance; lucky company to have such an officer, and lucky passengers to be in the hands of a captain who knew what to do and how to do it.

GEORGE WALLACE JONES.

Resides at Dubuque and Is the Oldest Living Ex-United States Senator.

Gen. George Wallace Jones, of Dubuque, Iowa, is the oldest living ex-United States Senator. Recently he celebrated his 90th birthday. He was born in Vincennes, Ind., April 12, 1804. His father, John Rice Jones, was born in Merionethshire, Wales, in 1765, took three diplomas from Oxford University, and graduated from its law department. He practiced law in London, and coming to America located in Philadelphia, upon the invitation of Benjamin Franklin, who was a close friend. He removed to Louisville, Ky., thence to Vincennes, where he was the first lawyer to practice.

GEN. JONES.

Here his son, George Wallace, was born. He entered Transylvania University, Lexington, Ky., in 1821, and while there served as sergeant of Gen. Jackson's body guard on that hero's march from Tennessee to Washington in 1823, and did similar service for the Marquis de Lafayette the next year. He served during the Black Hawk war as a soldier, was made a general, and, in 1848, elected United States Senator. When his term expired President Buchanan appointed him Minister to Colombia, from which he was recalled for alleged treasonable correspondence with Jefferson Davis at the outbreak of the civil war.

Gen. Jones has figured as principal or second in seven duels, the most interesting of which was the affair of honor between Jonathan Cilley, of Maine, and William J. Graves, of Kentucky, in 1838, which arose from political differences. Jones was Cilley's second. The weapons were rifles, and each man fired three times. At the last Cilley fell wounded to death. The General was the last delegate to Congress from the Territory of Michigan and delegate from Wisconsin from 1835 to 1839, commanded the militia of Wisconsin for a time, and for three years was its chief justice. To George Wallace Jones belongs the distinction of naming the Territories of Wisconsin and Iowa.

Gen. Jones has known intimately most of the prominent men of the country. He was a Chesterfield in politeness and very popular. He was a classmate at college of Jefferson Davis and Zachary Taylor; in Congress he was a friend of John Quincy Adams, Andrew Jackson, John C. Fremont, Martin Van Buren and Franklin Pierce; he was the partner in business enterprises of Daniel Webster; the colleague in the House of James K. Polk, John Bell, Abraham Lincoln, and in the Senate of Thomas H. Benton, Charles Sumner, Stephen A. Douglas, William H. Seward and James Buchanan.

A Fakir's Ingenuity.

Enormous business has been done lately at French fairs by a man who professed to sell a rat powder that was perfectly harmless and that struck rats dead on the spot. In order to convince the skeptical the man, first of all, powdered a slice of bread with the stuff, and ate a piece of it himself. Then he put the remainder under a glass case, in which a rat was kept in captivity. The rat went to eat the bread and instantly fell dead. At 5 pence a box the powder went off like hot rolls, and the lucky proprietor of the specific was in a fair way to make a fortune. But the police, who in France are very active in protecting the people from a fraud, looked into the matter and found that the powder was nothing but ordinary sugar. They also discovered that the case was connected with a powerful electric battery, and the moment the rat touched the bread the current was turned on, and it was thus his death was brought about. The man was arrested at the fair of Albi, and he has been sentenced to fifteen days' imprisonment.

MANY DIE IN A MINE.

TWENTY-SIX KILLED IN A LOS CERRILLOS, N. M., SHAFT.

Forty-two Miners Entombed by a Fearful Gas Explosion—Caught in a Trap the Workmen Are Blown to Pieces or Suffocated by Smoke.

Death Roll May Increase.

A frightful explosion of gas in the White Ash coal mine, three miles southeast of Los Cerrillos, N. M., occurred at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning, and as a result many homes in the valley are desolate. Twenty-six miners are known to have been killed, and eleven have been taken out alive. But these are more or less bruised or burned, and the death roll may increase. This mine is the soft coal producer of the valley and is operated by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company. From it all markets south of the place, including the Southern Pacific and Mexican Central Railways, are supplied. The output averages sixty cars per day.

The mine has four levels, which branch off from the inclined shaft, and the men were at work scattered in all of them. The fact that there is 3,400 feet of working and no air shaft accounts for the accumulating of the gas, and for three hours after the explosion the deadly vapor poured forth from the single entry in such volume as to indicate that the mine had caught fire. When this was announced as a probability the pitiful cries of both men and women who had gathered around the entry were heartrending. Frantic wives, many of them carrying babies in their arms, having children clinging to their skirts, or to them, stood at the entrance of the mine for hours amid tears and prayers, watching and waiting, while hundreds of men vainly struggled to gain an entrance further into the mine.

Usually 160 miners are employed in the Ash shaft, but the day being Ash Wednesday there were only forty-two men inside at the time of the explosion. Five of these made their way to the outside before the gas reached them. Some of the bodies taken out were burned almost to a cinder and others so badly mangled and burned that recognition has been very difficult. It is thought the explosion was caused by the miners breaking through into some old abandoned working, thus liberating the gas that had accumulated. The mine was worked through a single incline of 30 degrees, and seems to have been defective as respects ventilation.

GIVES UP HIS OFFICE.

Postmaster General Bissell to Return to His Law Practice in Buffalo.

The President has accepted the resignation of Postmaster General Bissell, and has nominated Representative William L. Wilson, of West Virginia, to be his successor. This change in the cabinet has been decided upon for some time. Postmaster General Bissell, a Washington dispatch says, retires from office on the best terms with the President and with the confidence and esteem of all the cabinet. His decision to give up the cares of office was reached some weeks ago, the chief reason therefor being Mr. Bissell's unwillingness to sacrifice more time and money for the honor of holding a seat in the cabinet. He has been influenced to a large extent by the discovery that a considerable share of the law business of the firm in Buffalo of which he is still a member is drifting into other hands, and Mr. Bissell thinks it time for him to return home for the purpose of looking after his own interests. He is not by any means a wealthy man, and his expenditures in Washington have amounted to at least three times his salary as a cabinet officer, more than swallowing up his salary and his private income together.

W. S. BISSELL.

Concerning his resignation the President said: "It surely is not necessary for me to say that I shall release Mr. Bissell with the utmost regret. All of his associates in the administration will feel that they have lost a colleague who, in all respects, was a valuable factor in their executive labors, as well as a companion to whom they have become greatly attached. I am not taken by surprise, for I have known for some time that it was inevitable, because Mr. Bissell's reasons for his action were of a personal nature and were inexorable."

OVER 100 ARE KILLED

MEXICAN TRAIN HORROR WORSE THAN BELIEVED.

Wreck on the Inter Oceanic Railroad Near the City of Mexico Is an Appalling Disaster, 200 Persons Being Killed and Wounded.

Death List Grows.

One of the most frightful accidents in the history of the Mexican railroads, resulting in the killing of 104 persons and the serious, if not fatal, injury of nearly a hundred others, occurred on the Inter-Oceanic Railroad at a point twenty-five miles from the City of Mexico. A few days ago a great number of persons left the capital and the towns in the vicinity to go on a pilgrimage to the Catholic Shrine at Sacre Monte. Tickets were sold at reduced rates over the Inter-Oceanic line and this road carried the bulk of the pilgrims. Friday a long train, aboard of which there were 1,200 passengers, was returning from the place of pilgrimage. All went well until a point on the line midway between Temamtla and Tenango was reached. On this part of the road there is a steep incline, the line at one place on it having a sharp curve, where it runs close to the edge of a high precipice. This is one of the most dangerous places on the road, and was rendered more so by the fact that the track here was not in the best condition.

As the train began to run down the incline the speed increased, and soon it was running at a frightful rate. The passengers ceased their laughter and joking and looked at each other with a strange fear depicted in their faces. Steadily the momentum of the train, which was swaying and bounding fearfully, increased and upon the dangerous high curve was struck.

Engine Hits the Curve.

As the pilot wheels of the engine took the curve the locomotive swayed outward and either jumped the track or turned a rail. It dashed across the scanty space between the rails and the edge of the chasm and then plunged downward. One after another of the coaches, filled with passengers, dashed after it and piled up in a mass of wreckage at the foot of the track, but most fortunately did not go over the edge of the precipice. As the fifth coach left the metals it twisted and broke the coupling connecting it with the coaches behind it. These coaches kept the rails and passed safely around the curve. After running a considerable distance they were stopped by the hand brakes.

When the engine and the three coaches fell to the bottom of the ravine there was a fearful crash and, mingled with it, were the shrieks of the affrighted passengers, which could easily be heard above the escaping steam of the engine, which was knocked to pieces by the fall. In the meantime a number of passengers in the other coaches had returned to the scene of the wreck and devoted themselves to the work of rescuing those imprisoned in the wreck. The sight here was a grievous one. The carriages were shattered, and a majority of the occupants were lying beneath the wreckage. The shrieks and moans of the injured were heartrending, while many of the unhurt women and children moaned and wailed in an agony of terror.

The train hands were American, and some of them, as soon as possible, telegraphed news of the disaster to the city. The intelligence quickly spread and caused the greatest consternation among the inhabitants, many of whom had relatives or friends on the train.

Many of the dead will never be identified, some of them being so horribly mangled that it is almost impossible to recognize the remains as those of human beings. So far as can be learned, the accident was due to the negligence of the engineer. It is stated that when the train entered the incline he made no attempt to check its speed by the use of the air brakes.

The most terrible Mexican railroad accident was the one that occurred the night of June 24, 1881, when a train on the San Morelos Railway was precipitated by the fall of a bridge into the river near Cuartla. Two hundred lives were lost in that accident.

THEY TALK OF TRADE.

Chicago Business Men's Views on the Spring Outlook Conflict.

The opinion among Chicago merchants in all lines of business, as given in the Tribune, is that the outlook for the spring trade is not as bright as it should be. In many lines the volume of trade is not equal to that for the same time last year. The tendency of prices continues downward, and prophecies as to when the bottom will be reached have almost ceased to be made. The encouraging features are that there is a more conservative policy on the part of the buyers, both in the matter of extending credits and in making purchases. There are almost as many opinions why there is not a more general trade prosperity as there are firms in business. Summarized some of them are:

Because Congress is playing politics instead of attending strictly to business.

Because there is not free coinage.

Because of Wall street and the gold bugs.

Because the farmer has had poor crops.

Because the farmer has had too good crops and has overproduced.

Because we do not receive enough money for our exports.

Because every one is frightened without cause and cries wolf when there is no wolf.

Because there is not enough legislation.

Because there is too much legislation.

Because trusts and combinations of capital have killed competition.

Upon only one thing do all agree. Wherever there is diversified farming, in the States where everything does not depend upon one crop or a single industry, trade is good. In Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Michigan, Indiana and Ohio, where farmers have butter, cheese and live stock as well as grain to sell, there is plenty of money and bills for goods are discounted. In Montana, the Dakotas, Kansas and Nebraska, where there have been drouths and crop failures, and where there is little diversity of industries, there is a money famine. In the Northwest and west of the Missouri river traveling salesmen can scarcely earn their expenses. In the Southwest and South conditions are reversed, and trade is unexpectedly good. Goods are being sold on a narrower margin of profit than ever before, but collections everywhere are satisfactory.

SENATE AND HOUSE.

WORK OF OUR NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

A Week's Proceedings in the Halls of Congress—Important Measures Discussed and Acted Upon—An Impartial Resume of the Business.

The National Solons.

An attempt to take up the railroad pooling bill was defeated in the Senate Saturday and the measure is dead for this session. An amendment was offered to the sundry civil bill in the Senate authorizing the President to appoint commissioners to attend an international monetary conference, should one be called. In the House the general deficiency bill was further considered, and eulogies were delivered on the late Senator Vance. A resolution was introduced in the House looking to reversal of its approval of the President's course during the strike. Chairman Reilly reported the bill agreed on by the House committee for settlement of the debt of the Pacific roads.

The deficiency appropriation bill was passed by the House Monday. An amendment to pay Great Britain $425,000 in settlement of the Bering Sea award was defeated. A number of amendments to the tariff law designed to remove ambiguity have been suggested by Secretary Carlisle. President Cleveland is annoyed because Congress has not authorized him to seek a way out of the Samoan entanglement. Ambassador Eustis has been instructed to make a vigorous protest against the exclusion by France of American cattle.

Amendments providing for payment of the sugar bounties prematurely cut off by the tariff law were added to the sundry civil bill in the Senate Tuesday. All the correspondence relative to Samoa since the ratification of the Berlin treaty was sent to the Senate. McGann's railroad arbitration bill was passed by the House without division. Eulogies were delivered on the late General Post. Mr. Fithian made a speech eulogizing Governor Altgeld and condemning President Cleveland for sending troops to Chicago. A minority House committee submitted a report giving their reasons for opposing the Pacific Railroad bill. House and Senate conferees again report their inability to agree on the Hawaiian cable amendment to the sundry civil bill.

After sharp debate in the Senate Wednesday, the financial issue which had blocked the progress of the appropriation bills was swept away by the withdrawal of both Mr. Gorman's amendment and Mr. Mills' proposition to repeal the laws authorizing the issue of bonds. The day was wasted in the House, so far as the purposes for which the day was set aside were concerned, namely, to consider bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The conference reports on the bill to prohibit the importation of goods in bond through the United States into the Mexican free zone, and on the pension and post office appropriation bills, were agreed to. Several pension and other bills of minor importance were passed by unanimous consent.

The Senate Thursday passed the sundry civil bill, including the items appropriating over $5,000,000 for sugar bounties. The legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill was also passed. In a speech in the Senate Mr. Chandler declared Senators Murphy, Roach and Martin had been elected by fraud. The House decided to further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment to the diplomatic bill providing for a cable to Hawaii.

Senator Hill, of New York, bitterly scored Senator Chandler, of New Hampshire, Friday for his merciless attack upon Senator Roach. Senator Morgan's strong opposition prevented an appropriation to defray expenses of the Bering Sea arbitrators. The Senate has confirmed W. L. Wilson as postmaster general and Judge Showalter as an assistant judge in the Chicago district. Bills to protect or kill seals; to pay West Virginia its share of refunded tax, and the Senate anti-lottery bill were passed by the House.

"The 'Leven-Fifteen."

The following incident is said to have happened on a Southern railroad, and is reported in Harper's Magazine. The conductor must have been a humorist.

A traveler had come to the station to board the 11:15 train, and much to his surprise, promptly at 11:15 the train started.

"Well," he said to the conductor, as that worthy passed through the car, "they libel you up North when they say your trains never start on time."

"I guess not," said the conductor. "They tell the whole truth. We never got a train off on time yet."

"Why, this train got off on time. It's the 11:15, isn't it?"

"Yes, it's the 11:15, my friend, but it's last Tuesday's 11:15. We're three days late. To-day's 11:15 won't get off much befoh Monday, I reckon."

Does the Boys Good.

One interesting result of the military instruction at seventy-five or eighty colleges in this country has been the noticeable improvement in the carriage of lads that enter college without previous military training. It is noticeable, too, that the youth at those agricultural colleges that have but recently had enough students to entitle the institutions to have an army officer detailed as military instructor show vastly better discipline under such instruction than when the department of military tactics was in charge of civilians.

INDIANS AS HUNTERS.

They Do Not Frighten the Game Out of Districts as White Men Do.

"It is a remark often made by old-timers who knew the western country when the red man was as common there as the tenderfoot is now," says a sportsman from the Rockies, "that Indians never scare away game from a region in which they hunt. But, they say, whenever the white man comes with his firearms game is bound to be killed off or driven away. These sayings are true, with the qualifying statement that by reasonable game laws game of all kinds can be preserved and, even where nearly exterminated, restored to almost its original plentifulness in districts not too fully occupied by man and his domestic creatures.

"Note the Indian in hunting as he searches out and steels upon the deer or wild turkeys with his soft tread of moccasined feet. In the twang of his bow string and the flight of the whistling arrow there is no explosive sound to alarm the creatures near the one that is struck. He, like themselves, is in sympathetic accord with the tints and tones of plain and mountain and forest, and while endeavoring to match their craft against his they are satisfied with trying to avoid him without abandoning the region where he abides.

"It is when white hunters of the sportsmen variety invade its haunts, their presence heralded by the tead of their booted feet, their clothes alien in appearance to the hues and contours of the creatures of the wilds, and their purpose shown by the crack and crash of firearms, that game begins to migrate to other feeding grounds. Add to this the increasing and indiscriminate slaughter for slaughter's sake that characterizes the white man's hunting, and it is easy to see why the depopulation of the forest and plain, when unrestricted by law, is speedy and sure. Ever since the general adoption by Indians of firearms for their hunting it has not been found that large game has diminished materially in regions in which the white man is an infrequent visitor, although Sir Samuel Baker, the explorer, asserts of African game and predatory creatures that 'Animals can endure traps, pitfalls, fire and every savage method of hunting; but firearms will speedily clear them out from extensive districts.'"

Wrote a Letter in His Sleep.

A remarkable case of somnambulism occurred ten miles north of Sedalia, in Pettis County, recently. Miss Susie Sterling, daughter of a well-known farmer, had been taking music lessons of Miss Mary Wiley, and the term having expired, the teacher paid a visit to the pupil for the purpose of having her continue her studies during the next term, but was confronted with a dilemma by finding her parents had come to Sedalia on a shopping expedition, and thus their consent could not be obtained. Miss Sterling said she would interview her parents on their return, however, and would inform the teacher of the result by the first mail. At 11 o'clock that night Mrs. Sterling was awakened by hearing her daughter leave the house, and Mr. Sterling was apprised. He followed the young lady into the yard and was astounded at hearing her call to to her brother, who was in his room sleeping soundly, to wait and get a letter she had, as she wanted it mailed at once. Investigation disclosed that Miss Sterling was in a sound sleep, but she had in her possession a very intelligible letter that she had written while asleep, addressed to the teacher, appraising her of having gained the consent of her mother to continue her musical studies.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Caught Up With Its Work at Last.

For the first time in fifteen years the United States Patent Office finds itself up to date with its work. In all of its thirty three examining divisions the work is in such a condition that a new application filed now will be acted upon on its merits within thirty days, and an amendment will receive attention within two weeks. One year and a half ago the more important and busiest branches of the office were more than ten months behindhand. The office force has not been increased, nor has the number of applicants fallen off. The new applications average between 700 and 800 a week and the number of amendments about 1,600.—The Engineer (New York.)

Halibut.

It is hard for the younger people to believe that so good a fish as the halibut was considered unfit for eating not many years ago, yet many old fishermen now live who remember when it was first offered in the market, selling then at 4 or 6 cents a pound. It was many years since that the sword-fish first found its way to the frying-pan and the table, and a Rockland fisherman recalls the time when haddock were about as highly esteemed as sculpins are now.

AN ALPENA MIRACLE.

MRS. JAS. M. TODD, OF LONG RAPIDS, DISCARDS HER CRUTCHES.

In an Interview with a Reporter She Reviews Her Experience and Tells the Real Cause of the Miracle.

(From the Argus, Alpena, Mich.)

We have long known Mrs. Jas. M. Todd, of Long Rapids, Alpena County, Mich. She has been a sad cripple. Many of her friends know the story of her recovery; for the benefit of those who do not we publish it to-day.

Eight years ago she was taken with nervous prostration, and in a few months with muscular and inflammatory rheumatism. It affected her heart, then her head. Her feet became so swollen she could wear nothing on them; her hands were drawn all out of shape. Her eyes were swollen shut more than half the time, her knee joints terribly swollen and for eighteen months she had to be held up to be dressed. One limb became entirely helpless, and the skin was so dry and cracked that it would bleed. During these eight years she had been treated by a score of physicians, and has also spent much time at Ann Arbor under best medical advice. All said her trouble was brought on by hard work and that medicine would not cure, and that rest was the only thing which would ease her. After going to live with her daughter she became entirely helpless and could not even raise her arms to cover herself at night. The interesting part of the story follows in her own words:

"I was urged to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and at last did so. In three days after I commenced taking Pink Pills I could sit up and dress myself, and after using them six weeks I went home and commenced working. I continued taking the pills, until now I begin to forget my crutches, and can go up and down steps without aid. I am truly a living wonder, walking out of doors without assistance.

"Now, if I can say anything to induce those who have suffered as I have to try Pink Pills I shall gladly do so. If other like sufferers will try Pink Pills according to directions they will have reason to thank God for creating men who are able to conquer that terrible disease, rheumatism. I have in my own neighborhood recommended Pink Pills for the after effects of la grippe, and weak women with impure blood, and with good results."

Mrs. Todd is very strong in her faith in the curative powers of Pink Pills, and says they have brought a poor, helpless cripple back to do her own milking, churning, washing, sewing, knitting, and in fact about all of her household duties, thanks to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50c. per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

The Advantage of Authority.

A short time ago a grocery establishment was on the point of commencing business in London, and the manager proclaimed that the shop would open on a certain Monday at 8 o'clock sharp, and that the first person who entered should receive an entire ham gratis.

Many poor people passed the night in the street in order to take up a place as near as possible to the door in the morning; and, as the hour approached, a large crowd had collected, and confusion and disorder prevailed.

At three minutes to 8 a policeman appeared on the scene, and, forcing his way through the crowd, advanced to the door, and peremptorily ordered the crowd back from it. Scarcely had he done so when the door opened, and, turning around quickly, he was the first to enter the shop.

He received the promised ham.

Queer Little Island.

A queer enough little island is Navassa. A ship load of negroes were landed in New Jersey the other day from the Paterson, hailing from this rock of four miles area, down in the Caribbean, off Hayti. Hayti claims it and the United States controls it. Hayti never pushed her claim. It is totally bare—all provisions are sent there, and several hundred negroes are kept at work, being shipped like the hands of a vessel. In fact, the laws of a ship are in force there, officers and all. The product and the only one is sold by the Navassa Phosphate company. There is no wharf or harbor and the work is very laborious. There are frequent complaints of hard treatment from the returning crew, which is usually shipped for six months' service. The headquarters of the company are in Baltimore.

Animal Mimicry.

Not only do certain animals adopt the color of things about them, but they are said to change their habits and the requirements of their nervous system. Thus a certain butterfly imitates the appearance of a dead leaf on a twig, even to the extent of a transparent spot on its wings, to represent the hole nibbled by insects. A certain spider, a class of careful workers, spins a slovenly web, so that its own body may have a proper surrounding for imitating particles blown by the wind. Certain fishes stand upright in the water to represent bulrushes.

COLD prayers are like cold March winds; they have a chilling effect on things generally.

MANY a rejoicing christian never learned to sing till the flames kindled upon him.

March April May

Are the Best Months in which to Purify Your Blood

And the Best Blood Purifier is

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Which Purifies, Vitalizes and Enriches the Blood.

At this season every one should take a good spring medicine. Your blood must be purified or you will be neglecting your health. There is a cry from Nature for help, and unless there is prompt and satisfactory response you will be liable to serious illness.

This demand can only be met by the purifying, enriching and elements to be found in Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Blood-Vitalizing

"My mother-in law, Mrs. Elizabeth Wolfe, at the age of 72 years, was attacked with a violent form of salt rheum; it spread all over her body, and her hands and limbs were dreadful to look at. At the same time my little daughter Clara, who was just one year old, was attacked by a similar disease, like scrofula. It appeared in large sores, which disfigured each side of her neck; we had the attendance of the family physician and other doctors for a long time, but seemed to grow worse. I read of many people cured of scrofula by Hood's Sarsaparilla. As soon as we gave Hood's Sarsaparilla to Clara she began to get better, and before the first bottle was gone the sores entirely healed up, and there has never been any sign of the disease since. She is a Healthy, Robust Child.

Her grandmother took Hood's Sarsaparilla at the same time, and the salt rheum decreased in its violence and a perfect cure was soon effected. It took about three months for her cure, and she ascribes her good health and strength at her advanced age to Hood's Sarsaparilla. It has certainly been a godsend to my family." MRS. SOPHIA WOLFE, Zaleski, Ohio.

HOOD'S AND ONLY HOOD'S

Unspeakably Miserable

Is the man or woman troubled with dyspepsia, Heart palpitations, sour stomach, heartburn, uneasiness of the nerves, oppression or a sense of emptiness at the pit of the stomach, are among its symptoms. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters eradicates it, and entirely overcomes constipation, biliousness, rheumatic, kidney and malarial complaints. Use this thorough remedy systematically and it will achieve permanent results.

At the Bottom of the Sea.

A pear diver says that one of the strange effects of diving is the invariable bad temper felt while working at the bottom of the sea. As this usually passes away as soon as the surface is reached, it is probably due to the pressure of the air affecting the lungs, and through them the brain. The exhilaration and good temper of the mountain climber is a contrary feeling from and opposite cause. A diver becomes so angry at some imaginary wrong doing on the part of those in the boat above that he gives the signal to be pulled up, "with the intention of knocking the heads off the entire crew," only to forget what he came up for when the surface is reached.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

NOTES ABOUT SCHOOLS AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

Valuable Aid in Enlisting the Interest of Pupils Is Rendered by a School Museum—Pupils Like to See an Attractive Blackboard.

The Village School.

Put to the door. The school's begun.
Stand in your places, every one!
Attend! Read in the Bible, tell the place,
"Job 20th, and the 16 verse."
Caleb, begin. "And he shall suck—
Sir, Moses got a pin and stuck—"
Silence! Stop, Caleb! Moses, here!
What's this complaint? "I didn't, sir."
Hold up your hand; what is 't? a pin?
"Oh, dear, I won't do so ag'in."
Read on! "The increase of his h—horse—
Hold on! H-o-u-s-e spells house.

* * * * * * *

Is this your copy? Can't you spell?
Put all your letters parallel.
"I've done my sum. It's just a grout.
Master, please say, mayn't I go out?"
Yes. Bring some wood in. What's that noise?
"'Tisn't I, sor. It's them-ere boys."
Come, Billy, read. "That's a great A.
Sir, Jim has snatched my rule away."
Return it, James. Here, rule with this.
Billy, read on. "That's crooked S."
How's this? Just come, Sam? "Why, I've been—"
Who knocks? "I don't know, sir." Come in.
"Your most obedient, sir; and yours."
Sit down, sir. Sam, put to that door!
What do you bring to tell that's new?
"Nothing that's either strange or true.
What a prodigious school! I'm sure
You've got a hundred here, or more;
A word, sir, if you please." I will.
You girls, till I come in, be still!
"Come! we're to have a dance. So you
Dismiss your brain-distracting crew.
And come; for all the girls'll be there
We'll have a fiddle and a player."
You mind and have the sleigh bells sent.
I'll soon dismiss my regiment.
(Exit Visitor.)

Silence. The second class must read
As quick as possible. Proceed!
Not found your books? Stand! be fixed.
The next read; the next; the next; the next.
You needn't read again. 'Tis well.
Come, Tom and Dick, choose sides to spell.
"I've got a word." Well, name it. "Folks."
Spell it, Samson! "P-h-o-c-k-s."
Oh, shocking! Have you all tried? "No."
Say master. But no matter. Go!
Lay your books. And you, Josiah,
Help Jed to make the morning fire.

School Museum.

One of the simplest and surest methods of arousing an interest and enthusiasm among pupils, of strengthening the bond of sympathy and harmony between teacher and pupil, so essential in effective work, is the establishment of a school museum. If no vacant room is at hand, boxes may be made to serve as receptacles for the specimens—separated ones being used for each of the three kingdoms, animal, vegetable and mineral.

The intrinsic value of the collection may be nothing, but if the proper spirit is shown in its collection, if each pupil becomes a stockholder in the enterprise, and consequently earnest in his endeavors to make a success, if the material made is the subject of real thought and study, its value cannot be estimated. Charles Kingsley says: "He is a thoroughly good naturalist who knows his own parish thoroughly." And in making such naturalists this plan will be of no inconsiderable asistance.

Some of the most interesting geological collections at the World's Fair owed their chief merits to the fact that they were school collections—labeled by pupils who had gathered them in their own neighborhood. They testified that the most fascinating of the natural sciences, geology, had been pursued by those pupils in a thoroughly practical manner; that the secret of the rocks over which they daily walked had been to a certain extent learned.

The Indian relics in some of these displays spoke of the "stone age" and suggested thoughts on the march of the human races from barbarism to civilization; and, by the way, if your grandfathers had been taught to realize the value of these things, how much rich ethnographical material they might have preserved that is now forever lost! The plowman of the present day rarely brings to the surface arrow-heads and skinning stones so common some two or three generations ago.

The queer horn-shaped stone or "petrified wasp's nest," picked up by the roadside on the way to school, might, if it could speak, tell of a wonderful ride on an ice mountain ages before toboggans were ever thought of. The "moss" collected from an old fence rail is suggestive of the multitude of the tropical air plants.

A collection of seeds, together with their coverings, may become an exceedingly profitable study. Here we find that the thistle down has a value in the economy of plant life, and that the child who joyously blows the downy heads to pieces to find "the time o'clock" is enhancing this value in so doing. The maple wing, the seed-pods of touch-me-not, that fly at the slightest touch after the seeds become ripe, speak, too, of one of the many phases of nature's care of her plants—the dissemination of seeds. Then there are the provisions against destruction by the elements, food store and many other things that even these tiny seeds tell.

Inasmuch as the material required by any two schools will necessarily vary, the discussions and topics for the study will also be different; but if the plan is entered into with zeal there will be no paucity of subjects for investigation.—Bessie L. Putnam, in Educational Gazette.

Artistic Blackboards.

Miss Berry's room is always bright and homelike and the effect is, in a great measure, due to her use of the blackboard. Having more than sufficent blackboard space for class use, she divides some boards into panels for special uses.

Most of the boards have pretty borders which need not often be changed.

One panel upon which is kept the roll of honor or record of perfect lessons is especially pleasing. At one time it appeared in white and gold. The narrow border was in the form of daisies, white with yellow centers, like a daisy chain. The names of the members of the class were written with white and yellow alternate, and at the end of the week every child who had won the required number of "perfect marks" had a daisy placed opposite his name. For another term tiny flags took the place of daisies.

Let us look at the side board. A panel is marked off and, leaving a space at the top the calender of the month is copied, marking very precisely, with ruler, the little squares and writing the days of the week and dates in their places.

A cluster of scarlet poppies at the top with the name of the month in rustic letters, completes a decorative piece that will please the children and even cultivate their artistic sense, besides saving the teacher the trouble of writing the date anew every morning.

That pretty panel of birds, in flight, in gay colors was done by an artistic ten-year-old.

A small board used to illustrate the different forms and margins of leaves shows the work of the children of the sixth grade, each child having drawn one leaf, from nature.

The fifth grade were studying roots, and their board work done in natural colors is their especial pride.

The use of the blackboard may be both practical and decorative if the teacher is free to use it for illustration and is not afraid to draw, although she may not be a genius in art.—Popular Educator.

The Study of Manners.

A new course of study has been introduced in the curriculum of the Elmira Female College, being a systematic study of manners. The Council of Etiquette formed in the college is made up of representatives from all the college classes, and to this council disputed points are submitted. It looks up authorities, considers weight of evidence pro and con, and finally decides according to the best standards. Once every fortnight a member of the council presents an original paper to be read in the college chapel to the rest of the students. Some of the subjects thus presented have been "Manners in Public Places," "Letters and Letter Writing," "Chaperons and Their Uses," and others. The broad question of manners cannot be too much studied or too well understood. When it is brought down to finical questions of etiquette, which can never be decided for all time in all places, too much considering of them is both tiresome and harmful. The kind thing is usually the right thing. It is while one is hesitating over what Mrs. Grundy has decided to be the right thing that the opportunity to do the kind thing passes.

Timely Topics.

There is nothing that will help you more in keeping order than to fill up the whole time of every pupil with useful, interesting work.

With all the improved methods, fine school houses and abundant apparatus the fact remains that the school is what the teacher makes it.

Start your school as you intend to continue. Say but little about rules. Have it understood that you expect good behavior and hard work, and that while there is no departure from these, there will be no need of interference on your part.

Do you think you are teaching when you assign a certain portion of the book to be learned and then, in the recitation, sit and compare the pupil's answers with the language in the book? If you do you are mistaken, you are starving yourself as well as your pupils.

There is an oblique way of reproof, which takes off the sharpness of it and an address in flattery which makes it agreeable, though never so gross; but of all flatterers the most skillful is he who can do what you like without saying anything which argues he does it for your sake.

The Public Schools of Mexico.

I have it from pretty good authority, says a recent traveler in Mexico, that it is the purpose of the Mexican Government, within four or five years, to establish a complete system of public schools reaching into every corner of the republic. The teachers therefor cannot be obtained here, nor for years to come. This will make a demand for probably 10,000 or 15,000 teachers. In view of this it will be seen how important it is for those who have an idea of teaching to study the Spanish language, so as to be able to avail themselves of the opportunities which will thus be opened. Kansas City has already moved in this direction by making Spanish a part of her common school course. The students of Mexico are now ahead of us on this question. They recognize that English is the rival language of the continent, and they go to colleges in the United States for the sole purpose of adding English to their literary stock in trade. Mexico is developing scholars who can hold their own with any on the continent. They are delving into every research, and are well-read and liberal-minded. The literature of Mexico is now quite extensive, covering the field of history, biography, political economy, science and poetry.

Snow That Disappears Like Dew.

"I have seen four feet of snow fall in eight hours," said Conductor Cobb, of the Maine Central, "and yet it was so light that you could wade through it just as you can through water. It was in the Sierra Nevada Mountains—a sort of frost-like snow that falls in the night, burying everything. Twelve feet away from another man you can just see him, with a sort of halo around him as though somewhere the sun was shining through the storm. In these storms it is impossible to tell direction or distance from camp. In the morning we walked down into town. One man kept ahead breaking the snow, which came nearly to his armpits, as he moved through it. He would tread until tired, when he would drop to the rear and some one else would lead the procession. As we walked into the valley it grew less, and down below in the town there had been no snow, and all the time the sun or the stars had shone. Such a snow goes like the dew—disappears, evaporates."—Lewiston Journal.

Healthy Japanese Women.

In the country districts Japanese women work in the fields like those of continental Europe. This goes far to account for their strength and good health.

The Occasion Hopelessly Marred.

A party of three policemen got leave of absence the other day and went on a hunting and fishing excursion, their objective point being a secluded spot in a locality of whose whereabouts it is only necessary for the purposes of this narrative to mention that it was several miles from anywhere and could only be reached by a long and laborious journey in a wagon from the nearest railway station.

The party arrived at its destination an hour or two before nightfall and proceeded to unload. The tent, the camp stove, blankets, eatables, guns, ammunition, game bags, fishing-rods, and other necessities of the campaign were taken out of the wagon by Mike and Larry and piled on the ground.

"I guess that's all," said Mike, preparing to climb out.

"Not by a jugful," responded Dennis, the ranking officer of the squad. "Look over in that corner beyant ye. There's a jug. It's full. Mind, now, now ye handle it!"

Larry picked up the jug with alacrity.

But in handing it out he had the misfortune to strike it against the hind wheel.

And it broke all to pieces.

There was a ghastly, horrible silence. It was broken at last by Dennis.

"Boys," he said, in a broken-hearted, world-weary, but resolute voice, "get out o' that an' help me pile these things back in the wagon"—Chicago Tribune.

Use of Chloroform by Burglars.

Burglars sometimes chloroform their victims in the hope that their work will be the more easily and effectually done. As the plan is to administer the anæsthetic while the patient sleeps, it is no wonder that failure attends the effort. Happily it is one of the most difficult feats to accomplish, requiring the greatest care and the highest degree of skill. By many good observers it is claimed to be impossible. The latter may be looked upon as the rule, especially with novices. Before primary insensibility is obtained the victim awakes from the irritation of the inhaled vapor, whence force is necessary for the completion of the purpose. In the meantime an alarm may be given, and the assailants may be captured. Fortunately the chances are always against the latter, as his victim, facing the horror of stranuglation, is instantly and almost instinctively roused to desperate resistance. Taking all the chances, however, chloroform in the hands of a burglar should be considered as dangerous to his victim as a club, an ax, or a bullet, and its administration should be punished to that extreme limit of penalty which is due to the employment of other murderous measures.—Medical Record.

Clubs for Farmers' Wives

If possible, it is wise to go outside of the ordinary limits of acquaintance and invite women of widely different associations and employments to become members of the club, writes Helen Jay in a very practical article on "The Mental March of a Farmer's Wife" in the Ladies' Home Journal. We all need to enter into the lives of others, and for an organization of women I know no better motto than the words of Dr. Hale, "This club exists to find out how other people live." It will be easier to do this than appears upon the surface.

All Fours.

A well-known horseman has discovered a fact in natural history which may not be generally known. It is that all four-footed beasts, in making the first movement in walking, running, or any sort of forward motion, always employ the left hind leg as a starter. Even a child, if put down on all-fours and bidden to advance in that position, will make the first move with his left leg, his hands at the time occupying the place of an animal's forelegs.

In the British Navy.

As early as the seventeenth century one finds traces of a custom which is observed to-day, and of which it is impossible even to guess at the origin. If a captain of a boat be going alongside a ship at night, and if he be hailed with the challenge, "Boat, ahoy!" the proper reply from the boat is, "Victory," or "Triumph," or whatever the name of the captain's vessel may be. If the visitor be a lieutenant, the regulation answer is "Hulloa!" But if the visitor be only a midshipman, the reply demanded by ancient etiquette is, strange to say, "No, no!" although he means "Yes."

A Weird Chant.

The "coranach," or mourning of the dead, is still heard in some parts of Scotland as well as of Ireland. It is a weird chant, cries of lamentations being mingled with remonstrances addressed to the departed for leaving his friends and relatives. Professional "keepers" (old women employed to sing praises of the dead) are to be found in remote places.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

In Venice water is something of a luxury, as the inhabitants have to depend upon the rains. There is no company for supplying the city. The water for drinking and domestic uses is collected in subterranean reservoirs, where it is said to be filtered. It is doled out at the public wells, which are open one hour daily for that purpose, and then are carefully locked up.

Club for Americans Abroad.

A new club is on the point of being ushered into life which will very much interest the American and English colonies resident in Paris. It will aim at being "a social family club." This is quite a new departure, as the families have, as a rule, very little to do with clubs, and are considered by the clubites as very much in the way, and a circle from which men are glad to get free. The club in question has got so far on the road as to acquire, as part of its scheme, an abode out of town and by the waterside of the Seine—a stream which Parisians who love their health and respect their noses usually keep at a distance. The spot chosen has, however, many charms, and may be called a choice and attractive locality.

He's All Right Now.

November 21, 1894, A. W. Ault, of Galveston, Ind., wrote the Sterling Remedy Co., of Chicago, extending his thanks to them for the cure effected in his case by No-to-bac. He said he formerly used five cents worth of chewing tobacco a day and averaged five cigars, and was a confirmed victim of the tobacco habit. After taking nearly two boxes of No-to-bac the desire for tobacco was completely eradicated, and he now feels like a new man.

The Railroad Sandwich.

W. R. Hart, Traveling Salesman, Dayton, O., says: "Like many other traveling men, I made the acquaintance of the railroad sandwich, who afterward introduced me to old 'General Dyspepsia,' an acquaintance I was unable to shake until I met with LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS, which I am happy to say, has put the unwelcome guest to flight. Dyspepsia and headaches are things of the past. I feel like a new man and can eat anything."

Could not Sleep at Night.

To whom it may concern:

Following an attack of la grippe and typhoid fever, I was left with a bad condition of blood and serious stomach troubles. I had no appetite, was exceedingly nervous and could not sleep at night. To tell the story briefly, LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS cured me.

The Proof Accumulates.

The evidence continues to come and all helps to prove our claims for Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer. W. C. Fluck, ex-postmaster, New Garden, Columbiana Co., Ohio, says: "About two years ago I was all run down, had no strength to work, was listless, drowsy in day time and wakeful at night, and felt about as nervous and miserable as I could feel and live. Salem doctors applied a battery, examined me closely and pronounced it a serious case of nervous prostration, for which there was no help except to keep as quiet as possible. I think that they didn't expect me to live long. I spoke of trying a patent medicine, but the doctor said no patent medicine could help me. But as I steadily grew worse I had to try something, so got Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, which was highly recommended for nerve diseases. I felt a good effect from the first use of it, so continued to use it and continued to improve in health. Think I used six bottles and I believe I am perfectly cured." Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is a medicinal preparation which cannot fail to help any nerve disorder or "run down" condition of health. Sold by Davenport.

Promptness is a commendable virtue. That's why we offer you One Minute Cough Cure. It is prompt in relief and prompt in curing. That is what it is made for. 8tf

Lagrippe

Is again claiming its victims, and while not so many deaths are recorded, thousands of persons are left by it with the most distressing lassitude, lack of nerve and brain power, mental depression, etc. The terrible effects of the disease can be quickly dispelled, and health and strength restored by using Vitaline and Nervetone, which never disappoints. This new and wonderful remedy cures every form of nerve trouble and nerve pain. It is the invention of a celebrated Scotch chemist, just introduced in America by the Hall Medicine Co., Toledo, Ohio. For sale by Fischler & Son. 10-11

We wish to state to our patrons that One Minute Cure is a safe and reliable remedy for children troubled with croup, colds, hoarseness and lung troubles. It is pleasant to take and quickly cures. 8tf

Cramp Colic and Cholera.

For seven years or more Mrs. W. D. Louder, of Quincy, Ky., was subject to attacks of cramp colic. Mr. S. K. Morse, a druggist of that place, recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which has effected a permanent cure, saving her much suffering besides the trouble and expense of sending for a doctor, which was often necessary. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Rheumatism Cured in a Day.—"Mystic Cure" for Rheumatism and Neuralgia, radically cures in 1 to 3 days. Its action upon the system is remarkable and mysterious. It removes at once the cause and the disease immediately disappears. The first dose greatly benefits, 75 cts. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn. 41tf

It is not a miracle. It won't cure everthing, but it will cure piles. That's what DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve will do, because has done it in hundreds of cases. 8tf

PILES! PILES! PILES!

Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment will cure Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles when all other Ointments have failed. It absorbs the tumors allays the itching at once, acts as a poultice, gives instant relief. Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted. Sold by druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of price, 50c. and $1.00 per box. WILLIAMS MFG. CO., Prop's, Cleveland, O. Sold on a guarantee by Matheny & Gerke.

In these days of telephone, telegraph, electricity and steam, people cannot afford to wait days or as many hours for relief. This is our reason for offering you One Minute Cough Cure. Neither days, nor hours, nor even minutes elapse before relief is afforded. 8tf

Cures Rheumatism.

A severe rheumatic pain in the left shoulder had troubled Mr J. H Loper, a well known druggist of Des Moines, Iowa, for over six months. At times the pain was so severe that he could not lift anything. With all he could do he could not get rid of it until he applied Chamberlain's Pain Balm. "I only made three applications of it," he says, "And have since been free from all pain." He now recommends it to persons similarly afflicted. It is for sale by Robbins & McCord 10-13

T. F. Anthony, ex-postmaster of Promise City, Iowa, says: "I bought one bottle of 'Mystic Cure' for Rheumatism and two doses of it did me more good than all the medicine I ever took." Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn. 41tf

Relief in One Day.

South American Nervine relieves the worst cases of nervous prostrations nervousness and nervous dyspepsia in a single day. No such relief and blessing has ever come to the invalids of this country. Its powers to cure the stomach are wonderful in the extreme. It always cures; it cannot fail. It radically cures all weakness of the stomach and never disappoints. Its effects are marvelous and surprising.—It gladdens the hearts of the suffering and brings immediate relief. It is a luxury to take and always safe. Trial bottles 15 cents Sold by Robbins & McCord druggist Auburn Ind. 50tf

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: I have been in a distressed condition for three years from Nervousness Weakness of the Stomach, Dyspepsia and Indigestion until my health was gone. I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good than any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy; a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the greatest medicine in the world." Don't Take Our Word,

But ask your doctor if there is any cure for rheumatism. If a member of the old school, he will say there is none. If of the more modern and progressive practice, he will say that Drummond's Lightning Remedy for rheumatism, is the only known specific, and that its proprietors offer a reward of $500 for a case it will not cure. The preparation is both internal and external, consists of two large bottles—one month's treatment, and is sent by express to any address upon receipt of $5. Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York. Agents wanted. 10-11

Drummond's Lightning

Remedy did great work for H. J. Lewis of Anderson's Mills, S. C. He had Sciatic Rheumatism in the left hip and leg and for six weeks was not able to sit up or walk a step; and suffered untold agonies. After using Drummond's Lightning remedy for rheumatism for two weeks, he wrote that he could walk and that the pain was gone. If you suffer from rheumatism and wish to be cured, send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and the two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted. 10-11

Take Care of the Lungs:

"Perhaps you would not think so, but a very large proportion of diseases in New York, comes from carlessness about catching cold," says Dr. Cyrus Edson. "It is such a simple thing and so common that very few people, unless it is a case of pneumonia, pay any attention to a cold. New York is one of the healthiest places on the Atlantic Coast and yet there are a great many cases of catarrh and consumption which have their origin in this neglect of the simplest precaution of every day life. The most sensible advice is, when you have one get rid of it as soon as possible. By all means do not neglect it." Dr. Edson does not tell you how to cure a cold but we will. Take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It will relieve the lungs, and expectoration, open the secretions and soon effect a permanent cure. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord 10-13

Profit $88.25 the First Three Days

A few weeks ago I read in your paper how Mrs. Griffith made a great deal of money selling a new method of putting up fruit. Here is what I did with an Old Reliable Plater. The first three days that I had the Plater I plated 75 sets of knives, forks, spoons, etc., which, when delivered, brought me in about $92.00; cost of metal about $3.75, leaving a gross profit of $88 25 for my time and trouble, and everyone was well pleased with the work, and I came home with double the amount of goods to be plated. I average about $150 work per week. I have been a traveling salesman, but have given it up; the plating business suits me. Anyone can obtain an Old Reliable Plater by addressing W. P. Harrison & Co., Columbus, Ohio. Anyone out of work should take this opportunity to get employment and mak money.

Monday's Daily.

The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Teneyck is recovering from an attack of malarial fever, under Dr. Swartz treatment.

J. G. Johnson came down from Waterloo Monday.

G. O Dennison of Waterloo arrived in town this morning on the 9:34 Lake Shore train.

Mr. Bartels, Superintendent of the county home made a business trip to Ft. Wayne Saturday.

Mrs. Will Keeran and children came up from Ft. Wayne Saturday to remain a few days the guest of friends.

Mrs. H. K. Scott was in town Thursday, being called home from Joliet, Ill. Her husband expected to join her at Chicago Saturday, but could not owing to the robbery which occurred at the bank of which he is cashier.

Rev. J. N. Wilson will fill the pulpit at the Baptist church, March 10 and 17, both morning and evening during the absence of Mr. Hart who left Monday for a three weeks' visit with friends in Whitley county.

J. J. Zent returned to Mankato, Minn., to-day, after visiting a few days with his wife and brother, I. M. and others.

Saturday seemed to have been an unlucky day for dogs. In the morning a boy had one hitched to a small express wagon loaded with groceries and was standing near the Swineford House when another came along and the fight was on. The dog hitched to the wagon, however, came out best. In the afternoon two small dogs met in front of Brown, Culbertson & Boland's store and fought for about five minutes, drawing a crowd of more than fifty men to watch the fight. Auburn has an overplus of dogs at any rate and it would be well if some were disposed of in some manner.

D. A. Hodge has hired H. B. Conover, a watchmaker, of Coldwater Mich. to assist him in his jewelery store.

Prof. Bonnell and Cal Brown of the St. Joe schools were in town Saturday.

I. N. Nill, the South side grocer, made a business trip to Ft. Wayne to day.

James Harvey, an aged and respected citizen who resided a few miles south of Garrett, was buried Friday.

Milo Calkin drove up to Corunna Sunday.

There were several new ideas carried out at the Presbyterian church Sunday. At the morning service, Mr Colvin read an excellent sermon delivered the previous Sunday by Rev. Henry Johnson to his congregation at South Bend. The evening service he preached an interesting and valuable sermon for young people, and Dr. Buchtel played a piece on the violin, accompanied by Flora Hoffman at the organ. It was one of the best he has given. Mrs. Sadie Yeshers sang one of the sweetest solos we have heard. Altogether, the services were excellent.

Much for Little.

We cannot refrain from further mentioning that most beautiful of all monthly publications, Saxony's Living Pictures. It is so highly meritorious and so well calculated to afford to its possessor the greatest amount of entertainment for the smallest outlay, that we are doing our readers a kindness in again calling attention to it. Compared with its real worth, its cost, 25 cents, is but a trifle.

Tired, Weak, Nervous Could Not Sleep.

Prof. L. D. Edwards, of Preston, Idaho, says: "I was all run down, weak, nervous and irritable through overwork. I suffered from brain fatigue, mental depression, etc. I became so weak and nervous that I could not sleep. I would arise tired, discouraged and blue. I began taking and now everything is changed. I sleep soundly, I feel bright, active and ambitious. I can do more in one day now than I used to do in a week. For this great good I give Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine the sole credit.

WHAT WE HAVE TO SAY ABOUT MNOEY.

The Indisna Mutual Building Loan Association, which we represent in this part of the state, have again reduced their interest, which has always been from 2 to 5 per cent less than any other Building Loan Association Do you know that if you are about to borrow money and give a mortgage on your home, you should take the time and trouble to investigate the plan of different associations, so that you may know, regardless of what any agent may tell you, which is the cheapest andthe best?

There are three items which should also be considered and thoroughly understood, especially by the borrower, before he makes his application for a loan:

First: The rate of interest and premium he is charged per annum.

Second: What the earnings of the Association are.

Third: How economically the Association is conducting its affairs.

We are prepared always to compare our company with any other, and can prove to your entire satisfaction that we are the cheapest, and

REMEMBER

That in our company you have no membership fee to pay, no advance payments to make and there will be no delays, so that should your loan for any reason be declined, you will lose no money. We are prepared to make loans where the security is sufficient; for any amount from $2. 00 to $25,00

BURGLARY AT ALBION.

The meat market owned by J. A. Levering was burglarized last night, March 5th. An entrance was effected by way of the cellar. About seven dollars in change was taken The thieves overlooked five dollars in silver. It is conjectured that home talent did the work.

The Daily Courier.

Auburn Dispatch.

The first regular daily for Auburn made its appearance on time Monday notwithstanding a column of pi was projected into the day's work. It is a six column folio, which makes it the same size as the first fair dailies published by the Dispatch a few years ago. It contained a little over five columns of home news most of which was local items The appearance of the paper was good and it is fully as large as the town can support. Our merchants, liberality as advertisers is shown in the space taken by them. We have confidence in their willingness to support any worthy enterprise projected by our citizens. A daily paper is a worthy enterprise and requires the united energy, genius and skill of editors and patrons to be successful. It appears this union will be had and we hope it will be continuous. Once a daily, always a daily, will be for the best interests of the town. Support it cordially, cheerfully liberally, and it will improve with the year. It reflects great enterprise on the town.

The W. F. M. S. of the M. E. church had a very pleasant meeting at the parsonage yesterday afternoon. The subject for the meeting was "The present State of Religious Thought in Japan." This was an interesting lesson, and was carefully studied. The business of the society, of which there was an unusual amount, was then taken up and dispatched with a vim which would have made the Fifty-Third Congress blush A letter full of information from Miss Elsie Wood, an Indiana girl who is now a missionary in Peru, S. A., was read by the secretary. A fine literary program was then rendered. At this juncture of the meeting the president arose and said the meeting would stand adjourned for a short time, and would again be called to order. The reason for this adjournment was soon learned. The "Mistress of the Manse" had prepared a pleasant surprise in the shape of a dainty lunch. For half an hour "they partook sweet counsel together," and sipped the fragrant Mocha. Then the meeting was called to order again and finished the business. When the clock struck five the meeting adjourned, and bidding good-by to their hostess, went to their homes, better prepared to spread the evening board for their loved ones.

Court.

To-day much time is being spent on a case between Mr. and Mrs. Dawson, of Altona. It seems they have had a good deal of trouble, she claiming that he abused her and choked her. The case is on as we go to press. Joseph Stafford has been appointed administrator for the estate of Mrs. Clara B. Ensley. J. P. Ensley's first wife and sister to Milford Clark. Mr. Stafford had settled up her affairs as far as he could legally but had to take this legal step in order to close up matters. The notice appears in the Weekly COURIER. Mr Small is Sheriff Stroh's riding bailiff. The grand jury have brought in five indictments including one against Charles Thompson, accused of taking the money his hired hand lost. Sheriff Stroh is up there to bring him down.

The divorce case between Mr. Dawson and wife is closed and Judge Penfield has it under consideration. Covell was Dawson's attorney, while Baxter & Brown were for Mrs. Dawson. The grand jury adjourned last night for the week, but will come in again Monday. Sheriff Stroh brought Charles Thompson down last evening, but he is out on $500 bonds. The U. S. marshal has taken Malonee, the one who tried to rob the Garrett postoffice, to Indianapolis Martin Teesdale is in jail for making and giving out obscene pictures.

The Columbia City Post says there is a good deal of "mineral wax" talk in and around Coesse since the "mine" was discovered. We understand that the waxbed is now located under John Kane's farm and that it is four feet thick. John McCoy contends that the samples of wax that the Fort Wayne chemist analyzed were taken from the ground at a place where he buried a large fat hog eighteen years ago. Whether the wax is the result of the transformation of the hog or is a deposit of some other character he is not prepared to say. But from the talk Coesse is destined to become noted the world over for its "wax mines."

Alonzo King and John Sawvel, of Franklin, called up to shake the COURIER fist yesterday. Mr. King is one of our reliable young patrons, and Mr Sawvel, who is a son of Isaac Sawvel, will be remembered as the assistant of his uncle, Reuben Sawvel, in the treasurer's office. For a time he has been selling fruit trees in Michigan. where the mercury now and then got 30 below.

Junction

This morning while the Lake Shore local was switching here Wm. and Rile Madden's team of bays became frightened. Starting near the brick freight house they ran west across the B. & O. track, throwing Wm. Madden out of the buggy and up against the fence which runs in front of Bill Ryan's house The horses then turned in front of the Eagle Mfg. Co's works, upsetting the buggy and throwing Chas. Madden out, hurting his back and side. They then jumped a four-foot picket fence between Geo. Morr's wagon shed and the Iron Works like a pair of reindeer, through Ryan's garden, breaking down four paunels of fence on the east side, and down the Wabash track into a marsh where they threw themselves and were caught. The buggy was pretty badly demolished. The horses don't seem to be hurt much.

There is some talk of stocking the marsh between the tracks at this place with a higher grade of bull frogs and surround the pond with a profusion of cabbage blossoms and perfecting other ornaments to make this a first-class summer resort. The plans are not yet all completed. It will undoubtedly be a success.

About 11 o'clock Wed. night B. & O. operator Burns, who boards at Peter Ditmars', was awakened by the dog barking and upon looking for the cause, saw three men, probably tramps, near the chicken coop and corn crib. Burns dressed and got a gun as soon as possible and sauntered out to bag the game. The tramps probably hearing Burns coming started to run, whereupon Burns blazed away three times, but failed to bring any of them down. We would advise persons addicted to appropriating other peoples' chickens and corn to steer clear of Mr. Ditmars' while Burns stays there as he is a bad man with a gun.

Friday's Daily:

NICHOLSON BILL PASSED.

THE MEASURE GOES THROUGH THE SENATE YESTERDAY, MAROH 7TH AFTER A HARD STRUGGLE.

The Nicholson bill passed the senate yesterday. It has been greatly changed by a variety of amendment since it first was introduced. In subtance, it requires an applicant for license, when he goes before the board of commissioners, to state exactly the location of his room and whether he has more than one room. No other business can be carried on in the room, unless he asks and obtains permission from the board, when he applies for his liquor license. The saloon must be kept locked on those days when no liquor can be sold under present laws, and no one but himself or family can enter the room on those days. The fact that any other person goes into the room on any such days, will be prima facie evidence of guilt in any case wherein the selling on such day is in trial.

A saloon must be on the ground floor or the basement and the room must front on a street or highway. And there shall be no blinds, screens or other obstructions to prevent a full view of the room from the street or highway at all hours when liquor cannot be legally sold. Violations of these provisions may be punished by a fine not less that $10 nor more than $100, to which may be added inprisonment for not more than 90 days. On a second conviction for such offense, the court may revoke his license and annul any of his rights under it. The same would be true in case of a third conviction. A plea of guilty has the same effect as a conviction. The same punishment is inflicted for allowing persons under 20 to loiter in the saloon. In case he sells liquor to a person under 21, either for his own use, or to give to another party, there is a fine $20 to $100, and ninety days in jail may be added. Sheriffs, marshals, constables, policemen, etc, are required to enforce these provisions. Only one license can be issued to one person, and he must be the actual owner of the business, and must apply in his own name. He must have resided in the township 90 days. In case the holder of a license dies or becomes insane, the proper portion of the license money may be refunded on an order of the boerd of commissioners. A majority of the legal voters of a town ship, or of a ward in a city may remonstrate against, and so prevent the issuing of a license, and he cannot get another license for two years. The number of legal votes cast in the township or ward for the candidates for the highest office voted for at the last election shall determine the number of voters that constitute a "majority" neccessay for a remonstrance.

Parties from Fairfield and other part of the country say the ground froze during the recent cold weather to a depth of more than three feet, some claiming four feet. All agree it has not frozen so deep for many years.

Here is what the weather prophet has in store for us during the remainder of March: Reactionary storms will be due about the 11th and 12th, making a prolonged period of general and violent disturbances. Rain storms amounting to floods in many localities will result. Rapid change to colder weather will follow the storms, turning the rains to sleet in many sections. A sweeping blizzard in all northerly regions need not cause surprise, winding up with a very cold wave. From the 16th to the 21st great cyclonic storms and gales will rush up from the equatorial regions, and there will be many local storms. The reactionary storm about the 23d and 24th will be followed by colder weather. The regular storm period will extend from the 25th to the end of the month, and probably two distinct storm waves will prevail, followed by sharp cold

The business of the Eckhart carriage factory has grown to such proportions that more room is needed, and we hear that extensive additions will be made to their already large plant.

Dr. Johnston, the dentist, is making some repairs on his residence property on north Main street.

Josiah Boyer, of Fairfield, was here Thursday. He reports more fully as to the death of Uncle Geo. Henney, Jan. 19. He had a stroke of paralysis last summer and later on, had several more attacks. The funeral was Jan. 22, happening to be on Mr. Boyer's 61st birthday. Mr. Henney was his broth-in-law.

OUR ASSEMBLY DISGRACED.

Monday night there was a bad riot in the legislature. The Governer's secretary Myron D. King tried to get into the House just before the closing hour to deliver to the speaker a message vetoing the bill that puts Griffin out of the office as custodian of the state house Republicans locked King into the elevator. A policeman got him out, then he tried to get into the room of the House, but the doors were locked, King's friends beat in the doors and he was forced into the room amid cries from republicans members to "kill him" etc. A fight ensued, many were injured, including King. He finally reached the speaker and handed the message to him, but the speaker refused to recieve it and declared the legislature adjourned, Mr. King was considerably hurt. He is the gentleman who came here last summer and paid the Rifles for services at Hammond. It was the most disgraceful riot ever seen in our legislature, and all about a very unimportant matter. Every right minded citizen we have talked with about this shameful affair condemns the hoodlum spirit that made such a scene possible in the Indiana State House.

Friday's Daily.

HE GOT VENTILATION.

Sheriff Stroh had a little episode all by himself yesterday. He had arrested a man and on putting him in tee bastile, he searched him as is the rule. Among other little trinkets brought to light by search was a ridiculous little gun, a cheap john sort of revolver of 22 caliber. The man said it was loaded and to show his faith in his own story, he proceeded to snap it a few times. But it did not go off. So the sheriff took it over to the office in the court house and laid it away. Yesterday he took it up and snapped it again when to his surprise the little thing went off with a small, one horse report, The little lead pill went out into the air of freedom through the upper pane of the west window. And that is how Sheriff Stroh got such thorough ventilation in his headquarters.

DeKalb Co. Medical Association.

The association met yesterday at 2 p. m. in the rooms of Dr. Swarts office, and held a very interesting and valuable session. A paper was read by Dr. Shoemaker, of Butler, and all took part in discussing it. Dr. W. W. Bowen, of Corunna, brought a patient before the meeting, a very interesting case, and this was discussed and commented on in full. The session lasted till 6 p. m. The physicians present were Dr. J. B. Bennett and Dr. W. F. Showalter, of Butler, Dr. Charles S. Stewart, of Garrett, Dr. W. Showalter and Dr. A. B. Darby, of Waterloo, Dr. W. L. Hines, of St. Joe, Dr. W. W. Bowen, of Corunna. Of the Auburn physicians present, were Dr. D. J. Swarts, Dr. Vesta M. Swarts, Dr. T. G. Matheny, Dr. F. M. Hines, Dr. A. L. Hines. The medics speak of it as one of very best meetings they have had.

Annual Meeting.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the Auburn Mining Co. will be held on Saturday of next week, March 16, at 1 p. m., to elect directors for the coming year. Books will close March 9.

HOW TO CURE A CIGARETTE FIEND.

An exchange thus advised an anxious father, who wrote for advice as to how to stop his boy from sucking cigarettes: "We suggest bribery, persuasion, instruction and shutting off his allowance. Then, if he remains obstinate, begin to use rawhide on raw hide. Welt him until he is ready to hold up his hand and say that he will never smoke another cigarette. If that doesn't work drown him. A drowned boy is better than one that smokes cigarettes.

Dr. Buchtel, assisted by Dr. Fisher, of Elkhart, performed a delicate surgical operation on Mrs. James D Myers, yesterday. The patient is reported doing well.

Little Fred Sebring came near getting seriously hurt to-day. He was with some other boys near Hebel's store and turned to run across the street while looking back at the others, he ran into Sam Nickey's buggy which Mr. Nickey was driving rapidly by. Neither one saw the other, but the hind wheel struck the boy and threw him some distance and rolled him in the mud in great shape. He was not much hurt, but was covered with the thin mud.

H. P. Griffith, of Corunna, and his mother, the widow of the late Ex-Commissioner Nelson Griffith were callers at this office Tuesday.

FIRE IN A MINE.

The Burning of a Shaft House in a Manitoba Mine Causes Loss of Life.

Winnipeg (Man.) special: The shaft house of the Sultana mine, near Rat Portage was destroyed by fire. The fire communicated to the shaft and the miners underground were imprisoned for seven hours before the fire was extinguished. Two of them died soon after being brought to the surface; six others are in a precarious condition while the rest of the men are still in the mine.

The fire caught in the drying room and is supposed to have been started by a pipe in the pocket of a coat hanging on the wall. Foreman Johnson noticing the fire and called on the men to assist in putting it out but all ran away, being afraid of explosives in the drying room. Mr. Johnson rushed into the fiery room, removed two boxes of powder and then directed his attention to an attempt to save the building.

As soon as the ruins were sufficiently cooled, it was found that the timbers lining the shaft were blazing and the water was directed on these timbers, but in the excitement a greater portion of it fell useless down the shaft. About this time help arrived from Rat Portage and shortly afterward the fire was extinguished in the shaft and Messrs. Motley Bell, assayer at the mine, and Foreman Johnson rigged a hoist, descended the shaft and found six men on the first level. They were apparently suffocated. They descended to the lower level and found three more, but these men were in better shape than the others and efforts were begun to raise the others. The first three brought up were suffering badly, but were resuscitated after a short time under Dr. MacDonnell's attendance. The fourth man, however, John Lagier, was very low when he arrived at the surface and died shortly after. The others were in a critical condition when brought to the surface, but all recovered excepting Rudolph Erickson.

DASTARDLY DEED.

Ties Piled Upon the Nickel Plate Track at Valparaiso.

Some unknown person made an attempt the other night to wreck the express train, east bound, on the Nickel Plate road, just west of Valparaiso, Ind. They had placed ties with one end under the rail and the other projecting over the opposite rail, then piled ties behind them. The engineer could not stop his train before striking the obstruction and knocking part of them off, dragging the others about two hundred yards. The engine had to be raised before the ties could be removed. The passengers were all thrown from their seats, but no one was seriously injured. It is supposed to have been the work of train robbers. This point is the most isolated place along the road between here and Hobart and in a deep cut. Attempts have been made to wreck trains on the Chicago and Grand Trunk road just south of here.

Henry Heck, aged twenty-three, of Chicago, was arrested by Special Detective J. C. Horton, of the Nickel Plate, for the attempted wrecking. Heck was taken to Valparaiso, and admitted that he did it, claiming that he had no assistance, also that he was drunk. The officers do not believe his story, as other footprints were found.

MAD RIOT.

The Indiana Legislature Ends in Shame and Disgrace.

The Indiana Legislature broke up in a wild riot Monday night, in which almost every member participated. Revolvers were drawn and many persons were seriously injured, Adams of Parke County, perhaps fatally. For fully twenty minutes the State House was filled with a howling, surging mob. Men who had been friends side by side during the session, became deadly enemies, and made every effort to injure each other.

The trouble originated over the bill to supplant Custodian Griffin, a Democrat, with a Republican. The bill was delivered to the Governor three nights ago. It was his scheme to hold it to the last minute and then the legislature could not pass it over his veto, as by statute adjournment would take place at 12 o'clock. The Governor's secretary started with the bill with ten minutes' time. The Republicans attempted by force to prevent his reaching the legislative hall with the bill in time.

Adams, who was injured, is representative of Parke County. He was kicked in the pit of the stomach and had to be carried from the House.

Blew the Roofs Off.

A phenomenon in the form of an electrical snowstorm was witnessed at Gallipolis, Ohio, recently. A terrific windstorm accompanied it, unroofing buildings and blowing down trees. Neal's big wheat elevator was unroofed and the walls badly damaged. An empty coal car was blown from a siding on to the main track of the C., H. V. & T. Railroad, and was discovered just a few moments before the southbound passenger train was due.

Many Armenians Killed.

According to a dispatch from Constantinople, unconfirmed rumors were current of fresh disorder at Karahisar, in the valley of Sivas, Asiatic Turkey. Additional advices from the same source say that many Armenians have been killed and wounded at Karahisar.

Died from Fright.

During a small fire in a dry goods store at Decatur, Ill., Mrs. C. P. Thatcher, aged 56, well known in society, became so badly frightened that she died in a few hours.

One of them Dead.

At Spencerville, Ohio, the infant child of Clarence Martin choked to death by the bursting of a gathering in the head. This is one of the three children that were so horribly frozen some time ago while making their escape from their burning house.

Horrible Death.

At Carrollton, Ky., Thomas J. Malone, Jr., an employe of Block's distillery, was found dead in the corn crib, the corn having caved in on him. He was about 40 years old.

A Plucky Woman Operator.

Duluth special: Some passengers who came in on the Northern Pacific train from the west recently, were decidedly nervous until they were some distance this side of Kimberly. Saturday night about 11 o'clock Mrs. Reichart, night operator at Kimberly, twelve miles this side of Aitken, heard three rough-looking men in the station planning to wreck a passenger train that night at a bridge near Kimberly. She at once wired the dispatcher at Brainerd. The three men heard the key working and jumped to the conclusion she was wiring the railroad people. They rushed for the door of her office and tried to break in, but were met by the plucky woman who fired four shots through the door. The men took to their heels. The railroad officials sent out word for the section men to patrol the track for several miles and the train was run very cautiously through that part of the country and no trouble was experienced.

A STRANGE TALE

Of Mutiny and Wrecking That Will Be Investigated.

From reports received at the State Department from the United States Consul at Callao, Peru, there is a good reason to suspect that the strange tale that came to Philadelphia in a letter from Charles Jones, of the mutiny aboard the American bark Portland Lloyd, and the wrecking of the vessel near Junin, Chili, was put afloat to cover desertion or some misconduct on the part of some of the crew of the vessel. United States Consul Jastermski at Callao has been looking into the matter, and it appears that the report is much older than the date assigned by the alleged steward of the the ship. According to the Consul's report, the bark, which was built in Maine, and hailed from Seattle, put into Callao toward the end of last year. She cleared for Junin, Chili, about December 1, and soon after there were stories afloat to the effect that the crew had mutinied, that the officers had been killed, and that the ship had been wrecked with the loss of all but two men. The Consul traced the story to letters written by one E. M. Baker, and another man who claimed that they had been the only men to escape.

BETTER FEELING

In Business and Trade Circles Throughout the Country.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: Congressional adjournment and proof that though the rate of exchange rises to, and even above, the shipping point, gold does not go out, have produced a much better feeling. Prices do not improve and there is on the whole no gain, but some loss in wages, while strikes of 15,000 coal miners near Pittsburg, and several thousand building workers in New York, besides strikes in ten or twelve textile and iron establishments, further lessen purchasing power for the time. But anticipation of improved demand for goods is general and many are manufacturing and buying beyond present needs on the strength of it. Fears of financial disorders no longer retard, though the redemption of notes has averaged $221,000 per day for the month, but the fact that only $302,704 gold has been exported since February 2, against $26,582,936 in January, strengthens the impression that further exports will somehow be prevented.

FATALLY INJURED.

Shocking Accident at Detroit During a Fire.

A shocking accident occurred at the intersection of Canfield avenue and the railroad tracks, Detroit, Mich. There had been a fire to which hook and ladder company No. 5 had been called. As the truck was crossing the Detroit, Grand Haven and Milwaukee track at the point above stated, a freight train dashed down the track and smashing into the truck threw it from the track. The following men were probably fatally hurt and were conveyed to the hospital: Driver Anthony Korte, married, aged 26; Steersman Christian Geobel, widower, aged 51; Lieut. Charles L. Chase, single, aged 35. The tine of one of the hook and ladder forks entered Korte's head, penetrating the brain. The truck was thrown about 150 feet and wrecked. The horses were badly mangled. Capt. M. F. W. Wirth, was also bruised.

Affairs in Cuba.

Tampa (Fla.) special: Charles M. Echwerria, a friend of Gen. Languilly, has arrived from Havana. He visited the General in the prison, and disclaims the report that he is a traitor.

All the merchants on the island who use cipher dispatches have been ordered to submit a key of the same to the Government.

The request that Consul Ramon Williams be recalled is thought to be caused by some stand taken in behalf of Aguirra, an American citizen, now in prison. That Williams should be objectionable to Spain is an unexpected development, for his disposition has always been to accord with the government, and consequently he was disliked by the Cubans. As a Consul, he is eminently fitted for the place.

The rising in Santa Clara, the central district of Cuba, assures the general following of Puerto Principe, lying between the Santa Clara and Bayamo districts. The Cubans are delighted.

Col. Coit Cleared.

Columbus special: The report of the Special Court of Inquiry investigating the conduct of Col. A. B. Coit, in command of the Fourteenth Regiment at the Washington C. H. riot, has been made public by Gov. McKinley. The report exonerates Col. Coit and commends him for valor. Perhaps the most interesting feature of the investigation, however, is a statement of the affair which Gov. McKinley feels called upon to make to the public in connection with the report. The Governor, in unqualified terms, indorses the action of Col. Coit, and his statement virtually amounts to a charge to the jury which is to try the Colonel for manslaughter to return a verdict of not guilty. The Military Commission reviews at length the facts concerning the cause of the riot, all of which go to show the justice of the order to fire on the mob.

Passenger Train Ditched.

Two coaches, attached to a passenger train on the Indianapolis and Vincennes railroad, were ditched between Marco and Sanborn, Ind. A broken rail was the cause of the wreck. Both coaches were badly broken, and the rear coach was afterward consumed by fire. Among the passengers was I. I. Halton, of Eminence, Wis., who suffered a broken thigh. He was taken to Worthington for medical attention. The others injured included:

S. T. Brown, of Jonesville, Wis., hurt in the back.

Ed. Elliot, of Terre Haute, bruised about body.

Jos. M. Wright, of Cincinnati, back and arm injured.

Edward Dryman, of Vincennes, Ind., injured in the head and back.

Strong Team.

St. Louis special: Rev. Parkhurst of New York, is coming to St. Louis, as announced, to engage in the work of Sunday reform in conjunction with Sam Jones and the local clergy. The Sabbath Association has decided upon a line of action. Sam Jones has been appealed to to lend his moral support during the rest of his stay, and Dr. Parkhurst of New York, has consented to come in a few days and deliver a series of lectures to aid the work.

Attorneys have been retained to prosecute all violators of the statutes and ordinances, and the plans are complete for an active campaign against sin.

Lied About It.

Paris special: The embargo placed upon American cattle is due to the representations made by numerous deputation which have recently been calling upon the minister of husbandry, notably an influential deputation which called upon him on February 22. For some time past a violent crusade against American cattle has been waged in the French press, and description of the alleged terrible condition of American cattle arriving at La Vallette, saying how the animals were a mass of skin, bones and sores. This also appeared in the English newspapers.

Comrades of the Battlefield.

The order of Comrades of the Battlefield will hold its annual meeting and memorial service for the dead at the Chickamauga Military Park on September 19 and 20, 1895, the time of the dedication, permission to do so having been obtained from the Commission Chairman, Gen. J. S. Fullerton. The General Commanding, George E. Dolton of No. 24 South Commercial street, St. Louis, requests that all soldiers who served the nation should address him for information concerning the coming event, in order to encourage a full attendance on the days of the celebration.

Another Battle.

The Tokio correspondent of the London Central News says, a dispatch from Gen. Nodu, dated at Hai Cheng gives this information: "As arranged, the army attacked Old New Chwang. The fighting began at 10 o'clock in the morning. Both divisions had entered the city by noon. Part of the enemy had fled to Ying Kao, but the greater part still occupied the houses and streets and obstinately resisted the Japanese troops. The street fighting was desperate, but the Japanese won their way gradually street by street until by 11 o'clock in the evening they had completely routed the enemy. The Chinese left behind 1,880 killed and wounded, 600 prisoners, 18 guns and great quantities of rifles, ammunition, banners, and provisions. The Japanese loss was somewhat above 200 killed and wounded."

Two Persons Killed.

The Florida vestibule train No. 31, southbound, was wrecked at Scotland, Ga., by a trampered switch, the staple being broken. The train consisted of three Pullmans, first and second class coaches, mail and express car, every one of which was derailed, the Pullman first and second class coaches being throw on their sides. One of the coaches was occupied by the Roland Reed company and the others having a full complement of passengers. That there was no greater damage is miraculous. The schedule runing time is fifty miles an hour and the engine crashed into some cars on the sidetrack, telescoping itself in a box car. Mrs. C. D. Subers and 5-years-old daughter were killed and many injured.

Didn't Say the Count.

George Gould says: "The statement that there has been any marriage settlement in connection with the marriage of my sister to the Count de Castallane is false. Not only has there been no marriage settlement, but such a thing was never discussed or even mentioned by any member of either of the families. The statement which obtained such publicity, to the effect that certain debts of the Marquis de Castallane had to be settled before he would give his consent to the marriage, is as malicious as it is false and absurd." This was a voluntary statement from Mr. Gould. He spoke emphatically and showed that the reports referred to had been most annoying to him.

Li Hung Chang Vindicated.

A special from Tien Tsin, says that the emperor of China has completely vindicated Li Hung Chang from the charges that were brought against him. His majesty confesses that after trying others he has found that Li Hung Chang alone is trustworthy. Therefore, he grants Li Hung Chang the fullest powers to treat with Japan for the restoration of peace. The central government publicy assumes the entire responsibility for the condition of the national defenses, which is the result of blindness on the part of the Chinese to the progress of other nations. This action of the emperor places all future reforms in the hands of Li Hung Chang.

Threatened His Life.

Indianapolis special: Governor Matthews has made public an anonymous letter which threatened his life if he does not stop his fight on the Roby race track. The letter says that Roby interests will be alive long after the Governor is dead. The communication states that a relative of the Governor's accepted a bribe to influence him. The letter also states that Governor Matthews, in his future political career, will need the influence of the Roby race track people.

Mother and Child Perish.

Mrs. A. W. Boggs left the home of her parents, where she had been visiting with her little child and started for her home on Spring Creek Mountain, in Monroe County, West Virginia. While traveling in the mountains she lost her way in the snow and was overcome by the extreme cold and froze to death. The bodies of the woman and child were found lying in the snow the next morning by searchers.

Gen. Harrison Ill.

Ex-President Harrison is confined to his room at his residence on North Delaware street, Indianapolis, with an attack of grip. He has been ill for some time, and for a day or so there were fears that his illness might take a serious turn, but at present he is convalescing.

Crushed by a Log.

James Rhody, aged 34, a laborer, of Frankport, Ky., was killed in a clearing in the Flat Creek neighborhood. A huge log became suddenly dislocated, rolling down the hillside, passing over his body. Rhody formerly lived at Poneto, Ind.

Cruiser Sent to Colon.

There is further disquieting news from the Isthmus of Panama. The United States cruiser Raleigh has been ordered to Colon and the Atlanta has gone to Bocos del Toro, where the revolutionists have landed.

STEAMER GOES DOWN

TWELVE LOST IN AN OHIO RIVER DISASTER.

The Longfellow Becomes Unmanageable, Strikes a Railroad Bridge at Cincinnati, Breaks in Two and Sinks with Her Cargo.

Refused to Obey Her Rudder.

The steamer Longfellow, of the Memphis and Cincinnati Packet Line, was wrecked Friday morning by striking a pier of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad bridge at Cincinnati, and twelve lives were lost. The steamer broke in two and sank with her cargo. The passenger list was lost, but it is known twenty-five or thirty passengers were aboard, most of whom had engaged passage for New Orleans. The dead:

David Aldridge, Cleveland.
Dr. Anderson, female.
J. W. Aull, Dayton, Ohio.
Mrs. J. W. Aull, Dayton, Ohio.
Captain John L. Carter, Newport, Ky.
Gus Chauvet, barkeeper on Longfellow.
—— Johnson, barber on Longfellow.
James Mitter, deck hand.
Thomas Reardon, deck hand.
Michael Russell, deckhand, Cincinnati.
Walker, servant.
Unknown young woman, an invalid, of New York.

The Longfellow was to leave at 5 o'clock Thursday evening. A heavy fog came up and it was decided to wait until the fog lifted. At 6 o'clock Friday morning, the fog having risen sufficiently, Captain John Kirker decided to start. The tow boat Hercules Carrel, which was alongside all night, was signaled to be in readiness to help the Longfellow through the bridges. At 6:30 the boats started. The Carrel was on the port side of the Longfellow. The boats passed safely under the suspension bridge, but immediately afterward the Longfellow began behaving badly. A cross current seemed to strike her and swing her bow around toward the Kentucky shore. Every effort was made to right her so that she would pass between the piers of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad forming the span on the Kentucky side. The swift current of the river carried her along rapidly.

Those in the boat could see that it would be impossible to avoid striking the pier. The alarm was sounded immediately, and the passengers, some of whom were at breakfast, while others were still in their berths, were hurried to the deck. The boat struck the pier with her starboard side, just behind the boilers. The air was filled with flying timbers, glass and ironwork. Those on board, many of whom were in their night clothes, were hurried to the Hercules Carrel, which was still alongside. Consternation reigned. There were piercing cries and terrible yells and women fainting.

Sinks with Her Cargo.

In the meantime, the Longfellow was being driven harder against the pier by the swift river. In less than five minutes after she struck there was a loud crash and the boat parted amidships. The prow went down into the river, disappearing completely. The stern followed. Some of the upper works floated down the stream and then the wrecked hull came slowly up and also floated away. Four or five men were on the floating cabin and these were taken off by the crew of the Hercules Carrel. A number of small boats put out from the shore and picked up persons who had jumped into the river. Five minutes after the boat struck there was nothing left but a lot of floating wreckage to show that there had ever been such a boat as the Longfellow. Everything on board the boat in the way of registers, papers, valuables, cargo, etc., went down with her.

The cause of the accident is attributed to the boat refusing to obey her rudder when she struck the strong current just below the suspension bridge. The Longfellow was valued at $22,500 and insured for $15,000.

HAYWARD IS GUILTY.

The Minneapolis Gambler Responsible for the Murder of Catherine Ging.

Harry Hayward, on trial at Minneapolis for the murder of Catherine Ging, has been found guilty. A few minutes before 11 o'clock Friday morning Judge Smith finished his charge and a little before 2 o'clock the jury had agreed on a verdict. Judge Smith hastened to the court-room, the prisoner was brought in and the jury summoned. Kobler, the deputy clerk, asked in a tremulous voice whether the jury had agreed upon a verdict, and Neil McNeil, the foreman, stood up. His face was ghastly in its color, and there was not a man on the jury unaffected by the gravity of the situation. "We have agreed," said McNeil, in a voice that was scarcely audible, and the folded piece of paper that meant life or death to the accused was handed to the clerk. Every eye was turned toward the condemned man as Kobler read the verdict. There was nothing in his face to indicate that he had heard a word of it. He threw his head back as the word "guilty" was pronounced, but it was only to adjust his collar-band. He did not change color by a single shade.

Catherine Ging, a Minneapolis dressmaker, was murdered in a lonely spot on the north shore of Lake Calhoun, near Minneapolis, early in the evening of Dec. 3 last. The murdered woman had taken three mysterious rides, according to Liveryman Goosman. On Nov. 27 she took the first, calling in person at Goosman's livery stable in Grant street, and driving the horse herself. She brought it back at 9 o'clock, and no one was with her. She was gone but an hour and a half. Dec. 1 Miss Ging ordered the same rig over the telephone, and instructed the liveryman to leave the vehicle at the West Hotel. Accordingly the carriage was left at the West Hotel at 7:20 o'clock, and Miss Ging returned it to the stable in person at 9 o'clock. As before, no one was seen with her. On the evening of Dec. 3 she took the third and fatal ride.

It was the sensation of the year in Minneapolis, and the discovery of the murder put the police on their mettle. Mayor Eustis himself headed the investigation, setting the whole force of detectives at work on the case, and he caused to be summoned to the office of the chief of police all parties whose business or social relations with the murdered woman were such that they might throw light on the mystery. Harry Hayward, who was in charge of the flats in which Miss Ging had lived, was arrested on suspicion on Dec. 4, the day following the murder, and kept in the "sweatbox" for twelve hours. He told a plausible story and was finally released from custody. He said he had loaned the woman $9,500, taking as security two life-insurance policies of $5,000 each. He claimed that he had loaned her $7,000 in cash shortly before the murder, but this could not be found.

At 11:20 p. m. on Dec. 5 Adry A. Hayward, brother of Harry, was arrested, charged with the murder, and on the afternoon of Dec. 6 Harry was rearrested. A day later Adry made a confession in which he declared that his brother Harry had planned the crime to secure the insurance money and that the bloody deed was done by Claus A. Blixt, engineer of the Ozark flats, where Miss Ging lived. Blixt was arrested on Dec. 7. Harry Hayward and Blixt were indicted for the murder, and the former's trial was begun the latter part of January. On Feb. 4 Blixt went on the stand and told the story of the crime—how it had been deliberately planned by Hayward and how he had carried it out.

A SCAR SAVED HIS LIFE.

A Young Man Is Nearly Hanged for Another's Crime.

Walter Bryant, a young man with a broad scar on his forehead and another on his arm, has just been released from the jail in St. Joseph, Mo. Few men have come nearer to being hanged for a crime of which they were not guilty than Bryant, and he owes his escape from the gallows to a scar. A week or so ago Bryant was arrested in Springfield on suspicion of being Thomas Harris, wanted for the murder of John McDowell seven years ago. It was in vain that the young man declared that he was not Harris, who had escaped from prison while under sentence of death. Several men who knew Harris went to the jail and positively identified Bryant as the man who was wanted, but Bryant did not lose hope until Harris's father came and said he was his son. Bryant told the authorities that his parents and brother lived at Santa Rosa, Cal., but there came no answer from the address he gave. He declared that he had been arrested before on the same charge, once at Sheridan, Wyo., and once at Little Rock, Ark., but he had forgotten the name of the sheriff from Atchison County who had gone after him and found that he was not the right man. He remembered the year, however, and described the sheriff. William Turner, who lives in Red Willow County, Neb., was sheriff of the county at that time, and he came to St. Joseph to save the young man's life. Turner recognized the prisoner at once and said he was not the murderer of McDowell.

Bryant's statement that he has been twice arrested before this time on account of his resemblance to the fugitive was confirmed by the ex-sheriff. When Turner came he brought with him a minute description of Harris, made while the murderer was a prisoner in his charge, and called attention to a scar on the left ankle, which could not be found on Bryant. He said the resemblance between the two men was perfect, with this exception. The absence of that scar on the ankle has probably been the means of saving Bryant from being executed for another man's crime.

THE Commercial Club of Richmond has passed a resolution by which the next State Encampment of the G. A. R. will be asked to meet in that city.

THE students of Wabash College vigorously opposed the action of the college president in forbidding college ball teams to play with professionals.

DUCK CREEK, flowing through the center of Elwood, is to be converted into a monster sewer and covered. By so doing $250,000 worth of land will be reclaimed.

W. R. STEVENS, an Elmwood employe of the Diamond plate-glass factory, has instituted suit for $10,000 damages against the company for injuries received while in their employ as engineer.

FRANK SERBER, a young man employed in Coleman's barrel-heading factory at Terre Haute, was fatally injured by being caught up by a belt and drawn with terrific force against the pulley.

JOHN MCDONNELL, John Ratcliff, David Overman and others of Marion, have formed an association with a view to building an electric railway from Marion to Independence, in the southwestern part of Grant County, about sixteen miles.

LAST summer Nathan Coffinburg of Montgomery County, was injured by a bridge breaking down while he was driving across. He asked the County Commissioners for damages, and they offered him $75. This he refused, and brought suit for $5,000. The case was venued to Fountain County, where he was award $1,055. The case will be appealed to the Supreme Court.

MISS LIZZIE LEE, 18 years old, daughter of William Lee, was terribly burned at Jeffersonville. She was replenishing the fire in the stove, when a coal fell out and lodged against her dress and she was soon enveloped in flames. Her screams attracted attention, and her father succeeded in extinguishing the flames, being himself badly burned. Miss Lee's injuries are very serious, but she will recover.

MRS MARGARET WILSON, an aged lady of Seymour, who resides with her daughter, Mrs. Doll Kennard, has been ill for some time with grip. The other night she started upstairs carying a lamp. When she reached the top she fainted, falling to the bottom and fracturing her skull. The house caught fire from the lamp, but the flames were extinguished before much damage was done. Mrs. Wilson is in a critical condition.

THE jury in the case of James Truelock, Thomas Kirk and Lee Martin, charge with grave-robbing, at Franklin, returned a verdict of guilty. The men were each given six years in the penitentiary. The offense for which these men were convicted was that of stealing the body of James Curry, a prominent citizen of the country, who died some time ago. Kirk and Truelock reside in Indianapolis, while Martin's home is in Greenwood.

THE 6-year-old child of William Spigle, a farmer residing six miles south of Frankfort, died under peculiar circumstances. A few days ago it fell, striking on its mouth with sufficient force to knock out a tooth. The wound began to bleed, and though a physician was summoned, the flow of blood could not be stopped and the child bled to death. A few weeks ago a younger child of Mr. Spigle died in the same manner, the bleeding being caused in this instance by a pin scratch.

PATENTS have been awarded Indiana inventors as follows: George H. Archer, assignor of one-half to R. CHARLES DULL, aged 9, Farmland, while playing with a revolver, pointed it at Frank Jones, aged 11, and pulled the trigger. The ball entered Jones' face, inflicting a fatal injury. Dull says it was an accident, while Jones declares it was done in a fit of anger.

AT Mentone, as Mrs. W. S. Charles was rendering lard on a gasoline stove, the lard ignited causing an explosion. Mrs. Charles being at work near the stove her clothing caught fire. The flames completely enveloped her person, destroying her hair and burning the flesh of her limbs so severely that her toe nails dropped off. It is thought her injuries will prove fatal.

AT Decker, Knox county, an attempt was made to blow up the home of Charles A. Bennet. The house was badly wrecked with a dynamite bomb, which was exploded on the back porch. No one was killed, but everybody in the house was thrown out of bed by the froce of the explosion. Mr. and Mrs. Bennet, their two children and his mother-in-law, Mrs. Angleberger, occupied the house at the time. Bennet is an inoffensive and respected citizen and a constable in that township. Mrs. Angleberger recently separated from her husband, J. V. Angleberger, ex-justice of the peace, and a suit for divorce and prossession of property is now pending. Carter's bloodhounds, of Seymour, were sent for to track the perpetrators.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

The chief bills passed in the House Monday were: A bill to have wardens of penitentiaries return prisoners when released to county where sentenced; a bill permitting the people of Jackson County to vote on the proposition to remove the court house from Brownstown to Seymour; a bill preventing employment in factories of children under fourteen years of age; a bill making a judicial district of Rush and Hancock Counties, also a district of Bartholomew.

The House concurred in the bill making the sale of cigarettes to children, or making cigarettes in the State, after June 1, a felony, punishable from one to three years.

Representative Bobilya called up Senate bill No. 13, to fix the salaries of the Commissioners of Allen County at $1,200 a year, and it passed.

The Senate adopted to joint resolution for a constitutional amendment to increase the number of Judges of the Supreme Court from five anywhere to sixteen.

The Nicholson bill was made a special order for Tuesday afternoon.

The building and loan bill was passed to a second reading, after numerous amendments, and the congressional apportionment bill went to second reading, as also did the benevolent institutions bill, which was made the special order for Tuesday morning.

THE legislative features of Tuesday were the passage of the congressional apportionment bill and the bill governing benevolent institutions, by the Senate.

The Nicholson bill was postponed again till Wednesday morning.

The House rushed through two caucus measures, one being the bill to provide for a metropolitan police force in all cities of more than 10,000 inhabitants, and the other making certain amendments so the Australian election law.

The Jackson County seat bill was called up, and, after a heated discussion, passed.

The Governor vetoed the legislative apportionment bill and it was passed over his veto.

The House killed the Ellison drainage bill.

THE Senate Wednesday jumped over the caucus fence on the fee and salary bill. This led the way to numerous amendments in addition to the twenty or thirty that the committee made, so that when the bill was passed by a substantial majority there had been from sixty to seventy-five amendments.

The Senate heard the report of the temperance committee which recommended sweeping amendments to the Nicholson bill. The bill and amendments were ordered printed and made a special order for Thursday.

The Senate passed the direct tax bill providing revenue for the educational institutions.

Also Moore's House temperance bill. It gives cities acting under general charter the right to prescribe where saloons may be kept and prohibits screens. This does not apply to Indianapolis, Fort Wayne or Evansville.

The Senate failed to pass the building and loan bill for want of a constitutional majority, the vote standing 23 to 33.

The Senate passed the bill abolishing the Board of Monument Commissioners and creating a board of three regents, over the veto of Gov. Matthews.

The House rejected the Senate amendments to the fee and salary bill.

The House passed the caucus benevolent institutions bill. Also a bill repealing section 2 of the employes' co-liability bill in accordance with the desires of the railroad employes' organizations. The Senate bill making an appropriation of $10,000 annually to the State Board of Agriculture for premiums on exhibits; a Senate bill for a municipal gerrymander, by amending the law so as to permit the cities to be redistricted every two years instead of every ten; authorizes teachers holding a thirty-six months license to teach in any county in the State on that license. Another bill passed by the House of wide interest was the amendment of the present law offered by Mr. Stakebrake, which authorizes the Governor or the Attorney General to bring a suit in the name of the State on their own behalf for the enforcement of law.

The Nicholson temperance bill was the special order of the Senate Thursday, the committee having it in charge reporting several amendments which were designed to make the bill less stringent in its provisions. The amendments were adopted with the exception of the one to strike out the section providing that license shall not be issued when the majority of the voters of a ward or precinct remonstrated against it. CHAPTER XIII.—Continued.

Sitting down beside his wife, he leaned his head against hersa tired head it was—and laid on hers one of his brown hands, not such handsome hands as they used to be when they did nothing. She clasped it fondly, though she said not a word; she, too, was not given to complaining. Besides, hard as things were, both for him and for her, to see him thus, doing cheerfully what he did not like (through all his tender fictions she knew he could not like the mill very much), fighting with hardships, submitting to poverty, and proudly conquering any false shame about either, taking up his daily burden and carrying it without a murmur or reproach—she felt—yes, amidst all her pain, she felt something as the mediaeval women must have done—the noble ladies who buckled on their good knights' armor and sent them forth to battle, to live or die, as God willed, but never to be conquered, never ceasing to fight, like true knights, to their last breath.

But Bella could not understand this sort of thing at all. She shrugged her shoulders and raised her brows.

"It's an odd taste, Rody, but you always were so odd. To be out at work all day, and come home tired and dirty, hungry and cold, and then say you 'like' it!—I wouldn't be you for the world nor Silence either, shut up in this lonely place all the year round. No wonder mamma would not come to Blackhall; it would never have suited her at all;" and Bella laughed at the bare idea. "But I ought not to find fault with the poor old house, for I may have to come down to it, after all. No telegram or letter?"

"Nothing."

"Well, don't look so grave about it. Plainly they have all cut me; let me fall back upon you. Will you take me in, Rody? I'll sell my jewels—I brought a lot with me, you know—and pay you for my keep. When it's all gone you can turn me out to starve, only it wouldn't be creditable to either Thomsons or Jardines if Mrs. Alexander Thomson and her baby had to starve."

'What nonsense you talk!" said Roderick, turning away and changing the conversation at once.

But that night when the household was all gone to bed, and they three sat over the fire, listening to the wind howling and the sleet pattering against the panes, he resumed the subject, and, somewhat to Silence's surprise, began very tenderly, but with unmistakable decision, to arrange what his sister should do. His arrangement it was—not his wife's—as he plainly said, thereby taking from her the weight of a difficult and painful thing.

"I will not promise to keep you always, Bella, for I think husband and wife are better left alone together; but we shall not turn you out, my poor girl, whatever comes," said he, laying a brotherly hand on Bella's shoulder. "The little we have—and you see how little it is—you shall share, till something can be arranged between you and your husband. Then, with what you have of your own—my mother will surely pay it over to you—we will find you a home close by us, in the manse, perhaps, where I heard today there are two vacant rooms."

"What! to be shut up in a miserable country lodging, with only baby and nurse! Dreadful!

"Not quite so bad as your other alternative—starving. And, Bella, we must look things in the face. If you have no marriage settlement, and my mother keeps her money in her own hands during her lifetime, and both she and your husband cast you off, you have only your brother to fall back upon. I am not rich now, you know that; but you know also that, rich or poor, I should never let my sister 'starve.'"

"No, a thousand times no!" cried Silence, taking her hand—for Bella, seeing this was no joking matter, had suddenly taken fright, and, as usual, burst into tears. "It may not come to that; but if it does, believe me, poverty is not as bad as it seems. You shall never want for love. You will live close beside us; our home will be open to you; and the child—the children" (in a timid whisper) "shall grow up together. Oh, we shall be very happy, never fear."

"No, no; I should be miserable!" And she sobbed and moaned, and talked of "cruelty," "hard usage," wished she was "dead and out of the way"—the usual bitter outcries against fate of those who, having made their own fate what it is, have not the strength to bear it.

Deeply grieved and not a little wounded, Roderick sat beside his sister, his wife not interfering—who could interfere?—till her misery had a little subsided, and then said, quietly:

"Now, we will speak no more to-night; but to-morrow we will consult a lawyer, and find out the right and wrong of the case, and your exact position with regard to your husband. Will that do?'

"No, no," she said. "Don't be in such a hurry. Wait till I make up my mind. It's so difficult to make up one's mind always. Money isn't everything, as Silence says, but I never had her enthusiasm for poverty. And the drink—which to her is such a horror—why, we're used to it at Richerden. Alexander Thomson isn't the only drunkard in Scotland. If I could but put up with him a little longer!"

Both Roderick and his wife looked exceedingly surprised. They made no remark—they always had carefully avoided making any remarks to Bella about her husband. But when she was gone, and they stood alone together over the dying fire, they spoke of her with a pity deeper than either had ever yet expressed.

"Mark my words; she will go back to him yet. Do you think, my wife, she would be right or wrong?"

"Wrong!" was the answer, clear and firm.

"Why?"

"Because she will do it neither for love, nor duty, nor even pity, but only for expediency. Think! the horror of a married life begun and continued for the sake of expediency!"

Silence looked up in her husband's face—her husband whom she was ready to live for, however hard a life, ready to die for, and he knew it.

"You are right," he said. "And yet both erred—both ought to suffer."

"But not more than they. And the sins of the parents shall be visited on the children even unto the third and fourth generation." She spoke in a low, solemn voice. "I told her once, and I shall tell her again, if she asks me, that she who makes a bad man the father of her children is little better than a murderess."

Bella, however, did not seem at all to deserve or to desire the epithet "poor." She appeared at breakfast next morning in the best of spirits, nor did she fall into her usual half hour of despondency after the post went by. She watched the weather with a slight anxiety, but that was all. She even began to take an interest in Blackhall affairs, and especially in an invitation for New Year's eve at Symington, which her brother and sister were discussing together.

"Of course you will go and take me with you? I had no idea, Silence, that you had such grand friends. Do you often see them?"

"Not very often. It's a good way to walk, and besides——"

"Walk? You don't mean to say your husband lets you walk?"

A sharp quiver of pain passed over Roderick's face. "I let her, as I am obliged to let her do many things which cut me to the heart, but we bear them. Bella, when you and I were children, we had no need to think of money; now we have—at least I have. If I hired a carriage and took my wife and you to Symington, it would cost me fifteen shillings, and my earnings are just two pounds a week. Now, you see? Let us say no more."

They did not, for Bella afterwards owned to being "quite frightened" by her brother's manner; but several times that morning she fell into brown studies, as if something was secretly vexing her, and in the afternoon was suddenly missing for an hour, having gone herself—"for the good of her health," she said—to the village, and as, by mere chance they afterward discovered, to the postoffice.

Had she, after refusing so often, at last written to her mother? They did not like to ask, and she did not tell, but being not at all of a reticent nature, she soon betrayed that something was on her mind. For three days after that she was in a restless, slightly irritable condition, very difficult to please in trifles, and noticing more than ever, in that annoyingly condescending way she had, the weak points of the establishment.

"And so Cousin Silence left you the house just as it stands, my dear, as it must have been in papa's time, of course? Well, no wonder mamma did not care for it. Such poky rooms, such shabby old furniture. In your place I would have turned out every stick of it, and refurnished it from top to bottom. But you can do this by and by, if you stay here."

"I have no wish to go."

"Probably not, a quiet soul like you; it suits you exactly. But my brother, you surely would not keep him shut up all his days at Blackhall, he who would be an ornament in any society? Do think better of it. Poke him up, make him push himself forward in the world and get rich; there's nothing like money, after all. If mamma saw him well off, so that he could come back to Richerden, and live in good Richerden style, such as we have all of us been brought up to, she might forgive him; who knows?"

"Who knows?" repeated Silence, assenting.

She would have been amused, but for the sting which Bella's good-natured words often carried. She did not mean it; it was simply that she should not understand.

"Just think of what I say," continued Mrs. Thomson, as she gazed lazily out of the window, down the winding glen, at the end of which curled upward in a fairy-like pillar the smoke of the mill. "I wonder you can endure the sight of it—that horrid place where Rody works all day—Rody that used to be such a gentleman."

"He is a gentleman," said the young wife, with a flush of the eye. "And I do not dislike—I like the mill. It has helped to make him what he is, and show him what he could do; and he does it, does it cheerfully for me. Bella, if I die—and I may die; who can tell? this spring"—with a sudden appeal to this woman, so like herself, but yet a woman—"if I die, remember we were perfectly happy, my husband and I. We never have regretted anything, never shall regret anything, except perhaps that his mother—I always feel so for mothers."

Her voice broke with emotion, but it was with emotion quite thrown away. Bella scarcely heard what her sister-in-law was saying. She sat listening, as she had listened a good many times the last few days, to any sound outside.

"Hark! What is that? Carriage wheels?"

"Possibly. We do have visitors sometimes, even here," said Silence, with a smile.

But Bella heeded her not. She ran to the window and watched, in a tremor of anxiety, the arrival. A large, handsome carriage, with post-horses, postilion and two liveried footmen behind, coming slowly up to the door.

"It is! it is our carriage! Perhaps she has come herself, poor dear mamma! I did not tell you, my dear, but I wrote to mamma, and said, if she thought it best, I would come home. And I suppose she has sent for me. Look there! look there! No, it is not mamma—oh, God help me! it is my husband."

Horror, disgust, despair, were written on every feature of her face, as she watched Mr. Alexander Thomson descend, leaning on his two footmen, and in a loud, imperious voice inquired "If Mrs. Thomson were here." How she shuddered, the miserable woman who had not had strength enough to free herself from her misery! But this was its last outcry. In another minute her worldy up-bringing, her love of ease and luxury, and a certain pride to preserve appearances, asserted their sway.

"Yes, that is our carriage; isn't it a nice one? And he has brought it to fetch me. Well, he is not so bad, after all. I suppose he wants to get back in time for the New Year; the Thomsons always have a grand family gathering at the New Year. They are a highly respectable family, and in an excedingly good position, I assure you, my dear," added she, with a mixture of haughtiness and deprecation, as if she thought her sister would blame her. But Silence merely said:

"Shall I go and receive your husband, or will you go?"

"You. No; perhaps I had better do it myself. Send him in here. I'll manage my own affairs."

And she did manage them—how was never accurately known. But half an hour after Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Thomson were seen sitting together on the drawing-room sofa, as comfortable as if they had never been separated.

And most likely half the world would say the wife was quite right in thus fulfilling to the letter her marriage vow, condoning everything, shutting her eyes to everything, making believe that wrong was right, and going back in the most respectable manner to her husband's house, there to sustain the character of a blameless British matron. She did it "for the best," as many women would argue, or "for the sake of the child," which is the argument of hundreds more who deliberately continue in wealthy dishonor; for what dishonor can be worse than marriage without respect and without love?"

But, as the proverb says, Bella had "made her bed, and must lie in it." Nobody had a right to interfere or advise. Silence never attempted to do either. She sat with the child in her lap, the poor pitiful little creature whom she had grown fond of, and was almost sorry to lose, till she was sent for into the drawing-room, and then, to make things less difficult, she entered with baby in her arms.

Its father civilly noticed it and her, and there was a slight gleam of pleasure in his dull fishy eyes, as if he were proud, after a fashion, of his good-looking, clever wife, and of his new paternal dignity.

"Nice little thing! And Mrs. Thomson tells me you have been so kind to it and to her, Mrs. Jardine. Accept my thanks, my very best thanks. It was quite a good idea of my wife's, this—coming to you for change of air."

"Yes, Blackhall is an exceedingly healthy place," said Bella, with a laugh—her old careless laugh. If there was a ring of mockery, even contempt in it, the man was too dull to find it out. He eyed her with extreme respect—nay, admiration—and put his arm round her waist with a pompous demonstrativeness, as if to prove to all the world what an exceedingly happy couple they were.

The tragedy had melted into genteel comedy, nay, almost into broad farce, were it not for the slender line that so often is drawn between the ludicrous and the ghastly.

"I suppose we had better leave at once. By changing horses we shall post fast enough to reach home to-night, and go to your father's on New Year's eve," said Bella, hurriedly. "So, my dear Silence, we won't wait till my brother comes home. Mr. Thomson is decent enough now," she added in a whisper; "but, by and by, after dinner—I don't want Rody to see him after dinner. We shall post all the way," she said aloud, "and by midnight we shall be at home."

"Where I hope soon to have the pleasure of seeing Mrs. Jardine," continued Mr. Thomson, with ponderous politeness. "Assure your husband that he will be always welcome at our place, and I'll give him the best glass of wine, or whisky, if he likes it, to be found in all Scotland. And—and——"

"Come away, Silence. I'll get my things ready and the child's in ten minutes. Make haste."

But even when the two sisters were alone together both carefully avoided any confidential word. Bella made no explanation, and never named her husband but once, when Silence proposed to give him some refreshment.

"Oh, he has taken care of himself already; trust him for that. He always takes care of himself. Why, my dear, if there is one creature in the world whom that man never forgets, it is Alexander Thomson."

No answer. None was possible. And Bella kept up her hard, gay, reckless manner, neither shedding a tear nor uttering one grateful or regretful word all the time Silence was dressing the baby. Only at the very last minute, when she saw its aunt press a last tender kiss on the poor little pinched-up face, the woman in her could not help showing itself, even through the "grand air" which had now wholly returned to Mrs. Alexander Thomson.

"God bless you, and give you one of your own," said she, pressing her sister's hand. "You have been very kind to me and mine, and always would have been; I know that. But it's better as it is. I couldn't stand poverty. I always did enjoy life, and I always must. He is in very good circumstances, and he promises me I shall have everything I can wish for. So, good-by, Silence. I suppose nobody is ever very happy, except you."

Bella went down stairs, the other following and accepting mutely her voluminous public thanks for the "great kindness" she had received, and how she hoped to come again soon to Blackhall.

"And, my dear, mind you clear out by then all Cousin Silence's old sticks, and have the house thoroughly done up, modern fashion. There is a man at Richerden who will do it well; Rody knows him. By the by, tell Rody—"she turned a shade paler, and her lip quivered for a moment. "No; tell him nothing; he won't care. He will be only to glad to find his house empty, and have his wife all to himself—some husbands are. Come, Mr. Thomson"—she always called him Mr. Thomson—"if we don't make haste we shall be benighted, and you will have to dine in some horrid road-side inn, which you know you couldn't stand on any account. Good-by, Silence, a thousand thanks and a happy New Year! It's close at hand now. I suppose I shall dance the old year out and the new year in, as usual at the Thomsons' house. Ta-ta! good-by."

She kissed her hand out of the carriage window, and thus, in the most commonplace and cheerful manner, departed with her husband, as if there had never come a cloud between them, and as if he were the best husband in the world. Not a poetical or dramatic denouement certainly, but scarcely unnatural—to her. She was one of those who have, and must have, the good things in this life. She found them once more about her, and possibly they satisfied her; at any rate she could not do without them.

But young Mrs. Jardine, poor all her days, a poor man's wife this day, with little prospect of ever being anything else, as she saw that splendid carriage drive away, felt almost as sad at heart as if she had been watching her sister-in-law's funeral.

The Duke and the Workman.

On a certain occasion the late Lord Derby had some workmen in one of his mansions for the purpose of painting and decorating. The floor of the central hall was in course of being painted, and a tall and powerfully built young man was at work on one of the walls, when Lord Derby entered, and giving orders that a number of slippers were to be placed on the door mat, requested the young man to see that any one coming in should put on a pair of the slippers before crossing the passage, and added:

"If any one refuses to do it, you must take him by the shoulder and turn him out."

A short time after this a hunting party passed by, and the Duke of Wellington, with his boots dreadfully splashed with mud, opened the door and hurried along the hall. Seeing this, the young man immediately jumped off the ladder on which he was painting, and seizing the intruder by the shoulder, pushed him out of the house. The painter did not know the Duke, and had no idea as to the identity of the person he had used so roughly.

Shortly afterward Lord Derby heard of the affair, and summoned all the household and men at work to his study, and demanded to know who had treated the Duke of Wellington in such an impertinent manner.

Imagining that he would be immediately dismissed, the painter came forward, and in a trembling voice said:

"It was I, my Lord."

"And pray how came you to do such a thing?" demanded Lord Derby.

"By your orders, my Lord," replied the young painter.

Hearing this, the Duke at once turned round to Lord Derby, and, smiling, drew a sovereign out of his purse, and handing it to the astonished painter said:

"You were quite right to obey orders."

How to Make a Ball.

Boys who are always losing their balls can make them for themselves Take a common cork and cut it round as possible, making it the size of an ordinary marble. Then tear off very narrow strips of rags and wind these, one at a time, around the cork until the ball is of the desired size. Then cover it with cloth, or if a boy is fortunate enough to have an obliging sister she will make a cover of crewels by dividing the ball into quarters, winding the wool several times around it, then buttonholing the quarters all around one half, then the other half, until an edge is formed on each side of each quarter, then buttonholing with any colors of wool until the quarters are quite filled up, when a seam finishes them, and a capital ball is the result, costing nothing to make, but really quite serviceable.

Books Instead of Candy.

"I think ambition is never given without a mind of sufficient power to sustain it, and to achieve its lofty object." Who wrote these words? A boy of 18, named Bayard Taylor, as he looked proudly upon an autograph Charles Dickens had given him, and felt within him that fire of ambition which was never quenched. The Quaker boy of the little town of Kennett square, near Philadelphia—who was born January 11,1825—grew to be very fond of books, and often when sent to rock the baby would forget all about the crying infant, so deeply would he be absorbed in a story of travel or delightful poem.

His father was a poor farmer who had no money to spend on books, so Bayard set out gathering nuts, which he sold, and, instead of rushing off to a candy store, like some girls and boys, he invested his money more wisely in buying books. At 14 he was studying Latin and French. 15 found him deep in Spanish. At 17 he was no longer the pupil, but the assistant in the school. The story of his life, with its deep shadows and bright lights, is beautiful and full of inspiration.

Every boy and girl of America, England and Germany should know it by heart. And see how the penniless lad at last reaches some of the heights of his ambition, and at President Hayes' request became Minister to Berlin, and was welcomed cordially by Emperor William, and had for a fast friend Bismarck. Some of his works should be in every library.—New York Press.

He Boiled the Ice.

The delight of the little South American boy who was in New York during holiday week and saw snow for the first time amused his entertainers and led to the telling of some funny stories by those who had traveled in many countries. One was of an army officer in India, who, at great trouble and expense, procured some ice to be served at dinner. He probably gave the order in that fashion, for his cook rushed into the dining room in great consternation and told him he had boiled the ice, and it had all gone into water.

She Spoke Her Piece.

Hattie F., six years old, is thought to give promise of elocutionary talent. When Auntie May came to visit the family, therefore, and offered to give the little girl some lessons, the offer was gladly accepted.

Hattie's preference for lofty sentiment prompted the first selection. It began, "See the eagle! How he soars!" After a few rehearsals, she was ready for a recitation before the assembled family. And there was great applause when she exclaimed:

"See the eagle! How sore he is!"

NEW STYLE DRESSING CASE.

Has the Novel and Convenient Feature of a Triplicate Mirror.

One of the newest shapes in dressing cases is represented in the illustration, from the Housewife. The novel feature of this dresser is that on either side of the mirror is attached a much smaller mirror, which works on hinges, so that you can see your side face in them—in fact, a triplicate mirror, which can be closed when not in use, and is very serviceable as a gentleman's shaving glass. Another feature is the two closets, one on each end of the dresser top, where ladies' and gentlemen's hats can be kept. The fancy toilet set which is used on this dresser is made of fine butcher's linen worked in violets, which is the fashionable craze at present. The toilet articles are of Dresden china.

Not Much Chance.

The visitor came into the office of a country paper in a distillery district of Kentucky with a notice in his hand.

"I want to put an advertisement in the paper," he said.

"Not any more, I reckon, than I want you to put it in," responded the editor with editorial earnestness not unusual on such occasions. "What is it?"

"Some fellow in Missouri sends it to me. He wants to exchange a farm he owns out there for whisky."

"Well, of course," sighed the editor, "we'll print it, but it won't do any good. We have many people right here around us who are trying to exchange their farms for whisky, and on the installment plan, too."

GREAT BRITAIN'S NEWEST BATTLE-SHIP, THE MAJESTIC.

In their capacity for turning out the iron and steel monsters which have supplanted our old ships, the royal dockyards seem to be continually improving of late. The record has been altogether eclipsed by the speed which has been manifested in the building of the battleship Majestic. It was laid down on Feb. 5, 1894, and floated out this week, says the St. James' Budget. The drawing will give an idea of her appearance when she is put in commission. Her principal guns are four in number, each weighing fifty tons and built on the new method of coiling flat steel wire on a steel barrel. The ammunition is put up in brass cases, and the gun is so fitted that it can be fired by an expert crew from five to seven times a minute. As each projectile weighs 100 pounds and is capable of penetrating several inches of armor, some idea of their powers may be formed. Above these, on the upper deck, are sixteen twelve-pounder quick-firing guns, twelve of which are on the broadsides, and covered by a steel shelter deck, and the remaining four in the upper stories of the superstructures below the bridges. There are, in addition, a large number of small three-pounder rapid-firing guns, many of which are carried aloft in the four "fighting" tops. The Majestic will also have five tubes for the Whitehead "fish" torpedo. A strong steel belt, nine inches thick, protects the sides and incloses the barbettes, which are built of fourteen-inch armor. In length the Majestic is 415 feet, and has a breadth of 75 feet at her widest at the water line, while her total displacement will fall but little short of 15,000 tons. Her engines of 12,000 horse power are estimated to drive her at sixteen and a half knots with natural and seventeen and a half with forced draught.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, March 11, 1895.

It is fortunate for the country that the present administration is free from jingoism. If it were not there would be a certainty of an immediate tariff war between the United States and the countries which have followed the lead of Germany in excluding American cattle and meat, professedly on hygienic grounds, and grave danger of war of a more murderous nature. Although Secretaries Gresham and Carlisle have been confined to their homes by sickness for the greater part of the last week they have not escaped the pressure brought to bear on them by the jingoists, to retaliate upon those nations, Germany, France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Denmark, by imposing the ten per cent additional duty authorized by law upon upon all imports brought to the United States in vessels sailing under the flag of a nation that discriminates against American products. This may eventually done, but there are several reasons why the administration has no desire to do it unless compelled by circumstances First, it is believed that a European combination has been formed for the express purpose of trying to force a tariff war in order to cripple the rapidly growing foreign trade of the United States; second, the Treasury is in no condition to lose the revenue which must necessarily be lost by a tariff war with the countries named; third, the struggling business interests of this country could ill afford at this time the entire loss of the trade of these countries, which would almost certainly follow retaliation on the part of this country, and lastly, these countries all declare that they are not discriminating, but are only actuated by a desire to preserve the health of their citizens Secretary Gresham believes in exhausting diplomatic remedies before resorting to retaliation; but if retaliation is resorted to it will be carried out thoroughly and in the end we shall not be loser

The republican editors who have jumped on Secretary Gresham because of his reported efforts to get the government of Great Britian to settle its boundary dispute with Venezuela by arbitration have simply shown their ignorance. Every administration since that of President Arthur has endeavored to bring about this arbitration and in keeping up the effort Secretary Gresham is not introducing anything new, but merely endorsing a policy which has been supported by four of his predecessors—Frelinghuysen, Bayard, Blaine and Foster,—and which is creditable to him in every respect.

There is common sense in the concluding words of a statement made by Assistant Secretary Curtis, of the Treasury, denying the sensational statements sent out from Washington about the Treasury being embarassed by reason of delay in the delivery of the gold purchased by the late issue of bonds. These words, which follow, are especially commended to those democrats who are fond of getting their news from republican or or assistant republican papers: "The prosperity of the country will be greatly hastened when some effective method is formed of checking these alarming articles written by newspaper correspondents and newsgathers who are willing to sacrifice the truth and their own consciences—if they have any—to create a cheap sensation, and play upon the feeling of an already overwrought public"

Chairman Sayers, of the House Appropriations committee, closes his analyses of the appropriations made by the Fifty-Third Congress with the following: "To have checked the biennial billion dollar page set by the Fifty First Congress is an achievement in itself. To have done not only that, but to have reduced the appropriations of the Congress below the billion mark is a triumph vast in its proportions and significant of a return to economical and honest government"

The first fight in the ranks of republicans of the Fifty-Fourth Congress is already on, the principals being Reed and Cannon. The row began over the Crisp complimentary resolution adopted by the last House. Mr. Cannon asked Mr Reed to offer that resolution and when he declined said he would do it himself and he did He also made a few cutting remarks to Reed about his churlishness. The row has grown since then, and although Reed's election to the Speakership seems assured, Cannon is said to be engaged in raising obstructions thereto and to be not without hope that a combination can be forced to beat him.

Ex Speaker Crisp, who is a silver man and one of the commissioners who will go to the monetary conference, if there be one held, says: "I have been greatly encouraged by recent indications of a change of sentiment in Europe towards silver, and I have strong hopes that if another conference shall be held, practical results may be obtained. I would rejoice to see the silver question eliminated from the presidential campaign."

WORTH the great Paris dressmaker is dead.

THOMAS JONES, the man who helped Wilkes Booth to escape, died last week in Charles county, Md.

NICHOLSON BILL, after being several times amended passed both Houses Saturday evening, Gov. Mathews signed it on Monday.

WHERE, OH WHERE was the member from DeKalb when the legislaures fit?" Was he on the rush line or the rear line? An early answer is requested.

A YOUNG lady student of Earlham College won the highest honor in the state oratorical contest at Indianapolis Saturday.

AMONG the new bills passed, is one to permit the governor to appoint a sheriff to act, in case one refuses, as did the sheriff of Lake county at the time of the troubles at Roby.

HUMBOLDT, Kansas, has not had a legal town government for twenty years. Officers serve without being sworn in or giving bonds. All this to prevent paying some railroad bond voted many years ago.

GOLD does not go out yet, although, foreign exchange has risen to that price and even higher which has heretofore sent gold abroad. It would seem by this, that the bankers who bought the new bonds are keeping their contract.

MYRON D KING, who was hurt in the disgraceful row in the State house Monday night, is in bad shape. A rib near the heart was broken, The veto he had in his hand, and the new fee and salary law which the governor had signed were torn from his hands and have disappeared.

ADMIRAL GEORGE BROWN, a native of Wayne county, Indiana, is now at the head of the U. S. navy. He has worked his way steadily to the top, his last important command being on the west coast of South America during the Chilian troubles about two years ago.

THE NEW congressional apportionment bill leave this district as before, to include the counties of Allen, DeKalb, Steuben, Whitley, Noble and Lagrange It makes but few changes, as the old apportionment could not be greatly objected to.

GOV. MATTHEW succeeded in killing one bill with a veto. It was the bill taking from the governor the power of appointing police commissioners in cities of 6,000 and upwards. When his veto came into the senate there was about an equal number of democrats and republicans present, and with the help of a democratic lieutenant governor, it could not pass over the veto. He also vetoed the bill to create a needless superior court for Laporte, Lake and Porter counties, and also vetoed the bill to change the time of electing county superintendents from June to September, but both were passed over his veto.

STATE SEAL.

One of the last things done by the legislature was to legalize the state seal. It seems this has never been done, or if it was done, there is no record of it But there are papers such as commissions to state officers on which is the seal almost as used now. The seal as now adopted shows the man cutting down a tree, shows the setting sun, and the fleeing buffalo, the word "loyalty" being added at the suggestion of the recently convened meeting of "Sons of the Revolution" And around the seal are the words "Seal of the State of Indiana." The first use of the seal seems to have been by the officers of the territory, Wm. Henry Harrison and Vanderburg in 1801, some of these documents being now in the poessession of Hon. W. H. English. It also appears these were two seals, slightly different, used at this time of different design One of these papers is a copy of the petition sent to congress asking to have slavery established in the territory. This was signed by the then territorial governor, Wm. Henry Harrison after wards president. It seems queer to us now that congress alone prevented the establishment of slavery in Indiana. They stuck by the "Ordiance of 1779" which forbade its introduction into the new territory.

Commissioners' Proceedings

The Board entered up an order on the records, forbidding the use of the court room to any public gathering unless one or more responsible persons appointed by the auditor shall make and file with the auditor a written agreement to pay the commissioners for all damages that may be done by such assembly, together with the reasonable cost of lighting and heating the court room for such meeting, and to pay for cleaning up the room after the meeting adjourns and putting it in as good condition as before.

The petition to have town lot in Butler owned by Mrs. C. S. Stoy and Miss Corintha Hubbell vacated, was agreed to.

John H. Hunter, an expert in accounts and collections was given a contract to collect any amounts he may find due to the county, he to receive one-half the amount collected, and the county to pay no other expense in the matter.

Liquor license have been granted to the following: Herman Riccius, Garrett; Al. Zerwis, Auburn; Joseph Glennewick, Garrett; George Behler, Garrett; Allen Parks, Waterloo; William F. Shaver, Waterloo; Gary Bayhouk, Spencerville; John Berg, Auburn; Stiefel & Strauss, Butler.

MORE CASH COMES IN.

Receipts are Larger Than Under the McKinley Measure—Increases the Business of the Country—to Stop Gold Exports

Chicago Herald:

Figures concerning the operation of the new tariff law during the first six months of its operation are now available They justify those friends of the new law who have stood firm in its defense amid all the storms of criticism aimed against it. It is well understood by everyone that a great diminution of receipts from internal revenue sources was inevitable after the enactment of the new law. This could not have been averted, for manufacturers always anticipated any addition to the tax on spirits and other internal revenue articles, and loss of receipts is sure to follow. This loss is temporary however, and in this case the receipts will soon be up to and in excess of the old mark. In the most important customs feature of the operation of the new law, the figures give great satisfaction to the friends of the measure. The new law went into effect August 28, 1894, and by comparing the receipts of September, October, November and December, 1894, and January and February of this year with the corresponding six months of the preceding years it is easy to determine whether the new law has given an increase or decrease of customs receipts. The following figures shows the customs receipts for the six months in question, month by month, under the new law, and during the corresponding months of the preceding year under the McKinley law:

WILSON LAW.		M'KINLEY LAW
Sept. 1894....	$15,564,990	Sept 1893.....	$12,659,773
Oct. 1894.....	11,965,118	Oct. 1893	10,999,531
Nov. 1894.....	10,260,69[illegible]	Nov. 1893.....	10,218 488
Dec. 1894	11,203,049	Dec. 1893.....	9,153,215
Jan. 1895.....	7,361,616	Jan. 1894.....	11,154,803
Feb. 1895.....	13,334,691	Feb. 1894.....	10,390,328
Total.....	$79,686,456	Total.....	$64,786 541

It will be seen that the customs receipts during the half year, under the new law, were greater in every month than the old, and in the aggregate were nearly 25 per cent greater than those of the corresponding months of the previous year under the McKinley law. The figures showing the exact quantity of dutiable and free importations for the half year have not been completed, but those obtainable at this time indicate that the dutiable importations for the first half year under the law will be from $35,0000,000 to $40,000,000 greater in value than those under the corresponding months of the last year under the McKinley law, while there is also an increase in importations of nondutiable articles. Thus it is apparent that the new law is increasing free importation, increasing customs receipts, and will increase the internal revenue receipts when operations under it assume a normal condition.

Mrs B F Kennedy is in Cleveland this week to attend the commencement of the dental school where her son George graduates.

BUTLER.

Hiram J. Smith, a proceprous farmer living near Metz, swooped down upon Butler last week and carried off one of our most charming widows, Mrs. Stanley, who lived on east Green street. May their shadows never grow less as they watch the downflow of the head waters of Fish creek and the vine clad hills that spread out upon its sunny banks.

Sugar making upon the part of those engaged in it has been very unpromising so far. The cold weather has effectually shut off the flow of sap.

Our item last week concerning the death of Mr. Dunn's son was misleading We supposed our information to be correct, but have since learned that instead of being killed in a saw mill in Michigan, he was supposed to have been murdered on the Illinois drainage canal in that state, and his remains were brought to Butler for burial last week. His father and mother have the sincere sympathy of our people.

Mrs. Silas Ocker, daughter, sister and brother, Henry Harn, were called to Grand Rapids Monday on account of the sudden death of Miss Shook, daughter of John Shook, who used to live here, and who was a niece of Mrs. Ocker. Miss Shook was married last New Years.

The sick are improving as far as we have been able to learn.

Mrs. Weber has gone back to her home in Paulding county.

The meeting adjourned to meet at Auburn Junction, June 7, 1895.

This morning a lady went to the window of the B. & O. ticket office and after depositing a bird cage, a roll of carpet and three lengths of stove pipe around in different places and slipping a kid carrying a 25 lb. sack of flour, she informed the agent she wanted a ticket. "Where to, ma'm?" inquired the gentlemanly B & O. agent. "Home, of course, where do you suppose I'm going?" Just then the train for Garrett pulled out She grabbed up her household effects and was last seen puffing up the track like the Great Eastern.

DR. HARTMAN

Said in a Recent Lecture on Chronic Catarrh and Consumption.

Catarrh of the lungs is generally known as consumption; also called tuberculosis. In these cases the catarrh has usally found its way into the lungs by the gradual extension of the disease from the throat through the bronchial tubes. Consumption is the natural termination of all cases of neglected chronic catarrh. Every one who is afflicted with chronic catarrh is liable to be attacked with consumption at any time. In the first stages of the disease Peruna is a sure cure; in the later stages of the disease Pe-ru-na can be relied upon to produce great benefit, and in a large per cent. of cases produce a permanent cure. All those afflicted with this dread disease should begin at once the following treatment:

After all other means have been tried in vain; after doctors have pronounced the case hopeless and friends have given up in despair; after the patient has lost all faith and the incessant care of attendants seems futile, still there is hope in Peruna. Two Lives Saved.

Mrs Phœbe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her, and she says it saved her life. Mr Thomas Eggers, 139 Florida St., San. Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption. He tried without result, everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medecine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50c. and $1. 5

Saturday's Daily:

The COURIER extends its compliments to Mr. and Mrs. Mort Hilkey, over the advent of a baby boy to their home this morning.

Commissioners are at work on reports and claims. Yesterday was partly taken up by considering the annual report of Mr. Bartels, superintendent of the County Home.

Mr. Bateman, the commissioner-elect of the north district, was in yesterday looking over the commissioners' work to see how the thing works.

Mrs. Zorah Shafer entertained a number of friends very pleasantly Thursday evening. The evening passed away rapidly in social enjoyment, which included a nice lunch.

R. G Daniels, guar., of Mary A. DeLong was granted an order to sell real estate. Sale reported to H. C. and Sarah Triplett and Jennie M. Day.

The Angola Republican says: Clerk Kimsey is preparing for the supreme court a transcript in the case of the Auburn Foundry and Machine works against DeKalb county, tried here over a year ago. The transcript contains 1,135 type-written pages, or about 454,000 words. It makes a book of thin paper as large as the largest sized dictionary, and contains "words and phrases" not found in any of them.

Our teachers who visited the schools in Fort Wayne yesterday met with bad luck. When they arrived in the city the natural gas supply was exhausted and consequently the schools as well as other places of business were closed for want of fuel. It appears that the natural gas main gave way at Kingsland, a town about eighteen miles from Fort Wayne. A sub-valve head was blown out, at about three o'clock in the morning, and was not in repair until 1:30 yesterday afternoon This cheered the people and all were made warm. But it only lasted about thirty minutes when the main broke at the same place, and and city was again without fuel until 3 o'clock this morning when it was thought the repairs could be completed.

Monday's Daily.

Smoke the K & B. ten-cent cigar.

Our business men and citizens were greatly annoyed to-day by a number of tramps in town begging for money and something to eat. One young man, who is stout and robust as any of our people has his arm wrapped up and carries it in a sling and goes from store to store saying he had his arm scalded by an explosion and asks for money. He called on Mr. J. H. Roland and wanted something to eat, and Mrs. Roland fixed him up a nice lunch, gave it to him, and he went about twenty yards from the house and threw it under an old shed. F A. Hoff was also visited by three different ones and all asked for coffee. Engineer Benedict says he had a gang of toughs in the calaboose over night and it is likely these are the same fellows.

Did you see the eclipse last evening? If not, you missed an unusually fine spectacle. The various changes in the gloomy colors of the moon, as it changed its position in the earth's shadow, made a grand sight. When the eclipse was total the moon could still be seen dimly, as a dark red disc showing through the shadow.

Our people will be pleased to learn that Col. Geo. W. Bain, who took so well at the County Teachers's Institute her last summer, will again appear in Auburn Monday evening April 8. His lecture this time will be the "Golden Gate, or Age and Land in Which We Live." He comes under the management of the M. E. Sabbath School.

We are under obligations to our young friend Z. H. Stamets for an invitation to attend the graduating exercises of the Ft. Wayne College of Medicine which is held at the Masonic Temple in that city to morrow, Tuesday evening March 12. There are eight members of the graduating class, Mr. Stamets being vice-president of the organization. The "class '95" is said to be one of more than average promises and we hope to see our young friend take rank with the best.

Pythians and Masons talk of building and owning the second story of the proposed opera house. We understand the matter of getting a suitable site will come up before the town board this evening.

Who was it anyhow? We mean the man who had his fare paid on the B. & O. east Saturday. Did he fear the grand jury, or did the one who furnished the money fear the G. J? Answer by long distance telephone at the grand jury's expense, and no questions asked.

Master Hubert Hartman enjoyed, after a fashion, a sunburned back on Sunday. On Saturday after the way of all cleanly boys he took a bath, and after its completion, he felt chilly. Under such circumstances the most natural thing to do was to let out the remainder of the job to the stove. He found the genial warmth so welcome that he tarried too long at the stove, with the result of a blistered spinal column which compelled him for a time to sleep on his face.

James T. Bryer, one of the doorkeepers of the Legislature, went insane while attending to his duties Saturday. He appeared on the floor of the House early, talking in an incoherent manner about the "four traitors" who had been instrumental by their votes as members of the the House in retaining an employe who had been brought up for a misdemeanor. Bryer was looking after the doors in the galleries Thursday night when the exciting scene in the House over the custodian bill took place. He has been removed to his home at Logansport, where he was formerly editor of the Logansport Journal.

Mrs. Geo Morrell, of Waterloo, came down this afternoon to attend the Rathbone Sisters entertainment. She is the guest of Mrs I. H. Nill.

Mrs. T. J. Cuppy returned last evening from an extended visit in the south. Mrs. Cuppy informed the reporter that one year ago, when she was there she had no use for a wrap but this time she wore a plush coat all the time. The flowers are not as conspicuous as before, and altogether the south has had a wonderful backset. However she enjoyed the trip very much. Mr. Cuppy came home with her but will remain only a few days when he will return to his work. He is employed by the Wabash Railroad company, as buyer of timber, etc. Mr. and Mrs. Cuppy and son Willie went to South Whitley this morning to visit Mr. Cuppy's mother. They will return this evening.

The Garrett Herald is full to the gunwales with a bright, newsy write up of every business house in the town. That is the way to do it, and if the people over there don't give the Herald a solid support, they are very unwise and very ungrateful. There are 95 different articles of this kind, with as many separate headings. People outside town will be surprised to learn there are so many business houses there. Till Bro. Miner started a local paper there, the interior of that lively city was an unknown land—a sort of "Indiana dark continent" Nothing gives people as friendly an opinion of a town as does a live local paper, a paper that does not ignore, but notices those with whom its lot is cast, and who contribute to its support. Stand by the Herald if you would have your town prosper.

One of the pleasant events of the season happened at the home of Hiram H. Cupp on Monday evening, March 11, in the shape of a surprise party on Mr. Cupp. It being his fifty fourth birthday his children and friends met at his home at seven o'clock p m. All had a most enjoyable good time till about nine o'clock the table was spread overflowing with good things which had been prepared by his wife and children. Then oysters were served and all enjoyed a bounteous repast. After supper all retired to the parlor and had music and a general good time. Some valuable presents were given, and after singing "God be with you till we meet Again," and wishing him many such birthdays, all repaired to their homes.

Churubusco Truth; A certain little chap who lives on Whitley street, got a family into trouble last week. His mamma sent him to the family druggist, with whom he is a favorite, and while the prescription was being mixed the little boy inquisitively walked behind the prescription desk. In one of the drawers he spied a number of labels, some of were marked "poison," with the skull and cross bones. He asked the druggist for some of these, and finally succeeded in getting a dozen or two. The little boy went home and proceeded to stick them on every bottle in the house. That night one of the family got sick, and they, in the excitement ran around to find some medicine, but to there consternation every bottle in the house, from the whisky bottle down, was labeled poison.

COURT.

Monday's Daily

It began rain this morning. The jury is at work. Frank Miser is on to day in place of Curie, E Imhoff is in place of Phil Noel, who is sick; Alex. Culbertson is in place of W S. Maxwell, marshal of Butler; James Johnson is in place of T. C Sargent. The others being Douglas Kelley, Summer Rose, John Lumm, L. A. Henning, P. T. Rhodes, A M. StClair, Mac. Leighty, David Keller. To-day they are trying Milo Garman, of Steuben, on charge of burning Schultz' barn. Croxton and Powers are attorneys for the defense, and for the state are Prosecuter Butler and Mr. Hutson.

Tuesday's Daily.

The trial of Milo Garman for burning the barn in Steuben county, resulted in his acquittal, the jury finding no proof of guilt. The next case was one to collect notes given by Levi Long and Henry Leeson to the Birdsell Mfg. Co Hartman represented the Birdsell Co. and Baxter & Brown the defense. This case is now going on.

Among other court work of the past few days we find D. A. Garwood as commissioner in the case of Louisa Davis vs David McCord, reports he had sold the property to M. W. Johnston and O. S. Stewart. H. K. Leas vs Sanford Smith, injunction, is dismissed. The Tri-State Building Ass'n got judgment against F. B. Wood, and failed against Furnish, Ashley Bank got a judgment against Yackee, the action against McCann being dismissed. Alsey Moste has half a dozen cases against him for violations of the liquor law, which he has given bond to come into court when called. The case against Charles Thomson comes up to-morrow. The case of J W. Baxter vs Postal Telegraph Co, injunction, has been dismissed. Hale vs Osborn & Noel is left out till the commissioners can sell the property. Boland files final report as receiver of the Auburn District Fair. Matilda Russell was divorced from Alfred Russell. Sarah Maxwell was divorced from David Maxwell. Jesse Myers vs Frank Myers partition, G. T. Abbey, commissioner, reports sale of the land for $3,520. Sale confirmed. Charles Jones vs Chester Hodge, got judgment for $128 on note. Pietro Cangeo, receiver of the Ohio Thresher & Engine Co vs Krontz got a judgment. Worth Corbin has been made a guardian for Mina Corbin. The divorce case of Mary D. vs Wm. C. Snerwood is dismissed, as is also Mary Shoudel's damage case against the Lake Shore, which came up before Judge Adair. S. S. Norris' damage case vs B. & O. road for putting him off a train comes up March 27. In case Hursh vs Hursh for maintenance, defendant defaulted. Mull vs May on note, got judgment for $459. Thomas Hamman vs J. G. Rohm for possession and to quiet title, decided that plaintiff was entitled to possession. The appeal of the Wabash road in the Kelley damage suit takes a bond of $8,000 and they are given 90 days to do it. T. G. Abbey gets a judgment of $489 against Eberly. Gen. Blair has a case up this afternoon, that of state on relation of Bertha Carroll vs Baird

Wednesday's Daily:

The jury disagreed after an all night session in the matter of the machine notes for which Long and Leeson were sued yesterday. The J. G. Johnson cases from Waterloo were on trial yesterday and to-day in a separate room with Charles Emanuel for judge. The main fight seems to be on the validity of some chattel mortgages he had given. The Charles Thompson case came up to-day and is set for next week. He expects to prove an "alibi," that is that he was somewhere else at the time his house was ransacked and the money and watch of his hired hand stolen. He afterwards secured a change of venue, giving reasons which we will give to-morrow in full This afternoon the Wm. H. Cochran case came up. He had sued Marshal Alvin H. Baker, on his bond. That is he claimed the marshal had abused and maltreated him when he was arrested some time ago. He resisted the marshal, though he claims he was sober. The trial is still going on, with Rose & Rose for Cochran and Roby & Shuman for Baker. The case against Billy Baird went against him at the regular price, $400. Grand jury "still a pumpin'."

A rather strange case is to come up this term of court. Samuel Norris, the man who has been putting up so much picket fence over the county for a year past, has sued the B. & O. for damages. He bought a ticket Dec. 9, and got on the west bound train No. 47, to go to his home at Albion. After passing Garrett the trainmen informed him that the train did not stop at Albion. They stopped the train and put him off in the country. Hence this case for damages.

RARE OLD COINS.

D. Y. Husselman is a "collector" in more ways than one. First, he is a commercial collector, that is, he collects debts due people In the second place, he is something of a collector of old and queer coins. One of his latest additions is a "Washington" penny. It is of date 1783, the close of the revolutionary war. It has a good side view of Gen. Washington's head, surrounded by the words "Washington" and "Independence." On the other side is a full length goddess of liberty and the words "United States." He has just secured one of the "Isaac Newton" farthings, a quarter of an English penny. It has Sir Isaac's picture and name on one side, and on the other is an olive branch and horn of plenty. He has an old fashioned penny of 1797 and another 1848 which he keeps as a birthyear memento. Then there is a half penny of North Wales dated 1756, with the harp surmounted by a crown, while on the other side is a profile of George the Third, enclosed by the words "George Rules." He has also a half penny token of Nova Scotia dated 1840, with the head of the then young queen, Victoria on one side, and on the other is a thistle, a full grown Canada thistle. We on this side of the line are not inclined to put the picture of this unpopular plant on our coins.

It has long been claimed by medical journals and practitioners as well as by scientific men generally that long continued cold weather destroys microbes, freezes out miasma, and kills off the germs. We had phenomenally long continued cold weather last winter, surpassing the memory of the oldest inhabitant, and yet in the memory of that same tiresome old person there has never been a time when the germs and microbes have been more plentiful or more phenomenally if not infernally agile, active, and industrious, or when miasma, malaria, and all the other murderous m's got in their work more successfully. Evidently extremely cold weather is worse than extremely hot weather in setting the microbes to work. The way of safety evidently lies in the middle, but that is not the way either of microbes or of weather. If it were, what would become of the doctors?

A deputation of French farmers is reported to have visited their Minister of Agriculture and "pointed out to him the grave danger of infection to French cattle arising from the importation of American cattle suffering from contagious diseases." Of course, this is a mere pretense and one of the most flimsy description. One cannot credit the farmers with being so densely ignorant of the facts as not to be well aware that there is no infection among American cattle, and that we have an efficient inspection to prevent any infected cattle from being exported in case of disease breaking out among them. These farmers may fancy they have a "grievance," but why not state clearly and plainly what it is? What they fear is not infection, but lower prices for the cattle raised by them in competition with animals sent from the United States. Probably they think if they should state the matter plainly the Government would tell them they have no case. But the Minister appeared to must know the fact as well as it is understood by the complainers, and should be candid enough to tell them that he understands the situation.

In the death of Frederick Douglass a singularly picturesque figure passes from view. Long before the famous orator of the negro race had passed his prime his people had come to regard him very justly as their leader in every movement looking to intellectual advancement and freedom. Born in 1817, Douglass felt and understood the evils of slavery long before that problem became an angry issue of dissension. He was a mere boy when he took his first step against the wrong, ran away from captivity and became free, but the lessons of his boyhood seem to have remained with him. During the '60s, when the great struggle was in actual progress, he was no more active in working for the freedom of the negro than he was in later years in his labors to secure for his race the opportunities for intellectual advancement. Long after the echoes of war had died away Douglass was using his influence, his industry and his eloquence in the effort to place his people in the way of the finest achievement and the broadest enlightenment. It was an unselfish life and unselfishly spent. The people of his race can never cease to look upon him as one of their truest friends and strongest advocates.

Bill Cook, the outlaw, has been sentenced to forty-five years' imprisonment in the Albany penitentiary. He ought to have a fine chance there to reform, providing he is not obliged to associate with the members of the New York Legislature.

The Westminster Gazette explains that a journalist is "somebody who keeps a journal," while a newspaper man is "one who writes for a newspaper." In this country the chief difference lies in the fact that the journalist wears his hair long and does little work.

The young New-Yorker who got drunk the other evening, went to an entertainment, threw an ottoman at a big tenor with a high falsetto voice and knocked him over, did a very reprehensible thing, and it can only be said in extenuation of his offense that there are altogether too many tenors of that kind.

Apparently the serum cure for diphtheria is to be as effective in depriving that disease of its terrors as the vaccination discovery was in making small pox a comparatively harmless disease in civilized countries. It is one more great step in the advance that medical science has made in its never-ending battle against the great enemy. Formerly one in six of all human creatures born died of small pox. Now scarcely anybody dies of it in a civilized country. Diphtheria will become almost as harmless. Another terrible enemy of the people was rheumatism. This is not so perfectly overcome, but the difference is enormous between the treatment of to-day and that of fifty years ago. Fever and ague, another famous enemy, has lost its terrors. As the doctors conquer one and another of these ancient evils, the time may come when people will be ashamed to bandy the little jokes that circulate to their prejudice.

AMERICAN FOOD AND COOKING

Some Remarkable Statements in a French Review Untrustworthy.

The ignorance of French writers who treat of matters relating to the United States is generally very much in evidence. One of them in a recent issue of the Revue Scientifique, writing upon the subject of our edible turtles and incidentally of cookery in this country, makes the statement that green turtles are taken in the neighborhood of New York—from there to Florida. He also asserts that it is only in aliments of aquatic origin that our food products are superior to those of Europe, that our fishes are abundant and generally good, but that our culinary treatment of them is inferior. As regards our meats, poultry and game, the Frenchman dismisses them as little worthy of attention. Of the first two it may be conceded, says the New York Sun, that the average quality is not so high as in France. His estimate of our game is probably based upon the condition in which it reaches European markets, where it is sold in large quantities in the close season here. This estimate is not a fair one, inasmuch as almost all of our game which goes abroad has, previous to shipment, been held for months in cold storage warehouses, to its deterioration both in quality and flavor. As regards our native cookery, the French writer asserts that there is not much in it to tempt a European particularly, and especially a Frenchman. While this may be true concerning the country at large, an exception must be made in favor of the native cookery of Maryland and Eastern Virginia and that of the creole population of Louisiana, which, within its compass, is second to none. The fact must not be lost sight of that in the last decade culinary skill with us has made great advances, the result of which would not be apparent to a superficial foreign observer. A case in point illustrative of our progress in this direction is offered in the alimentary department of our exchanges for woman's work. Within the restrictions which it imposes, the edibles there on sale, the work of native feminine bread-winners, are promptly bought by discriminating purchasers, so far are they superior to foreign preparations of a similar character.

A Millionaire's Work.

The most wonderful baths in the world are those built by Adolph Sutro, in San Francisco. The great cliffs have been tunneled, that the water of the Pacific may flow through a succession of canals into the reservoir where it is warmed; and thence into the enormous tanks. The baths are more than twice as large as the largest of the famous old Roman baths, and Mr. Sutro has tried to make them as beautiful. Twenty thousand people can sit, stand or promenade about the tanks, which are arranged for every possible set of bathers.

There are cold baths and hot baths, swimming and diving baths, baths for children and beginners. The largest tank is two hundred and seventy-five feet long, and one hundred and fifty feet wide. There is even a fresh-water tank, supplied from the waterworks above.

The place is full of beauty and color, with tropical plants and rows of growing palms, while through the glass side-walls the ocean view stretches. The building is of steel and glass, and its glazed roof spans more than two acres. Tier after tier of rooms for the bathers rise, until they are numbered by many hundreds.

A great stage, fifty feet broad, is placed at the ocean end of the tank-room for an orchestra. The building is furnished with electric lights and elevators throughout. Three restaurants provide refreshment, and an aquarium and conservatory add to the beauty and interest. The Cliff Rocks outside are covered with seals, sunning themselves, and the finest baths in the world have perhaps the most beautiful setting.

ANNA IS A COUNTESS.

WEDDING OF MISS GOULD AND HER FRENCH PURCHASE.

Ceremony Is Performed by Archbishop Corrigan—Only About One Hundred Guests Present—Magnificent Floral Decorations and Superb Music.

Scene of Regal Splendor.

The marriage of Miss Anna Gould, daughter of the late Jay Gould, to Count Paul Ernest Boniface de Castellane was solemnized at noon Monday, and the fortunes of one of America's richest heiresses were linked with those of a penniless French nobleman of ancient name and proud connections.

The wedding, which took place at the home of George Jay Gould, New York city, will be marked with a white stone in the chronicles of magnificent social events. The palatial dwelling of the head of the Gould family, with its spacious rooms furnished in oriental splendor, was a fitting place for the ceremony, which could not be held in the cathedral owing to the fact that the bride is a Protestant.

The canons of the Church of Rome prescribed baptism in that faith before solemnization of the right of matrimony before the altar of the church. Miss Gould is a Presbyterian, and, while she consented to the Catholic ritual, she declined to join that church. A special dispensation was therefore obtained and the nuptial mass was omitted from the ceremony. The invitations were accordingly limited to the relatives and about seventy-five intimate friends, making less than one hundred in all, as the house would not accommodate more. Archbishop Corrigan officiated.

Numbers of curious people gathered about the Gould residence, and through the park walk opposite as the hour of noon approached. They caught brief glimpses of guests as they alighted from carriages and entered the house, but the proceedings inside were behind drawn curtains, and were therefore invisible to them.

The bridal procession formed in the library, a room of ample dimensions on the second floor, immediately over the East Indian room, where the presents to the bride and groom were afterwards exhibited. The guests received the first intimation of the formation of the bridal party by music issuing from an orchestra concealed in the hall behind a bank of palms and ferns. The first number given was the "Largo" by Handel, by orchestra and organ, and "Elsa's Dream" from "Lohengrin," which was sung by Rosa Sucher, the operatic soprano, to the accompaniment of the string orchestra. This was followed by the bridal march from "Lohengrin," and the assembled guests witnessed the bridal procession descending the flower-adorned stairs in the following order:

First came the ushers, Prince del Drago, Raoul Duval, Brockholst Cutting and Howard Gould. They were followed by the bridesmaids, Miss Beatrice Richardson, Miss Adelaide Montgomery, Miss Catherine Cameron and Miss Helen Gould. The bride then followed, leaning on the arm of her brother, George J. Gould, her train being carried by her nephews, Masters Kingdon and Jay Gould.

COUNT DE CASTELLANE AND MISS ANNA GOULD.

They entered the music room and passed into the East India room, walking slowly up the aisle which had been made by running parallel white ribbons fastened to bushes of flowering roses. When they reached the dais at the Fifth avenue end of the room the music stopped. The ushers stood to each side and the bridesmaids stood before the ushers.

Here, awaiting the approach of his bride, stood the bridegroom, attended by his brother, the Count Jean de Castellane, while on the dais stood Archbishop Corrigan, wearing his ecclesiastical robes. Mr. Gould placed his sister's hand in Count de Castellane's hand, and withdrew to the left, where his wife and her two little daughters stood. The ceremony was abridged by the fact that the bride has not, as it has been frequently stated, surrendered her own religious faith. When the time came for the bride to have placed upon her finger the wedding ring, she handed her large and beautiful bouquet of lilies of the valley to her sister, Miss Helen Gould, who stood on her immediate right. The Ave Maria was sung by Rosa Sucher, and the musical cadences of the orchestra added charm to an impressive and beautiful ceremony.

After the benediction had been spoken Mendelssohn's Wedding March filled the room and the bride received the good wishes of the archbishop and the two officiating priests, which were followed immediately by those of her sister, Miss Helen Gould, and her brother George. The Count, radiant and happy, led his wife into the alcove, where, under a wreath showering a mass of lilies of the valley, they stood ready to receive the congratulations of their friends.

The Crest Comes C. O. D.

A countlet who came from the gay land of Gaul,
Wooed an heiress much sweeter than honey;
Though her beauty was great, he cared not at all,
For 'twas said he was after her money.

Nor was it his wit that appealed to the maid—
He was not with great intellect blest;
But he came of a family of very high grade,
And had a most beautiful crest.

So they fixed up a bargain—this maiden so fair
And this countlet from over the sea—
She agreed she would make him a big millionaire
For his crest and his fine pedigree.

"Ah, ma cherie!" he cried, as he sat by her side,
"Oh, ma belle, zis fine plan will suit me;
You gif me ze money, I make you my bride,
Ze exchange ees as fair as can be!"

So, his countlets so bland, with his hat in his hand,
Presented his crest C. O. D.;
And the wedding took place on a scale that was grand,
And a three-million check corralled he.

SENTENCED FOR LIFE.

Mme. Joniaux, the Belgian Borgia Curses Judge, Jury and Accusers.

A Brussels cablegram says that before Mme. Joniaux, the Antwerp poisoner, could be removed from the prisoners' dock after being sentenced to death for the murder of four of her relatives, whose lives she had heavily insured, she hurled the most bloodcurdling curses and maledictions at the jury for having condemned an "innocent woman."

The foreman of the jury dropped suddenly dead in the streets of Antwerp a few days afterward, although he was believed until then to be in perfectly sound health. And now the other members of the jury as well as their families are in fear lest they, too, should be affected by the censure.

Mme. Joniaux, who is a niece of King Leopold's principal aide-de-camp, the late General Baron d'Ablay, has had her sentence commuted to one of imprisonment for life, the first ten years of which are to be spent in solitary confinement. Popular report ascribes to her the possession of what is known as the "evil eye," and this, of course, only tends to confirm the belief among superstitious people as to the efficacy of her curses.

MADE ONE GOOD LAW.

LATE CONGRESS SURPASSED THE AVERAGE.

It Made a Distinctive Departure from the Protective Policy Which Had Prevailed for Thirty Years—Sugar Bounties and Cheapness.

Not Without Honor.

One good law of prime importance is as much as any ordinary Congress succeeds in placing to its credit. The first two or three Congresses, and perhaps as many more during the epoch of the civil war, undoubtedly accomplished more under the urgency and spur of the times when they were sitting, but most Congresses have done less.

The Congress which has just passed from the stage has surpassed the average. It has enacted at least one law of prime importance—the new tariff law. While it did not make so much progress in the direction of free trade in framing this law as had been expected by most people, yet it did make decided progress. It made a distinct departure from the protective policy which had prevailed for thirty-three years. During all those years there had been almost uninterrupted progress from protection to higher and higher protection until the climax was reached in the McKinley act of 1890.

The late Congress not only called a halt upon this movement, but it began a march backward toward commercial and industrial liberty, and it made a good advance for a first one. It put the country in motion toward freedom and the impulse which it gave will not be lost. That impulse may not seem to be operative for the time being, but visible results will be seen again as soon as the country begins to perceive the beneficial effects of the greater measure of freedom it now enjoys. Then the march will be resumed, not to cease until this is at least as free a country commercially as it was during the Democratic days from 1857 to 1861.

If the late Congress has done no other great thing it is at least entitled to credit for refusing to do many bad and doubtful things. Among the bad are the numerous grabs which at one time threatened to swell the appropriations for the next fiscal year to a total unequaled in the history of the country. Every grab of any great magnitude, with the exception of the sugar bounty, was defeated during the closing hours of the session, and to the Democratic house belongs the credit.

Among the doubtful measures which have fallen, for the time being at least, are the pooling bill, the Nicaragua Canal bill, the Hawaiian cable appropriation and a number of more or less questionable measures of currency reform. These can wait.

For some things, such as voting the sugar bounty, refusing needed relief to the treasury and neglecting to pass the free ships bill, the late Congress is not to be praised. But on the whole it has done more good and less harm than any other Congress for very many years. Even those who now find nothing good to say of it will give it credit for its great work of setting in motion the car of practical tariff reform before many years have passed away.

Clogs on Industry.

Government interference with trade and industry is always attended with unsatisfactory results. Commerce has natural laws. When these are artificially impeded the outcome is necessarily vicious.

A striking example of the truth of this statement is the situation of the beet-sugar industry in Germany. The German imperial government thought itself wise when it gave an export bounty on sugar made from beets. Government never stopped to think that when it gave a bounty out of the national treasury for such a purpose it took money that did not come from the German exchequer, but from the pockets of all the people, whether they were interested in beet raising or not. It followed that after a few years of fostering this industry agriculturists largely abandoned all other production and gave their fields over to beet raising. For a time the agriculturists thought that government was a beneficence and that the taxing of everybody for the support of themselves, though it might be an act of injustice to others, was so highly profitable to them that they must regard it as wise and expedient.

But the crisis comes. Stimulated beyond need, the stimulant which ought never be applied resulted in overproduction, and consequently diminished price. A nation so large a sugar consumer as the United States was practically lost to the German market because of the discriminating duty against nations which pay a bounty for export of sugar. The United States was in the business of interfering with trade and commerce as well as Germany itself. The advantage in this market lies, therefore, with the non-bounty paying country producing sugar. Down goes the price of sugar in Germany until the industry is in the worst possible condition. If it were the manufacturer alone it would be probably only loss of accumulated capital, but the misfortune extends necessarily to the entire field of farmers who are beet raisers.

Again, France lays embargo on American meat products. Investigation being made it appears that heavy duties on French wines brought to this country suggested to French statesmen the wisdom of retaliation. Our farmers suffer. A Chicago packer declares that the French decree means the loss of $18,000,000 trade a year to the people of this country. We have taxed French wines to protect our own sparse vineyards. They bar out our meats to protect their own people. In fact neither nation profits. Both lose heavily.

Agriculture, trade, commerce, all should be left to their natural development. When man through government impedes he injures, sometimes destroys. —Chicago Times.

Protectionist Logic.

The Chicago Tribune suggests that the President "strike back" at the European governments which are putting an embargo upon American products by availing himself of the retaliation clause in the tariff of 1890. It would have him get even with Germany for having closed its ports to our cattle by closing in return our ports to German hosiery, dress goods or sugar. France might be disciplined by shutting out its silks and wines, and measures of like character might be taken against the other European nations now hesitating upon the point of declaring commercial war against the United States. In short, Europe having struck a serious blow at the prosperity of our producers, we are asked by the protectionist organ to make matters symmetrical by attacking the interests of our consumers. This is protectionist logic applied to a situation growing out of a typical protection measure, namely, the differential tax for the use and behoof of the sugar trust. The way to stop the war of tariffs is not to increase its bitterness, but to remove the cause.

The Burdensomeness of Protection.

A big, strong and physically sound man can defy the laws of health with apparent impunity much longer than can a naturally puny and dyspeptic man. The sound man may drink whisky, smoke and chew tobacco, live on improper food, go without sufficient clothing, expose himself in all kinds of weather, and laugh at rules of hygiene for many years. The penalties of violated natural laws, however, must be paid in the case of the strong man as in that of the weak man.

No man can escape the effects of violated natural laws, likewise no nation can escape the evil effects of living under laws at variance with natural laws of progress. Exchange of products between different localities and different countries is the main spring of civilization and progress. All legislation is an obstacle to progress and prosperity. All tariff duties, whether on imports or exports, are barriers to trade and an injury not only to the country levying them, but, in some degree, to all the rest of the world.

Small countries like Italy, Belgium, Germany, France and England, or new and thinly populated countries like Australia and Canada, suffer most by tariff duties, because they are small or weak. England was in a desperate condition when it abolished protection in 1846. The Australian colonies got along very well until they adopted protection a few years ago. They have since passed through a frightful panic and are now returning to free trade. Canada is suffering greatly because it is trying to carry its load of "protection."

The United States being naturally the strongest and most independent of nations, for thirty years bore up under protective duties so high that they would soon have swamped a weaker nation. McKinleyism, however, was too much even for this mighty nation. After three years of 100 per cent. duties, the recuperative powers of this country were paralyzed by over-production.

Bounties and Cheapness.

When it was asserted in the Senate that in view of the bounties paid in other countries sugar production in the United States cannot last five years longer, the exaggeration gave opportunity for facing squarely an issue that must be met as a result of the bounty system.

If other countries pay bounties on sugar, wheat, cotton and similar articles, we must either begin a general system of production under government supervision, with expenses guaranteed at the cost of the taxpayers, or we must take the bounty products of other countries as cheap as we can get them.

When Germany and its imitators began competing under the sugar-bounty system, sugar was a luxury in England. Instead of imitating them in the payment of bounties, England simply kept its markets open for German and Russian bounty sugars until sugar was almost literally as "cheap as dirt" in England. Under governmental compulsion the taxpayers of Germany and Russia were paying for the sugar used in England, and their bounties were really presents to the English consumer.

Where the bounty system succeeds it has this necessary effect, and in having this effect it reacts on itself, fails of its object and necessarily brings its own condemnation and abandonment.

This must be the result in every bounty-paying country in Europe. While the bounties continue, classes of Americans who attempt to compete with them may be seriously inconvenienced, but we must not part with common sense on that account. And it is common sense to stop producing anything that we cannot sell for more than the cost of production, just as it is common sense to buy whatever we need when we can buy it cheaper than we can make it at our own expense.—New York World.

Cotton Prices.

Senator Hoar attributes the fall in the price of cotton to the tariff act of 1894. He knows, of course, that there was no tariff on cotton to remove, and he must be aware also that shrinkage of demand from the mills has not been more pronounced at home than abroad. And finally, does the Senator recall the fact that cotton suffered a greater decline in price from the year 1890 to and including the year 1892—when the McKinley act was in full force and the Republican party in power—than it has suffered since?—Springfield Republican.

Where Giants Come From.

Nearly every race has contributed to giantism, but the English have furnished far the larger proportion, partly, perhaps, because the English have always been fond of seeing giants and paying for the privilege, thereby drawing the merit of physical bigness, which has always been modest, out of its undeserved obscurity. Next to the English, the Irish have supplied the largest number, but the Irish giant is rarely grown nowadays, since that stock has been drawn upon so heavily by America.

Germany and the United States have supplied, each, eight or nine men who have won publicity and fame by their exuberant physique. It seems to be the Central and Western States that supply the American giants, and our war records show that in these regions, together with Maine and Vermont, the average stature is the highest.

There have been French and Italian, negro and Arab giants, but the number is few, and it is evident that the temperate zones and the large races supply the most cases of giantism. It is a curious fact that since Biblical days there have been no giants among the Jews.—Scribner's Magazine.

RAID AN IOWA BANK.

DARING DEED OF DESPERADOES AT ADEL.

Cashier Leech and Citizen Bailey Shot Down—Robbers Make Way with $15,000—One Is Killed, the Other Captured and the Money Recovered.

Citizens Turn Out in Pursuit.

The boldest bank robbery ever committed in Iowa—one with the speediest and direst results—took place Wednesday morning at the little town of Adel, twenty miles west of Des Moines. Only two men were concerned in it, but they mortally wounded the cashier, seriously wounded a depositor, made off with $15,000, were pursued and overtaken, and one of the outlaws was killed, the other wounded, and the booty recovered.

The crime was committed ten minutes after the bank, the Adel State Bank, was opened—at 9 o'clock. Cashier S. M. Leach had just unlocked the vault to get currency to cash a check for a depositor named Bailey. Both Leach and Bailey had their backs to the door when two masked men entered, and without speaking a word, opened fire simultaneously on the cashier and the customer. Leach fell mortally wounded, and Bailey, seriously, but not fatally hurt, staggered out of the door and gave the alarm. Before assistance could come the robbers had sprung over the bank counter, stepped over the prostrate form of the cashier, bagged all the cash in sight, estimated at $15,000, and ran out of the building to a horse and buggy standing conveniently near. They lashed the horse into a run, and before the townsmen were well aware of what had happened or had planned an attempt at capture the desperadoes were out of sight to the westward on their way toward Redfield.

The people of Adel were not slow in forming plans. A large posse, on horseback and in wagons, and armed with rifles, shotguns and revolvers, was soon on the trail, and couriers were sent out in all directions to call upon the farmers to join in the man hunt. The main posse continued on toward Redfield, but before De Soto was reached the advance guard, the men on horseback, caught sight of their prey, and the robbers saw that they were being hotly pursued. The vigilantes, for such they were, they having agreed to lynch the robbers if caught, made such rapid gains on the fugitives that the latter left their horse and buggy by the roadside and sought refuge in an old barn close by. There they lay till the posse arrived. The hunted men refused to surrender and the vigilantes opened fire, one of the robbers being killed at the first volley. The other surrendered when threats were made to set fire to the barn, and delivered himself and the stolen funds into the hands of his captors. The vigilantes, with their capture, returned to Adel, and the dead robber's body was taken there also.

BLOOMERS ON THE ICE.

A New York Skating Girl Astonished the Central Park Boys.

The girl with bloomers has made her appearance on the ice. She looked pretty when she began cutting figures on the Central Park lake, says a New York paper. She was young and good looking. Her costume was of dark blue serge. The blouse waist was belted in by a knotted sash of the same material, the skirt reaching to the swell of the rather full—one might say baggy—bloomers. The right and left sections of this garment terminated just below the knees, and the draping folds were held up by elastic garters. She wore a glistening pair of club skates.

THE BLOOMER GIRL ON ICE.

At once she became a target for the hoodlums. A mob of them—half grown men and boys—surrounded her and followed her everywhere, howling and yelling. They called her "Tommy," "Pants" and other irrelevant names. She put on speed to distance her tormentors, but the Central Park lake is not large and she could not shake them off. Finally she called a police officer to her assistance and with his protection finished her skating and left the ice.

SAVED HER FATHER'S LIFE.

A New Jersey Man's Narrow Escape from an Angry Bull.

John Martindale, a farmer living near Winslow, N. J., recently had a narrow escape from death by being gored by a bull while working on a farm. He went into a barn to do some work, when the bull turned on him, knocking him down and goring him. Martindale's daughter, Hattie, heard her father's cries and ran to his assistance. She grabbed a pitchfork, and, at the risk of her own life, prodded the bull with it until it turned tail and ran away. Mr. Martindale was badly injured, and his daughter had just succeeded in getting her father outside the fence when the animal made another charge to attack them. Mr. Martindale will recover.

A Bank Failure.

AN INVESTIGATION DEMANDED.

A general banking business is done by the human system, because the blood deposits in its vaults whatever wealth we may gain from day to day. This wealth is laid up against "a rainy day" as a reserve fund—we're in a condition of healthy prosperity if we have laid away sufficient capital to draw upon in the hour of our greatest need. There is danger in getting thin, because it's a sign of letting down in health. To gain in blood is nearly always to gain in wholesome flesh. The odds are in favor of the germs of consumption, grip, or pneumonia, if our liver be inactive and our blood impure, or if our flesh be reduced below a healthy standard. What is required is an increase in our germ-fighting strength. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery enriches the blood and makes it wholesome, stops the waste of tissue and at the same time builds up the strength. A medicine which will rid the blood of its poisons, cleanse and invigorate the great organs of the body, vitalize the system, thrill the whole being with new energy and make permanent work of it, is surely a remedy of great value. But when we make a positive statement that 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption can, if taken in the early stages of the disease, be CURED with the "Discovery," it seems like a bold assertion. All Dr. Pierce asks is that you make a thorough investigation and satisfy yourself of the truth of his assertion. By sending to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., you can get a free book with the names, addresses and photographs of a large number of those cured of throat, bronchial and lung diseases, as well as of skin and scrofulous affections by the "Golden Medical Discovery." They also publish a book of 160 pages, being a medical treatise on consumption, bronchitis, asthma, catarrh, which will be mailed on receipt of address and six cents in stamps.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

Resignation of Mr. Bissell.

As postmaster-generals go, the retiring officer has been a success.—Indianapolis News.

A smaller man, it seems, will occupy Mr. Bissell's chair in the Post Office Department.—Cincinnati Tribune.

Bissell has resigned because Washington life is too expensive for him, if reports are true. This is not a good argument, however, for increasing official salaries.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

He has been an unimaginative, hard-working, practical-minded executive head of a department in which strict business methods are all important.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Mr. Bissell was a laborious and successful member of the cabinet, and will be specially remembered by reformers for his thoroughgoing enforcement of the civil-service law prescribing competitive examinations for applicants for appointment and promotion to places in his department.—Baltimore Sun.

Mr. Bissell has been a good postmaster general. That is, he found the affairs of the department organized on a business basis and he kept them so. But he has done more than that. He has practically demonstrated his friendship for civil-service reform and done a good deal, though not all he might have done, to extend the merit system in the postal service.—Buffalo Express.

The American Flag Only.

Now that New York has declared that no foreign flag shall hereafter be displayed from a public building, Indiana cities should not permit them to be displayed in school rooms.—Indianapolis Journal.

Governor Morton on Washington's birthday signed the bill prohibiting the hoisting of any flag but the American flag over public buildings in New York. It was a good day for such an act.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

The anti-foreign flag bill just signed by Governor Morton will put an end to jangling on this subject in New York, and the enactment is so sound in principle that it would be just as right for Hawaii as for New York.—Philadelphia Record.

Every one fit to be an American citizen, whether by birth or adoption, will agree that the only flag for official use in this country is the Stars and Stripes, and it is gratifying that this long-time disturbance in New York city has been ended in this decisive and patriotic manner.—Philadelphia Press.

He is a man of ability and long experience, and his grace of manner, no less than his mental qualifications, should make him persona grata at the Mexican capital.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The President has done well in the choice of a successor to the late Minister Gray, but the enthusiasm with which the Senate indorsed Mr. Ransom proves little, for the Senate is in the habit of approving the selection of one of their own number to fill official position.—Indianapolis News.

WAS GOULD INSANE?

Financial Worry and Physical Exertion Not the Greatest Destroyer of Human Life.

For Humanity's Sake, After Thirty-six Years of Nerve-Creeping Slavery, He Tells How He Was Set Free.

Caldwell, N. J., March 11, 1895.—(Special.)—Since one of our prominent citizens suffered so terribly from tobacco tremens, has made known his frightful experience in behalf of humanity, the ladies here are making tobacco-using husbands' lives miserable with their entreaties to at once quit tobacco.

The written statement of S. J. Gould is attracting wide-spread attention. When interviewed to-night he said: "I commenced using tobacco at thirteen; I am now forty-nine; so, for thirty-six years I chewed, smoked, snuffed and rubbed snuff. In the morning I chewed before I put my pants on, and for a long time I used two ounces of chewing and eight ounces of smoking a day. Sometimes I had a chew in both cheeks and a pipe in my mouth at once. Ten years ago I quit drinking whisky. I tried to stop tobacco time and again, but could not. My nerves craved nicotine and I fed them till my skin turned a tobacco-brown, cold, sticky perspiration oozed from my skin, and trickled down my back at the least exertion or excitement. My nerve vigor and my life was being slowly sapped. I made up my mind that I had to quit tobacco or die. On October 1 I stopped, and for three days I suffered the tortures of the damned. On the third day I got so bad that my partner accused me of being drunk. I said, 'No, I have quit tobacco.' 'For God's sake, man,' he said, offering me his tobacco box, 'take a chew; you will go wild,' and I was wild. Tobacco was forced into me and I was taken home dazed. I saw double and my memory was beyond control, but I still knew how to chew and smoke, which I did all day until towards night, when my system got tobacco-soaked again. The next morning I looked and felt as though I had been through a long spell of sickness. I gave up in despair, as I thought that I could not cure myself. Now, for suffering humanity, I'll tell what saved my life. Providence evidently answered my good wife's prayers and brought to her attention in our paper an article which read: 'Don't Tobacco Spit and Smoke Your Life Away!'

"What a sermon and warning in these words! Just what I was doing. It told about a guaranteed cure for the tobacco habit, called No-To-Bac. I sent to Druggist Hasler for a box. Without a grain of faith I spit out my tobacco cud, and put into my mouth a little tablet upon which was stamped No-To-Bac. I know it sounds like a lie when I tell you that I took eight tablets the first day, seven the next, five the third day, and all the nerve-creeping feeling, restlessness and mental depression was gone. It was too good to be true. It seemed like a dream. That was a month ago. I used one box. It cost me $1, and it is worth a thousand. I gained ten pounds in weight and lost all desire for tobacco from the first day. I sleep and eat well, and I have been benefited in more ways than I can tell. No, the cure was no exception in my case. I know of ten people right here in Caldwell who have bought No-To-Bac from Hasler, and they have been cured. Now that I realize what No-To-Bac has done for me and others, I know why it is that the makers of this wonderful remedy, the Sterling Remedy Company, of New York and Chicago, say: 'We don't claim to cure every case. That's Fraud's talk, a lie; but we do guarantee three boxes to cure the tobacco habit, and in case of failure we are perfectly willing to refund money.' I would not give a public indorsement if I were not certain of its reliability. I know it is backed by men worth a million. No-To-Bac has been a God-send to me, and I firmly believe it will cure any case of tobacco-using if faithfully tried, and there are thousands of tobacco slaves who ought to know how easy it is to get free. There's happiness in No-To-Bac for the prematurely old men, who think as I did that they are old and worn out, when tobacco is the thing that destroys their vitality and manhood."

The public should be warned, however, against the purchase of any of the many imitations on the market, as the success of No-To-Bac has brought forth a host of counterfeiters and imitators. The genuine No-To-Bac is sold under a guarantee to cure, by all druggists, and every tablet has the word No-To-Bac plainly stamped thereon, and you run no physical or financial risk in purchasing the genuine article.

Among the Laos.

Among the Laos, a people inhabiting a district of Siam, the chewing of a preparation called "meing" is almost universal, the practice being especially esteemed by those whose labor brings great bodily fatigue. Recent inquiry shows that this delicacy is prepared from the Assam tea plant of commerce. The leaves, instead of being used for an infused beverage as in other countries, are steamed, tied into bundles, and buried in the ground for about fifteen days, after which the product will keep for two years or more. A similar use of tea is not wholly unknown elsewhere. Good authority states that, even in European countries, the ordinary dried leaves are sometimes eaten, a craving being gradually established, as in tobacco-chewing.

Wool from Wood.

The latest wonder among the textiles is a fabric woven from the fibers of wood which has been put through a special chemical process. This important method of treating wood fiber, which renders it equal to wool or cotton for all practical purposes, is of German origin, and is known as the "Mesterlich process of chemically treating wood pulp." It was introduced during the year just closed.

"MAN'S inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." We are not sure whom the author had in mind when he wrote the above lines, but we are quite confident that it could not apply with more force to any class of people in the world than to the man who allows his wife to wash on a washboard or with some of the cheap, worthless washers that are being sold when he has an opportunity to purchase a Rocker Washer. TASTE FOR WEDDING CAKE.

A Postoffice Rat Making Free in Cleveland with Letters and Packages.

"Have you ever heard of our postoffice rat?" queried a handler of Cleveland mail addressing a writer for the Leader. "He is a kleptomaniac, a born thief, I guess," continued the clerk. "He steals letters, and we cannot keep him from it. He has a taste for wedding cake, too, and his conscience never restrains him from indulging it. We have set a trap for him repeatedly, but he is too wise for us."

The clerk then discoursed concerning the habits of the distinguished rodent. "He hides among the rubbish of the room," he said, "and has several means of ready access to the outside world. He takes charge of affairs when we are out. The other day he was seen sitting upright on the table nibbling at a package of hickory nut kernels which happened to be side-tracked during transit through the mails. Not long ago a box of wedding cake got lost. A card was mailed to the sender to come and correct the address. She called, but when we looked for the package it was gone.

"A feeling something like that which crept over Old Mother Hubbard when she went to the cupboard to get her 'poor dog a bone' gradually gained possession of us. The rat had made off with the cake, and the closest search revealed only scattered fragments of precious sweetmeat. We thought for a long time that some inquisitive person was taking certain missives, but our suspicions proved to be unfounded. One day we discovered several of the missing letters near a hole made by the rat under a desk. He had taken them as far as he could, and then bade them good-by."

The rat makes the correcting clerk's office his principal rendezvous. It is there that stray letters and packages are held for a time to ascertain their correct address or for additional postage.

The Twelve Suns of the Hindoos.

The Hindoos have very odd astronomical ideas, among others that there are really twelve sons, which take "turn about" supplying our planet with light and heat. They argue that these suns are brothers, but some are much younger and weaker than the others. Mrs. King, the wife of an English official, while talking with one of these learned Brahmans during the month of November, was given the following curious bit of astronomical lore: "Some of these subs are the elder brothers, and much stronger than the others—so strong, indeed, that they can kill men. This month we have a young sun brother, and next month a still younger one, and then the two youngest of the twelve—weaklings that can hardly melt snow!"

Profanity and Pain

Too often go together. Refrain from swearing if you are suffering the tortures of rheumatism, and seek the aid of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which will expel the rheumatic virus from your blood. Kidney and malarial complaints, dyspepsia, constipation, neuralgia and biliousness are all relieved by this sterling and comprehensive family medicine, which should be kept always on hand for emergencies.

"Lowgienic Fare."

"Papa," said the boy, as he looked over the table and saw that the usual bill of fare, consisting of bread, potatoes, dried apples and cold water, had not been varied by the addition of anything else, "can't you afford anything better than this kind of grub? Do other folks live on the same victuals we do?"

"They ought to, my son, whether they do or not. We are vegetarians and hydropathists and believe in living hygienically."

"This is hygienic, is it?"

"Certainly, my son."

"Then all I've got to say is that I wish I'd been born in a lowgienic family."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

THE Christian Endeavor Convention for 1895 will be held at Boston, Mass., next July, and the Nickel Plate road has effected arrangements by which the lowest rates will be offered, either good returning same route, or by going one route and returning in whole or part by different routes. Cause of Aurora Borealis.

The latest theory concerning the cause of the aurora borealis has been deduced from a careful analysis of the light thrown through a spectroscope. This unique experiment seems to establish the fact that it is caused by an electrical discharge among the particles of meteoric iron dust contained in the atmosphere.

KINDNESS is the golden chain by which society is bound together.

THE Knights Templar conclave will be held at Boston, Mass., during next August, and it will be of interest to Sir Knights and their friends to know that arrangements have already been successfully accomplished by the Nickel Plate road providing for the sale of excursion tickets over direct lines, going and returning, or by circuitous routes, i. e., going one line and returning another. By so doing many of the following notable resorts may be visited without additional expense: Chautauqua Lake, Niagara Falls, Thousand Islands, The Rapids of the St. Lawrence, Saratoga, Palisades of the Hudson and the Hoosac Tunnel. The above arrangements will, no doubt, make the low rate excursion tickets offered by the Nickel Plate road very popular.

Cold Feet.

This derangement is attributable to defective circulation of the blood. Coldness of the feet mostly comes on at night, and will often prevent a person sleeping long after he has got into bed. Treatment—Half an hour before bedtime walk up and down the room briskly, or run up and down stairs. Rub the feet with the hands or a flesh-brush. Dip them into hot water, without suffering them to remain in any length of time. Drink some warm beverage just before going to bed. In winter time, wear boots instead of slippers in the house. Do not sit long together, but every now and then get up and walk about. These, and many other simple expedients, may be adopted to prevent this unpleasant sensation.

Inventor of the Modern Plow.

An exchange with an antiquarian turn of mind declares that Thomas Jefferson invented the modern plow. There were plows, of course, thousands of years before the time of the sage of Monticello, but he first laid down the mathematical principles that underlie the construction of the plow, and so enabled any blacksmith to make one. A plow consists of two wedges, a cutting and a lifting wedge, and Jefferson discovered and enunciated the proportion of each and the relations each bore to the other. Before his day no two smiths made plows alike. Now they are all made in accordance with a mathematical formula.—Hardware.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

Last year we commenced an elaborate plan of advertising, but before we were half through, OUR ADVERTISEMENTS DISAPPEARED. Why? Because WE WERE OVERWHELMED WITH BUSINESS. There was but one thing to do: withdraw the advertising and devote every energy to filling the orders with which we were flooded. This we did, and handled, with reasonable promptness a most unprecedented year's business. WITH ENLARGED FACTORIES, INCREASED FACILITIES, AND TWENTY BRANCH HOUSES FROM WHICH TO DISTRIBUTE OUR GOODS, WE CAN NOW CARE FOR ALL WHO COME. Last year we could not reduce prices because we were compelled in some way to limit the demand for Aermotor goods. We would have been satisfied with lower prices, but why create a demand which we could not supply? We have made the heaviest purchases of steel and material bought in America this year, and at unprecedented prices, and have made terms to dealers which enable them to make unprecedented prices.

In quality, character, variety, finish, and assortability to fill stock of goods and repairs, we are without competitors. In our plan of advertising last year, we proposed to furnish a feed cutter under certain conditions for $12. For reasons stated above we did not complete the advertising, and the feed cutter was not put out. We now propose to make amends in the following manner: We will announce in this paper our NEW ALL-STEEL VERY SUPERIOR FEED CUTTER, WORTH cash with order, f. o. b. Chicago. Only one to one person, be he furnish addresses of ten neighbors who ought to have something in our line. Cut, description and full information regarding it will appear soon.

We especially desire to anounce our advertising prices for windmills on the part of the great. $10 added to the legitimate profit to the dealer, you get the cut, order only will be protected. Unbelievers in low prices, output of our factories and tools for each piece, and on it to merely picking up and down again. So small has on the material we mentioning. We have bought material in the country, ing made up in the form of pletion windmills, towers pumps, etc. To such an and to such an extent has on that account the reduced competition impossible, that FOUR LARGE WINDMILL CONCERNS ARE BUYING THEIR TOWERS OF US THIS YEAR. THEY DO IT BECAUSE WE MAKE THE ONLY ABSOLUTELY RELIABLE AND SAFE TOWER; BECAUSE THEY CAN BUY OF US CHEAPER THAN THEY CAN BUILD, BECAUSE WE ALONE ARE PREPARED TO GALVANIZE EVERYTHING AFTER IT IS COMPLETED, AND COMPLETE EVERYTHING EXACTLY RIGHT.

These concerns are wise, for, even though they may not furnish the best of wheels, the wheel will have the best of supports. Send to us your name and address, and those of your neighbors who may need something in our line, and thereby do them a good turn. The Aermotor Co. is one of the monumental successful business enterprises which has been launched in recent times. In succeeding advertisements will be discussed and made clear the lines on which that success has been worked out. It was done by a farmer's boy. A careful following of these advertisements may suggest to some other farmer's boy a career.

LYON'S 7 WONDERS

A SPECIFIC For all DERANGEMENTS of the STOMACH. PRICE $1.00

Manf'd by THE LYON MEDICINE CO. INDIANAPOLIS IND.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

The Railroad Sandwich.

W. R. Hart, Traveling Salesman, Dayton, O., says: "Like many other traveling men, I made the acquaintance of the railroad sandwich, who afterward introduced me to old 'General Dyspepsia,' an acquaintance I was unable to shake until I met with LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS, which I am happy to say, has put the unwelcome guest to flight. Dyspepsia and headaches are things of the past. I feel like a new man and can eat anything."

Could not Sleep at Night.

To whom it may concern:

Following an attack of la grippe and typhoid fever, I was left with a bad condition of blood and serious stomach troubles. I had no appetite, was exceedingly nervous and could not sleep at night. To tell the story briefly, LYON'S SEVEN WONDERS cured me.

Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cured J. G. Goreil of the worse case of eczema ever known in the state of Indiana. It cures scalds, burns, indolent sores and never fails to cure piles. 8tf

The Proof Accumulates.

The evidence continues to come and all helps to prove our claims for Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer. W. C. Flick, ex-postmaster, New Galien, Columbiana Co., Ohio, says: "About two years ago I was all run down, had no strength to work, was listless, drowsy in day time and wakeful at night, and felt about as nervous and miserable as I could feel and live. Salem doctors applied a battery, examined me closely and pronounced it a serious case of nervous prostration, for which there was no help except to keep as quiet as possible. I think that they didn't expect me to live long. I spoke of trying a patent medicine, but the doctor said no patent medicine could help me. But as I steadily grew worse I had to try something, so got Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, which was highly recommended for nerve diseases. I felt a good effect from the first use of it, so continued to use it and continued to improve in health. Think I used six bottles and I believe I am perfectly cured." Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is a medicinal preparation which cannot fail to help any nerve disorder or "run down" condition of health. Sold by Davenport.

Promptness is a commendable virtue. That's why we offer you One Minute Cough Cure. It is prompt in relief and prompt in curing. That is what it is made for. 8tf

Lagrippe

Is again claiming its victims, and while not so many deaths are recorded, thousands of persons are left by it with the most distressing lassitude, lack of nerve and brain power, mental depression, etc. The terrible effects of the disease can be quickly dispelled, and health and strength restored by using Vitaline and Nervetone, which never disappoints. This new and wonderful remedy cures every form of nerve trouble and nerve pain. It is the invention of a celebrated Scotch chemist, just introduced in America by the Hall Medicine Co., Toledo, Ohio. For sale by Fischler & Son. 10-11

We wish to state to our patrons that One Minute Cure is a safe and reliable remedy for children troubled with croup, colds, hoarseness and lung troubles. It is pleasant to take and quickly cures. 8tf

Cramp Colic and Cholera.

For seven years or more Mrs. W. D. Louder, of Quincy, Ky., was subject to attacks of cramp colic. Mr. S. R. Morse, a druggist of that place, recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which has effected a permanent cure, saving her much suffering besides the trouble and expense of sending for a doctor, which was often necessary. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Cures Rheumatism.

A severe rheumatic pain in the left shoulder had troubled Mr. J. H. Loper, a well known druggist of Des Moines, Iowa, for over six months. At times the pain was so severe that he could not lift anything. With all he could do he could not get rid of it until he applied Chamberlain's Pain Balm. "I only made three applications of it," he says, "And have since been free from all pain." He now recommends it to persons similarly afflicted. It is for sale by Robbins & McCord 10-13

T. F. Anthony, ex-postmaster of Promise City, Iowa, says: "I bought one bottle of 'Mystic Cure' for Rheumatism and two doses of it did me more good than all the medicine I ever took." Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn. 41tf

Relief in One Day.

South American Nervine relieves the worst cases of nervous prostrations nervousness and nervous dyspepsia in a single day. No such relief and blessing has ever come to the invalids of this country. Don't Take Our Word,

But ask your doctor if there is any cure for rheumatism. If a member of the old school, he will say there is none. If of the more modern and progressive practice, he will say that Drummond's Lightning Remedy for rheumatism, is the only known specific, and that its proprietors offer a reward of $500 for a case it will not cure. The preparation is both internal and external, consists of two large bottles—one month's treatment, and is sent by express to any address upon receipt of $5. Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York. Agents wanted. 10-11

Drummond's Lightning

Remedy did great work for H. J. Lewis of Anderson's Mills, S. C. He had Sciatic Rheumatism in the left hip and leg and for six weeks was not able to sit up or walk a step; and suffered untold agonies. After using Drummond's Lightning remedy for rheumatism for two weeks, he wrote that he could walk and that the pain was gone. If you suffer from rheumatism and wish to be cured, send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and the two large bottles will be sent to your express address. Agents wanted. 10-11

Take Care of the Lungs:

"Perhaps you would not think so, but a very large proportion of diseases in New York, comes from carlessness about catching cold," says Dr. Cyrus Edson. "It is such a simple thing and so common that very few people, unless it is a case of pneumonia, pay any attention to a cold. New York is one of the healthiest places on the Atlantic Coast and yet there are a great many cases of catarrh and consumption which have their origin in this neglect of the simplest precaution of every day life. The most sensible advice is, when you have one get rid of it as soon as possible. By all means do not neglect it" Dr. Edson does not tell you how to cure a cold but we will. Take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It will relieve the lungs, aid expectoration open the secretions and soon effect a permanent cure. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 1013

CHAS. EMANUEL, Attorney for Estate.

Thursday's Daily:

Rev J. N. Wilson has received a letter from George Gilbert, Phillipsburg, Neb., enclosing receipts from twenty-five families who had received aid by way of groceries, flour, etc., in sums ranging from about one dollar to four and one-half dollars, from the sixty dollars sent him by our Relief Committee. In the aggregate the sixty dollars sent purchased 2,150 lbs. flour, 2 bushels beans, 25 lbs. coffee, 25 lbs. tea, 180 lbs. sugar, 6 pails syrup, 535 lbs. coal. Mr. G. says: I thought that I could reach twelve families with the sixty dollars and reach the most destitute, but I found that things were worse than I thought them to be. There won't be enough to last two weeks, and some were entirely out, and some had nothing to eat but corn meal and but little of that. I do not know what people are going to do as we have not seen the hardest times yet * * If I ever saw anyone thankful it was those who got flour, etc. * * They send their sincere thanks to you and the Committee and the friends for remembering them in their destitution. * * A great many people will be entirely out of everything before the first of April and many before that.

Columbia City Post: Judge Penfield came down from Auburn last Thursday to hear the arguments for a new trial in the case of the state against Thomson Arnold. The Bristol Banner, owned by C F Mosier, is puplished by R. H. Weamer, at Bristol, Elkhart county. A short time ago it contained an article to which some of the people at Bristol took exceptions. Three citizens there circulated what Weamer terms a scandalous paper, addressed to the owner of the Banner, setting forth his acts and their grievances, and demanding that Mr. Weamer, the present editor, be set aside and the paper placed under new management. The occurence caused considerable stir among the people. Mr. Weamer, believing he has committed no unpardonable sin, has commenced suit against the three persons who have been active in the matter, and claims damages to the amount of $1,000 It is liable make quite a lawsuit.

A Chance to Make Money.

The times are hard, but there always seems to be opportunities for those who are willing to work. In the past month I have made $175 above all expenses, selling Climax Dish Washer, and have attended my regular business besides. I never saw anything that gave as general satisfaction. One should not complain where they can make over $6 a day, right at home. I have not canvassed any, so anxious are the people for Climax Dish Washers, that they send after them; any lady or gentleman can do as well as I am doing, for anyone can sell what everyone wants to buy. I think we should inform each other through the newspaper of opportunities like this, as there are many willing to work if they only knew of an opening. For full particulars, address the Climax Mfg. Co., Columbus, Ohio After you have tried the business a week, publish the results for the benefit of others.

Saturday's Daily:

A BOOK SOCIAL.

Keeran Sisters gave a very interesting party to a number of invited friends last evening. The invitations were in the main, confined to the ministers, teachers and newspaper men, but included a few young people, who are always an acceptable addition to any social gathering. The meeting was planned and carried out as a "book social." We believe that is the title. Each person is to wear an emblem or some article, that will represent the name of a book, and the guests are given the chance of untimited guesses at the name intended. It was very amusing, and was besides, a very instructive lesson. The titles of many old and half forgotten, yet valued works were in this way called to mind, and something learned of many new ones. As an example, Editor Campbell's book was "Bread Winners," and fastened to the lapel of his coat was a brass bread check. It took some time to guess his. Ben. Crew carried a photograph of a lady. It turned out to mean "Ben Hur," he was Ben and the picture was "her," the little slip in grammar being forgiven in the hearty laugh that followed the discovery. Miss Lila Baker wore a bow of ribbon having two strings tied to it No one guessed this, although the title of her book was "Two Strings to a Bean." Mrs John Lochner wore a white rose having its thorny stem left on. Her book was "A Rose Among Thorns." These interesting items took up the evening, and then came a dainty lunch most gracefully served. Following this came the toasts. Editor Campbell acted as toastmaster. Supt. Harrison of the Auburn Schools responded to the toast "Our Public Schools," in a very scholarly, though brief speech. And it was noticed that he wove into his theme the name of his book," Ladder of the Mind," by Lord Francis Bacon. Up to this point his book had not been discovered, though the "ladder" was conspicious on his coat lapel. Rev. C. B. Koch responded to "The Pulpit" in a well delivered and eloquent speech. Supt. Merica responded to "The Teacher" and was very felicitous in handling the subject that has always been nearest his heart. Miss VanDorn followed with a recitation. "The 19th Century Teacher," which was very witty, very appropriate and truthful, and was finely rendered. Mr. Campbell then the last on the program, spoke for the "Press," in a talk replete with good thoughts, and his ideas were at once accepted by his audience as the correct showing for this important profession. He believes it should take rank with the others. All were cheered generously. Soon after this pleasant gathering separated to carry to their home its pleasant memories.

THE NEW SALARY BILL.

The legislature has passed a new salary bill to take the place of the law of '91 that placed officers on a fixed salary instead of fees. It will be remembered that the law of '91 was recently declared unconstitutional because the sheriff, auditor and treasurer were not named in Shelby county. The new law follows closely the law of '91 as to amounts, except that it raises the salary of treasurers and sheriffs and cuts down auditors. The law was passed Thursday evening quite late and then came a race of horses and buggy to carry it to the governor for his signature. He had gone to bed, and when it was seen that only a few minutes remained, the horses were put on a dead run. Running horses in the streets being against a city ordinance, policemen tried to stop them, to the great danger of the new law failing to reach the governor in time. But about five minutes before midnight they got the signature. It will go into effect as far as county officers are concerned as soon as the laws are published, which will be in June or July. But the state officers will go on getting big fees until New Year's day. In this county we believe the clerk gets the same as under the law of '91. The auditor will get $100 less, and the sheriff and treasurer $100 more, the treasurer also getting a percentage on all delinquent taxes. We shall probably be able to give the salaries in Monday's DAILY.

Much for Little.

We cannot refrain from further mention of that most beautiful of all monthly publications, Sarony's Living Pictures. It is so highly meritorious and so fitly calculated to afford to its possessor the greatest amount of entertainment for the smallest outlay, that we are doing our readers a kindness in again calling their attention to it. Compared with its real worth, its cost, 25 cents, is but a trifle.

HEART DISEASE!

Fluttering, No Appetite, Could Not Sleep, Wind on Stomach.

"For a long time I had a terrible pain at my heart, which fluttered almost incessantly. I had no appetite and could not sleep. I would be compelled to sit up in bed and belch gas from my stomach until I thought that every minute would be my last. There was a feelling of oppression about my heart, and I was afraid to draw a full breath. I could not sweep a room without resting. My husband induced me to try and am happy to say it has cured me. I now have a splendid appetite and sleep well. Its effect was truly marvelous."

Waterproof collars and cuffs that will not wilt, are not effected by moisture and look just like linen are all the fashion now. They are made by covering a linen collar or cuff with "celluloid" and are the only waterproof goods made with an interlining, consequently the only ones that will stand wear and give perfect satisfaction. Try them and you will never regret it. Always neat, and easily cleaned. When soiled simply wipe off with a wet cloth or sponge. Every piece of the genuine is stamped as follows:

TRADE CELLULOID MARK.

Ask for those so marked and refuse any imitations, as they cannot possibly please you. If your dealer does not keep them, we will send a sample direct on receipt of price. Collars 25c. each. Cuffs 50c. pair. State size and whether stand-up or turned-down collar is wanted.

Mr Fred Miller, of Irving, Ill, writes that he had a severe kidney trouble for many years, with severe pains in his back, and also that his bladder was affected. He tried many so called kidney cures but without any good result. About a year ago he began the use of Electric Bitters and found relief at once. Electric Bitters is especially adapted to the cure of all kidney and liver complaints and often gives almost instant relief. One trial will prove our statement. WHAT WE HAVE TO SAY ABOUT MONEY.

The Indiana Mutual Building Loan Association, which we represent in this part of the state, have again reduced their interest, which has always been from 2 to 5 per cent less than any other Building Loan Association Do you know that if you are about to borrow money and give a mortgage on your home, you should take the time and trouble to investigate the plan of different associations, so that you may know regarding of what any agent may tell you, which is the cheapest and the best?

There are three items which should also be considered and thoroughly understood, especially by the borrower, before he makes his application for a loan:

First: The rate of interest and premium he is charged per annum.

Second: What the earnings of the Association are.

Third: How economically the Association is conducting its affairs.

We are prepared always to compare our company with any other and can prove to your entire satisfaction that we are the cheapest and

REMEMBER

That in our company you have no membership fee to pay, no advance payments to make and there will be no delays, so that should your loan for any reason be declined, you will lose no money. We are prepared to make loans where the security is sufficient; for any amount from $2.00 to $25,0

THEIR SECOND ENTERTAINMENT.

THE RATHBONE SISTERS HAVE A GOOD HOUSE AT THE ARMORY LAST EVENING.

ALL our people like to patronize home talent and encourage home institutions. And especially when the "home institution" goes to a deal of trouble to prepare an entertainment and "fix up" as shown in the above picture. The picture, we might add, will give our readers a faint idea of the queer dresses and masks that were used. They had gone to great trouble of study and expense to get up these disguises and so well had they succeeded that few of them were recognized by their best friends. Last evening was their second and last appearance, and the house was nearly as full as on the evening before. The performance was as good, though there were some changes in the program. The sweet little misses were not present, but a lovely tableau was given at the close, and at different points in the evening, there was introduced some fine music by Pres. and Ive Wilcox, James Eldridge and others, so that everything went off well after all. The mock initiation was similiar to that of the evening before, except an all round change of name. And Editor Campbell had to take the place of the "COURIER feller." And Jake Raut resembled one as strongly as he did the other, possibly more so. All enjoyed it Kuhlman had charge of the "Mulligan Guards" and did his part to perfection. He wore the little round fatigue cap and scarlet blouse of the British Infantry service, and was the very picture of the natty English foot soldier known to the comic papers and their illustrations as "Tommy Atkins." The ladies did the parts well. Mrs. Geo Grogg was "grand high Mogul," Mrs. Zoran Shafer "Recorder," Mrs. Penfield was "Conductress" Mrs. Pinma Moody was "Surgeon," Mrs. Marion Willis was "Vice Mogul." The other officers, were, Mrs. Nill, Mrs. Chas. Brown, Mrs. D N. Fitch, Mrs. L. Harding The Mulligan Guards were: Mrs, J. F. Aber, Mrs. T. A. Carter, Mrs. Geo. Weamer, Miss Alice Shull, Mrs. Frank Zimmerman, Mrs. I. O. Bachtel, with Mrs. Geo. Lanning for organist. We had not time to get the names of the little misses or we would give them an honorable place in the DAILY." The "properties" used on the stage were very elaborate and ingenious, and must have cost a good deal of thought and skill to make. That they were about the proper sort is proved by the fact that they were sold when the performance closed, to a lodge of the Rathbone Sisters in Illinois. Altogether the affair was a success and the "Bone Sisters" as a little girl called them, have reason to be pleased with their success. The net proceeds amount to over $80.

AN OLD GRAND JURY.

The Edgerton Earth says that Hancock county, Ohio, lays claim to the oldest grand jury in existence. Twenty years ago the late Judge Pilare held court at Findlay. At the close of the term the grand jury was not ready to make a report and the judge adjourned the court sine die. The jury was dismissed and is consequently in existence to-day.

PENSIONS FOR INDIANA.

The following pensions have been granted to Indiana veterans, including as will be seen, a pension for our friend Robert McCurdy. The list is: Charles Demoss, Glenwood; Edward P. Court.

Thursday's Daily.

The case of Cochran vs Marshal Baker was finished this forenoon. Baker was assessd to pay $39.50 damages to Cochran for time lost by the latter on account of the rough handling he received at the hands of the marshal. Various opinions are expressed as to the verdict. The case now on is Shoner vs Wagner, to collect a note. This involves another question also. M. P. Barker, who signed the note as surety, asserts that he only signed it because he was promised that Miles Waterman and Fred Gfeller would be on the note with him. He afterwards found they were not on and he asks a release. Shoner wants to hold him. A very interesting case comes up Saturday. Mrs. Myers, of Garrett, sues that town for $5000 for injuries due to a defective sidewalk. We believe her attorney is Judge McClellan, but did not learn as to the other side.

Friday's Daily:

Our readers have now and then complained about needless changes of venue, and we admit that in many cases the reason's are frivolous, and that actual justice would be more certain if the cases could be tried here. But there is now and then a case where there exists a real prejudice against a person. To show how this may happen, and at the same time give our readers a chance to see the form of these legal papers, we here publish the affidavit in full, of C. S. Thompson, charged with breaking open the trunk of his hired man. The case will be tried at Angola. Here are his reasons:

In the DeKalb Circuit Court,
DeKalb County, Indiana.

The State of Indiana,
vs
Charles Thompson.

The defendant being sworn says, that he cannot have a fair and impartial trial of this case in DeKalb county Indiana, on account of the prejudice and bias against him in said county, which prejudice exists.

Affiant says that he is innocent of the offence charged. That heretofore he was convicted of crime in the county and confined in the county jail a long time as the penalty thereof That he was at a different time prosecuted civilly and convicted of seduction in said county under circumstances which created a strong feeling against him in that part of said county where he was known, and to a large extent throughout said county That he is informed that one certain attorney who prosecuted said civil suit against him as attorney, has caused him to be indicted before the grand jury of this county and that such attorney has caused affiant to twice be arrested and tried before a justice of a peace on the same charge, at which such preliminary hearing affiant was discharged. That said parties have diligently sought to and have manufactured and kept alive a strong public sentiment against him in this county. That the newspapers of the county contained accounts of his prior imprisonment and that he believes such adverse sentiment and feelings have been intensified and appealed to until it will be hazardous and unsafe to try this case in DeKalb county, and he says that he asks this change, not for delay, but that justice may be done.

Signed—C. S. Thompson.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 13th day of March, 1895.

——— Notary Public.

The J. G. Johnson matters in C. E. Emanuel's court, are now done. The decision is that the chattel mortgages held by D. B. Fisk & Co. are good, as for the goods mortgaged at that time. And the mortgage held by Mrs. Johnman is good for the property covered by it. D. B. Fisk is now in possession. The divorce case of Cloy vs Cloy is over, as reported by L. J. Gengler. He also settled a mortgage case without having to sell the property The new case brought on this forenoon is one in which Hibben Cheyney sues Wesley Jackman for a return of purchase money. Cheyney bought a piece of land of Jackson and paid a hundred or two on it. He then found out that Jackman had only a sheriff's deed and could not give a good title. So he now wants the bargain declared off and his money paid back to him. Judge McClellan and C. M. Phillips are Cheyney's attorneys, while Baxter and Roby are for Jackman. The case on yesterday where Shoner sued Wagner on a note, resulted in Shoner getting judgment for full amount against Wagner as principal and Barker as surety. The case between Cheyney and Jackman is still going on.

Saturday's Daily:

The case between Cheyney and Jackman, noted yesterday, went against the latter, and we suppose from that, that Cheyney gets back his money and Jackman has to take back his property. To-day the case of Mrs. Myers, of Garrett, for $5,000 damages against the city of Garrett for injuries resulting from a poor sidewalk, is being tried. We made a mistake day before yesterday in saying that Judge McClellan is her attorney. He represents the city, assisted by Mr Gengler, while Mr. Hartman, of this place, and Mr. Myers, of Garrett, are attorneys for Mrs. Myers. It will likely be a hard-fought case. Two visiting attorneys were in court to-day. Mr. Gardner of Bellefonte, Mich., and W. Severance of Chicago Junction, Ohio. The latter was on his way to Joliet, Ill. He is attorney for the B. & O. at his place

We made an error when speaking of the Norris case vs the B. & O road. He did not buy a ticket as we stated, for the reason that no agent was in at the time So he got on the train without one and in this way the trouble began.

Tuesday's Daily:—

We left the court yesterday working at the Garrett sidewalk case. It went to the jury at 11 at night, and at 8 this morning, they brought in a verdict of $100 for Mrs. Myers for injuries caused by falling on a bad sidewalk. The jury then was laid off, while Frank Powers, as special judge took up the St. Joe gravel road case. Judge McClellan represented the petitioners for the road, and Roby and Emanuel were attorneys for the remonstrators. The case is still on. The following marriage licenses are noted: Wm. F. Zurbrugg to Carrie Grambling; John C. Foulke to Emily Craig; James Shriver to Myrtle Perry.

"BLISS AS A JINER."

OUR CONTEMPORARY UNITED WITH THE RESPECTED AND ANCIENT ORDER OF AMERICAN FIREMAN.

THE Ancient Order of Fireman has been one of the strong undercurrents of Auburn's social fabric Of course its influence and workings lie mainly along the lines occupied by our gallant fire laddies. And always when an initiation of a new and untried member occurs, that evening is at once chalked up on the lodge room walls in red crayon, and stands henceforth as one of their red letter days Last evening the chalk had to be of a peculiarly lurid hue, for the newly admitted was one of the aristocratic caste known as the newspaper guild. It was no less a personage than C. H. Bliss, N. R. P. A. and I. R P. A., Editor of the Times and Author of Bliss' Compendium etc. etc. When the candidate made his appearance, the hose cart was ready, and all the machinery of the order only waited to be touched into motion. The grand H. C. D. received the candidate on the point of a brass nozzle, which was inserted into the mouth of the neophyte and about a gallon of "slackwater" fired into the gaping cavern sending the candidate backward, and laying him on the floor. He was seized by faithful satraps and his feet thrust into two joints of hose, and with these as slippers he was compelled to make the rounds of the lodge room. At each stopping place there was a brief talk, conducted by both parties through a speaking trumpet placed squarely against the small and shell-like ear When the candidate reached the "center of fire and water," (he was blindfolded of course), he was confronted by a "shade" supposed to be the spirit of the Garrett Clipper, and both through a speaking trumpet, swore eternal friendship, and promised not to "roast "one another no matter what came. He then took the oath. "I, Wm. Cosey, do promise by the great horn spoons, that I will remain a silverite till I die, that I will accept the Montana Silver Statue as a gift, if presented to me on a silver salver, that I will forever maintain peace with the Garrett Clipper, and be a faithful member of this order till they want me to work at a fire." A wooden hatchet, some the worse for bad workmanship, was then buried in a pile of stable litter, the two "shades" embraced, and swore eternal fidelity, and were coupled up with a "Siamese twin" and seated on a cake of ice to await the further pleasure of the order. Here the lights went out and the faithful reporter wended his way homeward, saying in a low sweet tone;

"There are more things in heaven and earth
Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in our Philosophy.

ST, PATRICK'S DAY,

IRELAND PATRON SAINT TAKES A BENEFIT TO MORROW, AND HER SONS CELEBRATE.

OVER the world, where any considerable body of Irishmen are settled down together, these sons of the "Ould Sod" are pretty sure to have a good time celebrating "St. Patrick's Day in the morning" March 17 is the day, and that happens this year on Sunday, to-morrow. And though there are but few of the sons of the "Emerald Isle" in this community, we will give a little item for their benefit. They have a tradition that St. Patrick, drove the frogs and snakes out of Ireland and in that way account for the scarcity of these animals in the "Green Isle." The real St. Patrick was a Christian missionary, a priest, who in about the year 450 converted to christianity many of the then wild natives. But the story of his life and good deeds has been greatly distorted in the lapse of centuries since he was with them, as may be partly seen in the following Irish poem, a part only of which we quote:

St. Patrick was a a gintleman
And came o' dacent people;
In Dublin town he built a church,
And put on it a steeple.

Och, Antrim, hill are mighty high,
An' so's the "Hill O'Howth," too
But we all of us do know a hil
That's higher than them bowth, too.

'Twas on the top of that high hill
St. Patrick preached a sermon,
He drove the frogs into the bogs
And banished all the vermin.

* * *

The rason that we Irish lads.
Are all so blithe and frisky,
St. Patrick was the very man
That taught us to drink whisky.

No wonder, for he "had the knack,"
An' understood distillin',
For his people kept a "sheebeen shop"
In the town of Enniskillen,

Of course if the goodnatured saint were alive, he would resent nearly every thing credited to him in the above doggrel, for he was really a good man and did for Ireland and for the world many and lasting services.

FIRST ANNUAL COUNTY C. E. RALLY.

The DeKalb Co. Y. P. S. C E met at the Lutheran church at Butler Saturday March 16, with a very fair attendance which increased as the time passed until the afternoon session found the church filled. The county president J. F. Shuman presided at this interesting meeting. A number of vacancies occurred in the program on account of sickness and some failed to arrive on the early trains. These vacancies were admirably filled by some present. The welcome address by A. M. Laird, of Butler, was excellent and made every one feel they were truly welcome. The response to be given by Miss Baker, of this place, was given by Miss Hoffman, Miss Baker not being present. This was very fine and a credit to Miss Hoffman as it was given without preparation. The address on good Citizenship by Rev. Lineberry, of St. Joe, was given by Rev. W. O. Butler, of Waterloo, and that all echoed his sentiments was shown in the hearty applause. A paper on Practical Temperance given by the county secretary, Miss Curie, of St. Joe, was highly enjoyed and much help was received for this important work. C. E. Finance by J. H. W. Krontz, of Butler, was of great interest to those present as this is an important work. C E Extension in DeKalb Co, by Miss Beyrier, of Waterloo, was taken by Rev. Rose, of Kendallville who is a very forcible entertaining speaker and much useful information was received. The C. E. sermon by Rev J. D. Brosy was given by Dr. Fry, of Waterloo and listened to with great interest. The Junior Hour conducted by Miss Hoffman, of Auburn, and Miss Yeagy of Waterloo, was one of the pleasantest hours spent. It consisted of Devotional exercises led by Dora Willis, of Waterloo, and songs and recitations by the Juniors. Their earnestness and interest showed the great good that is being accomplished in this line. News and notes by H. C. Willis, of Waterloo, spoke of the reliability and good obtained in the religious papers as compared to the secular press; Sabbath observation by Rev. J. A. Albright, of Hudson, was very interesting. The interdenominational sermon in the evening by Rev. F. C. Colvin was greatly enjoyed and very helpful. This was followed by an interesting lecture by Mr. Fuller a blind poet and lecturer. All came away feeling well repaid by the very interesting and helpful meeting.

QUEER FIND

H. C. Shull showed us a queer find today It was a collection of small bones and a jaw bone of another and larger animal that Mr. Pooler found to-day in a hollow log he was splitting into stove wood for Hovey Hanna. The bones were frozen into some black, decayed matter usually found in such a hollow. The smaller bones were those of a squirrel, but the jaw bone was long and straight with very sharp teeth, evidently teeth of an animal that lived on flesh. A part of the jaw was sawed off by the workmen who sawed the log up into blocks. The question is how did these animals come and die in the hollow of a tree?

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

More Spanish Depredations.

Tampa (Fla.) special: Passengers on the steamers which arrived from Havana bring news of reports in circulation of further depredations by Spanish cruisers on American vessels along the Cuban coast. The latest report is to the effect that the Spanish gunboat Arcedo fired into and sank an American schooner off Puerto Padre. It is reported that the crew of the vessel, numbering sixteen persons, perished with it. It is not known whether the schooner had arms or carried an expedition for Cubans. It was reported in Havana that the schooner had sailed from Key West. Inquiries, however, fail to show that any coast boat is missing or unreported except those engaged in legitimate trade. Many sailed recently for West Indian ports with cargoes.

Fatal Fire at Toledo.

A most disastrous fire occurred at Toledo, Sunday. Details are very meagre, but enough is known to state that three persons were killed and two others fatally injured, one of whom has since died. The Wabash round house burned down, and the fatalities were caused by falling walls. Besides the fatalities above reported, nine other persons were injured, but none fatally. Six engines were totally destroyed, involving a loss all told of over $100,000. The persons killed and injured were all spectators at the fire, who gathered too near the walls and could not escape when they began to fall.

A Bad Fire.

The newspaper building on Ontario street, Cleveland, occupied by the World, the A. N. Kellogg Newspaper company, and the United Press, was completely destroyed by fire. The total loss was about $150,000. It is thought that the fire started, through the carelessness of the World porter, who was said to have been smoking in the building shortly before the blaze was discovered. The World loss is about $75,000, the property being partly insured. The A. N. Kellogg company's loss is about $25,000 and the building was valued at about $50,000.

Forced to Close.

The National bank of Kansas City, Mo., failed to open its doors Monday morning. The direct cause of the failure was the unfavorable statement of the bank's affairs given out March 5. In the panic of 1893 the bank suspended, but through an arrangement between depositors and the stockholders it was permitted to resume its business. The steady withdrawal of deposits since that time has placed the bank in an embarrassing position and necessitated another suspension.

Declared a Draw.

In the presence of 1,800 people, at the Suffolk Athletic Club, Boston, Jake Kilrain, of Baltimore, and Steve O'Donnell, of Australia, Corbett's sparring partner, fought eight rounds, and at the close, Referee Patsy Shepard, amid shouts of "Kilrain," declared the contest a draw. It took Referee Shepard five minutes to make up his mind what decision to make. Kilrain had the best of the last round, and at times it looked as if he was going to put O'Donnell out.

Four Miners Killed.

News comes from Minas Prietas, Sonora, Mexico, that an explosion of giant powder had occurred in the Verde mine there which killed four miners and fatally wounded one. The men were blown with terrific force against the sides of the mine and crushed out of all semblance to humanity. The killed are: John Masse, John Roa, Bartola Senig, and Angel Capalini.

Death From Faith Cure.

At Dayton, Ohio, little Lelia Mead, granddaughter of the late Congressman Houk, is dead from typhoid fever. Her mother and grandmother are faith curists and refrained from giving the child the slightest medical attention. The coroner has ordered the remains held pending a decision as to holding an autopsy.

Will Protect Christians.

Constantinople special: The Porte, replying to a protest from Sir Philip Currie, the British Minister, assured him that measures would be taken to protect Christians in Asia Minor. The Porte has also assured Mr. Terrell, the American Minister, to the same effect.

Dwelling Houses Burned.

Two adjoining dwelling houses, at Pique, Ohio, one owned by John Dietrick and the other by Harley Manson, together with nearly all of the contents, were totally destroyed by fire. Loss $5,000. Partly insured.

Fatal Sleep.

Gerhart Sonnefield, a prominent farmer residing in the southern part of Clay county, Indiana, died after a constant sleep of three days and nights. An autopsy was held, and the physicians decided that softening of the brain caused his death.

Mangled by Cars.

Jacob Huber a well-know wealthy merchant tailor of Indianapolis, while attempting to board the trailer of an electric train, missed his hold and fell beneath the wheels. The car passed over his leg mangling it in a horrible manner.

A Bad Disaster.

A special cable from Shanghai says: A terrible disaster has befallen the Chinese troops in Manchuria. Their entire supply of provisions for three months has been captured near Niu Chwang by the Japanese.

A Miner Killed.

Yest Wolfe, while at work in a small mine near Floodwood, Ohio, was killed by a fall of slate. The accident happened in a small mine operated by himself and brother. He is a married man about 35 years old.

Fatally Injured.

Henry Byers, a Cincinnati barber who had just arrived at Columbus, Ohio, to take a situation with W. C. Munsey, fell down a stairway in the Marsetti Block receiving injuries which will prove fatal.

A Vendetta Near Portsmouth.

A three-cornered vendetta has broken loose on Carey's Run, three miles below Portsmouth, Ohio, which is fast assuming important proportions. The Joneses, the Emnetts and the Seymours, who have been on the outs, came together the other night with shot guns and corncutters. The cause of the revival of hostilities was a barbed wire stretched by Emnett between two trees so as to catch the Jones boys, who were in the habit of driving their cattle past this place place after nightfall. The wire did the work, and the Joneses, with the Seymours, a couple of shotguns and some corncutters, came back and stormed the Emnett house at the dead of night. The family was driven out, all save the old man, who fired from a window and severely wounded one of the Joneses, who was left on the field. Both sides have called in their forces, and are arming for a final settlement. In the meantime Squire Boss Foster's Court is busy with peace warrants, and he threatens to make a demand for the militia if need be to put down the threatened disturbance.

TERRIBLE CYCLONE

Swept Over the Fiji Islands With Loss of Life.

Particulars have arrived by the Australian mail of a terrible hurricane which swept over the Fiji Islands a few weeks ago, and the first effects of which are still a topic of interesting discussion. It was in this storm that several large vessels came to grief with lamentable loss of life, and buildings in Suva, the capital of Fiji, suffered very severely. The town is comparatively in debris, having been the center of the hurricane.

Most of the damage appears to have been done about 9 o'clock in the morning of February 7, when the force of the wind was terrific. The hurricane was accompanied by a fearful driving rain, penetrating everything. The storm continued until 5 o'clock Monday afternoon and then gradually calmed down. During the lull some ventured out to see the extent of the damage done. The town was stripped of foliage and on every hand were houses with verandas blown down, roofs half off, bare walls standing or damage of some other form apparent. The most serious reports of damage come from plantations in the group which have suffered terribly. The cocoanut plantations will take fully five years to recover and banana plantations have been totally ruined.

ALL THE TALK.

Cuban Colony of New York Say Spain Meant an Insult.

In the Cuban colony, at New York, the firing upon the American steamer, Allianca, by the Spanish man-of-war, off Cape Maysi, was eagerly discussed and the revolutionists appeared greatly pleased at the possibility of a fleet of United States men-of-war being sent to protect American merchantmen in the vicinity of Cuba. It seemed to them to put the United States on their side. One of the editors of Patria, the revolutionist organ in the city, said: "The man-of-war that fired upon the United States flag was probably the Pelanyo."

When asked why the Pelanyo or any other Spanish war ship should fire upon a United States merchant vessel, he said: "They have done it before and the United States did nothing. They simply wanted to show their authority, and that Spain was guarding Cuba. It was a piece of insolence, and I hope the United States will retaliate. There can be no excuse. I think it is intened as an insult to the United States flag and as a warning to all vessels to stop when a Spanish man-of-war signals."

DUN'S ESTIMATE.

The Pulse of Trade for the Past Week.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: Substantially all indications of the state of business are rather more favorable. Farm products are a little higher, railroad earnings a shade better, clearing house exchanges a small percentage larger in comparison with two years ago than in February, and most of the industries show a somewhat better front, though their gain is not large. Money markets continue undisturbed, the operations of the syndicate still prevent exports of gold and withdrawals from the treasury have of late practically ceased. There is not much enthusiasm about the situation, however, because the gain is slow, and business is yet a long way from what was once considered a prosperous condition. Further, the gain is in some cases due to obviously temporary causes, and in some to causes which do not make prosperity.

Spain Asks for Time.

Up to a late hour Sunday night the State Department officials will not admit that any reply has yet been received from the Spanish Government in answer to the demand for an apology and reparation made by the Secretary of State. There is, however, good ground for belief that a cablegram of some length was sent by the Spanish Foreign Office to the Minister of Spain resident in Washington, and that its contents have been communicated to Secretary Gresham. The purport of this communication is believed to be a concession on the part of Spain that, if the facts be as represented by the Captain of the American steamer, Spain is ready and willing to make the fullest apology. However, in view of some uncertainty as to the case, the Spanish Government asks the United States to join with it in the fullest investigation of all the circumstances.

Will Maintain Order at Any Cost.

New Orleans special: Gov. Foster's proclamation has been issued. It commands all disorderly and riotous bodies to disperse; enjoins all law-abiding citizens to abstain from frequenting places where disturbances of the peace are likely to occur and from all acts calculated to excite the public mind. He declares that as chief executive charged with the duty of enforcing the law he will see to it that through the proper officers of the law the participants in the recent riots are brought to justice and punished to the full extent of the law, and if it takes the whole power of the commonwealth, civil and military, he will maintain peace and uphold the law and disperse and suppress all riotous and disorderly assemblages, and protect all persons in the full enjoyment of their constitutional and legal rights, their lives, liberty, and property.

Alarming Epidemic.

An alarming epidemic is raging among horses in Halifax, N. S., and the disease is easily contracted by human beings who come in contact with the infected animals. Veterinarians pronounce the affection equinal smallpox and many of the most valuable horses in Halifax are victims. The government veterinary surgeon has the disease in his right hand. Another man more seriously affected will have to have his right arm amputated to prevent blood poisoning and still another horseman is believed to be fatally ill as the result of handling diseased horses. The government veterinary surgeon says the disease is atmospheric and any animal is liable to contract it.

China Asks Help.

The Chinese Envoy has solicited the intervention of Russia for the protection of the integrity of China's continental territories, in the event of Japan insisting upon concessions on the Chinese mainland. A Chinese Envoy has gone to Berlin in order to make the same request of Germany, and similar instructions have been sent to the Chinese Envoy at London and Paris. It is added that no request for assistance has been made to the United States, Italy, or Austria.

Spain's Insult.

The Department of State is moving with deliberation in making up its case against the Spanish government based on the firing by a Spanish cruiser at the American steamship, Allianca, holding that in matters of such moment it is absolutely essential that our goverment should be in possession of the exact facts so as to avoid the humiliation of a retraction through making a demand that could not be sustained by evidence.

Wreckage Coming In.

St. Joseph (Mich.) special: Wreckage from the steamer Chicora, which was lost with twenty-four persons on board several weeks ago, is coming ashore at this port. Parts from around the engine room have been found, this being the first wreckage found from that part of the boat. The chair which Engineer McClure used has also been found. Many are now advancing the theory that she went down not far from this port. The ice is breaking up allowing the wreckage, which has been under it, to rise.

Wages Raised.

Mount Pleasant (Pa.) special: Not since the halcyon days of the old syndicate has Connellsville coke workers received such good news as came to almost ten thousand employes of the Fricke and Southwestern Company recently, when notices were posted at all the iron works stating that an advance in wages averaging about 15 per cent. will go into effect on April next. The rate of mining per 100 bushels goes from 78 to 90 cents, drawing from 43 to 50 cents and so on down through the different kinds of labor. The yard laborer is the only person who gets no advance, his pay remaining at $1.20 per day.

An Imposter Sentenced.

The Pension Bureau has been greatly annoyed for several months past by imposters, persons representing themselves to be special examiners connected with the bureau, who have been operating in the State of Pennsylvania and fleecing unsuspecting pensioners. A few weeks ago Special Examiner Martin of Harrisburg, Pa., caused the arrest of Joe Greener, alias Joseph Green, alias "Bucksin Joe," a notorious criminal and expert in this line, who has already served three terms in the penitentiary for similar offenses, and the court sentenced him to the pen for two years and six months.

Fifty Perish.

A cablegram from Troppau, Austrian Silesia, says: An explosion of fire damp took place in the Hohenegge Mine belonging to the estate of the late Archduke Albrecht of Austria. At the time of the explosion there were 280 miners below. Of this number 160 have been rescued, many of them slightly injured. Hopes are expressed that the remaining 120 miners will be rescued.

LATER.—Twelve bodies have been found, and a number of miners, fifteen of whom were injured, were rescued, and it is now believed that not more than fifty perished.

Bank Robbers Thwarted.

A fruitless attempt was made to burglarize A. Wasmuth's bank, at Roanoke, Ind. Burglars succeeded in blowing off the outside door of the large safe, with nitroglycerine, and were at work on the inner door when they were discovered by Chris Regadanz, who was awakened by the explosion. Regadanz gave the alarm and the thieves fled, followed by several shots fired by Regadanz. The bank contained a large sum of money, as it is the only banking establishment within ten miles. This is the second attempt to rob the place.

A Singular Accident.

The French steamer Armenie, which left Marseilles Feb. 27, arrived at Constantinople. The Armenie had on board 166 jars of sulphuric acid, which was stored in the deck saloon. While rounding Cape Matapban during a gale the Armenie was struck by a heavy sea, which swept over her decks and broke ninety-seven of the jars of acid. A frightful explosion followed, demolishing the deck house. The cabins were filled with the fumes of the acid and two passengers died from suffocation. Four others were seriously injured.

Three Babies Killed.

At Welch, W. Va., Vicy Blankinship, an 8-year-old boy, was burned to death by his clothes taking fire at a grate.

At Charleston, W. Va., Reed Lewis, 9 years old, was run down and killed by Kanawha and Michigan train.

At Huntington, W. Va., Georgia Quinn, a 7-year-old girl, was ground to a shapeless mass by a Chesapeake and Ohio train, while crossing the track.

The Kodak as a Detective.

The Pan Handle Company has adopted the kodak method of detecting employes infringing upon the rules. A road detective who was in the act of taking a snap shot at an employe who was swallowing a drink of whisky was discovered and subjected to rough treatment in one of the saloons at Logansport.

Steamer Foundered.

Gibraltar special: The Spanish cruiser Rema Regente is believed to have foundered off Tangier, Morocco, during the recent gale. She had a crew of 420 officers and men. Pieces of one of her boats and semaphore flags are reported to have been picked up along the shore near Ceuta and Tariffa.

A Georgia Lynching.

Amos Gibson, a negro, was lynched in Monroe County, Ga. He had attacked two ladies, Mrs. Martha Waller and Miss Narcisso Hart. Mrs. Waller escaped and gave the alarm. While officers were on the way to jail with Gibson he was taken from them by a mob and hanged to a tree.

Miners Crushed.

James Bridgewater, single, 23 years old, and Richard Allen, married, were fatally injured by a heavy fall of slate in Fairview mine, near Brazil, Ind. Twenty tons of slate covered them, but a bank car shielded them from some of the weight, but both men are terribly injured.

Mother and Daughter Killed.

Mrs. Perry Randall and daughter Mabel were struck by a West Shore train at Tweedspoint, N. Y., and killed. The woman lived an hour with both legs and arms and collar bone broken.

Fatally Scalded.

The 2-year-old daughter of George Hillman, who lives near Petersburg, Ind., was fatally scalded by falling into a kettle of boiling water.

SPAIN CALLED DOWN.

UNCLE SAM DEMANDS A PROMPT APOLOGY.

Secretary Gresham Informs the Spaniards that a Recurrence of the Allianca Incident May Lead to War—Our Flag Must Be Respected.

Tart Note Sent to Madrid.

The most belligerent message dispatched by this Government to a foreign power since the memorable controversy between the Harrison administration and the Chilians has been conveyed through Minister Taylor by Secretary Gresham to the minister of foreign affairs at Madrid. A more downright assertion of American rights was never uttered by Mr. Blaine himself. It amounts practically to a warning to Spain that a repetition of the Allianca affair will be considered by this country as a declaration of war.

The incident is looked upon in Washington as more than the blundering impertinence of a naval commander. The revolution in Cuba has been supported by American Cubans. Key West and New York have furnished the sinews of war to the revolutionists. Public men at the capital have been open in their declarations that the time for annexation of Cuba to this country is near at hand. The assault on the Allianca is taken as an intimation that Spain will stand no further trifling with Cuban affairs.

Mr. Gresham's retort is extremely fiery. In substance, he commands the Spanish

THE ALLIANCA, THE COLUMBIAN LINE MAIL STEAMSHIP FIRED UPON BY A SPANISH GUNBOAT.

Government to apologize and to promptly instruct its naval commanders not to interfere with ships flying the American flag. The friendly relations between this country and Spain have to be considered when war talk begins, but there is no doubt that in any other circumstances the tone of the message would be provocative of a conflict. The message in full is as follows:

"This department is informed that on the 8th inst. the United States mail steamship Allianca, on her homeward voyage from Colon to New York, when six miles from the coast of Cuba, off Cape Maysi, was repeatedly fired upon by a Spanish gunboat, with solid shot, which, fortunately, fell short.

"The windward passage where this occurred is the natural and usual highway for vessels plying between ports of the United States and the Caribbean sea. Through it several regular lines of American mail and commercial steamers pass weekly within sight of Cape Maysi. They are well known and their voyage embraces no Cuban port of call. Forcible interference with them cannot be claimed as a belligerent act, whether they pass within three miles of the Cuban coast or not, and can under no circumstances be tolerated, when no state of war exists.

"This Government will expect prompt disavowal of the unauthorized act and due expression of regret on the part of Spain, and it must insist that immediate and positive orders be given to Spanish naval commanders not to interfere with legitimate American commerce passing through that channel, and prohibiting all acts wantonly imperiling life and property lawfully under the flag of the United States.

"You will communicate this to the minister of foreign affairs and urge the importance of prompt and satisfactory response."

One of the precedents which have been unearthed and brought to the attention of Acting Secretary Uhl as having a direct bearing upon the Allianca incident was found in the proceedings of the Alabama claims commission. In one of the decisions announced by Judge French the court held there was no authority for the stoppage or detention of a mail steamer which is pursuing her usual route, even if that route lay at places within the three-mile shore limit and so within the marine jurisdiction of the power seeking to stop the ship. If this is held to be sound doctrine, then, of course, the Spanish Government will make reparation for the action of its cruiser, even should it appear that the Allianca was within three miles of Cape Mais, as the Spanish minister in Washington believes.

On the other hand, if this decision is not in effect then what is known as the headland theory of jurisdiction will probably play an important part in the adjustment of the matter. According to the contention of Great Britain in the Fortune Bay fisheries case, in which the United States has acquiesced, the line of marine jurisdiction is drawn three miles from a line running across from headland to headland in the case of a bay or a depression in the general coast line. The Spanish authorities evidently take the position at this time, in the absence of exact advices, that the Allianca was within such a line and so within their jurisdiction, although the ship may have been actually more than three miles from the nearest shore.

WHEAT AND RYE.

Reports from Many States Tell of Crop Conditions.

Reports have been received from the Farmers' Review correspondents in Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas on the condition of winter wheat and rye;

In Illinois the wheat crop has come through the winter in excellent condition, the recent heavy blanket snows having proved a perfect protection against adverse atmospheric conditions. Very little freezing out is reported. The plant is small in some localities, but this will prove of no great moment if the crop be not subjected to hard experiences in the way of thawing and freezing. Wheat on clover sod seems doing very well. Rye has been quite extensively sown, and is doing finely.

In Indiana the conditions are the same as in Illinois quite largely. Little injury is reported from freezing. The snow saved it, and prospects are now good, though the plant is in some counties thin on the ground and small. Rye has been very extensively sown, but is in average condition.

In Ohio the crop is everywhere fair to good, though reported uneven in some counties. Rye is doing well and has been quite extensively sown.

Michigan reports conditions good, so far as known, but snow still covers much of the crop. The greatest danger at present comes from ice blankets formed by melting drifts. Rye is good.

The crop in Missouri is not all that could be desired. A good many counties report it only fair or poor, from varying conditions. Too dry weather last fall was one of the principal causes of the present condition. The snow has done much to improve it. Enough counties report the condition as good to bring the whole State up to an average of fair. Rye, where planted, is generally good.

Kansas, as usual, reports greatly varying conditions. Some localities report outlook as unusually good, while others report the crop as badly blown out on sandy land or much damaged, but late-sown is better. Where rain has fallen recently there is a marked improvement. Rye has been sown in quite a number of counties, and is generally good.

Nebraska reports are quite good, although in some sandy localities the crop has been hurt by high winds blowing it out. Too dry is reported in some cases, but a great many counties have excellent prospects for a crop. Rye is, on an average, better than wheat.

In Kentucky conditions are very favorable, most correspondents reporting a high condition. In a few cases where the crop is now poor it is improving rapidly. The snow of the past two months has proved of immense advantage, giving protection from the cold and moisture for spring development. Rye is generally doing well.

As usual, a great many counties in Iowa have sown no winter wheat. In the other counties there appears a great variation in condition. While a good many correspondents report the crop in fine shape, some say that in their counties the outlook is bad. One says: "Half crop; too dry." Rye is fair.

Wisconsin prospects are not good at present. The snow was not so much of a protection as in some other States, and much of the ground has been bare for some time. This has permitted thawing and freezing to an alarming extent. It does not appear to be possible for the crop to escape without a serious disaster, except in localities where snow has remained on the fields till very recently. Rye is not very fair in condition, but is likely to feel the adverse conditions less.

In Minnesota and the Dakotas little has been grown any year, and the conditions will not greatly affect the crop of the country. The conditions are doubtful, both as to wheat and rye where the latter has been sown.

It should be borne in mind in reading the above summary that the States that grow the largest amount of winter wheat report the conditions good, and that the adverse conditions are quite generally reported from States that grow comparatively small quantities. From this it will be seen that the general average of these twelve States is good, and that a large winter wheat crop may be looked for.

REBELS ON THE RUN.

Spanish Forces Are Driving Them from Their Strongholds.

Official information by the Government of the situation in Santiago de Cuba has just been given out. A dispatch received by the military governor of Santiago from General Garrich was forwarded to Havana. In this message General Garrich says that Colonel Santocildes, with 100 men, met a band of 400 insurgents near Guantanamo. There was a desperate battle, lasting for an hour and a half. This battle was plainly seen from the roofs of houses. The insurgents were defeated with a loss of fifty killed and wounded, while the Government troops had but six men killed. Many horses and mules were killed. In his message, General Garrich commends the officers and men of the Spanish troops for their bravery.

CUBAN REVOLUTIONARY FLAG.

MATEGA, THE CUBAN BANDIT REBEL.

It is also reported by the Government that Masso, one of the insurgent leaders in Santiago, says he was misled, but is ashamed to surrender. He says there are only 700 men in the movement at Santiago, two-thirds of whom are negroes. Seven insurgents surrendered to the military governor of Santa Clara. Troops which have been pursuing the insurgents in the Carthagena district have returned, as the province is now tranquil. All is quiet in the provinces of Havana, Puerto Principe, Pinas del Rio and Matanzas.

A WATERWAY TO THE LAKES.

Pittsburg to Be Connected with Lake Erie by a Big Canal.

At last the long-expected canal that is to connect Pittsburg with the great lakes is about to become a reality and Pittsburg's most cherished dream and ambition will be a material instead of a visionary project. Plans for two different routes have been prepared, either of which would be feasible. One is from the mouth of the Beaver river, via the Shenango, to Conneaut Harbor, O., the other through the Mahoning valley, via Warren, to Ashtabula, O. The length of the canal by either route would be about 130 miles. On the former route there would have to be fifty locks and on the other one-third less. The cost is estimated at from $27,000,000 to $30,000,000.

The canal will be an important factor in the commercial and industrial development of the country it traverses. Coal, which, with iron, is found in all that district, is shipped to all parts of the country, so that any and every saving in the freight will benefit the entire United States. About 4,500,000 tons of it are shipped annually by vessels from Pittsburg to the lower Ohio and Mississippi river ports. It will enable the iron industries along the line of the canal to send products to shipping ports at about 37½ per cent. of what it costs at present. The canal will provide the national Government with an easy way to defend the lakes in case of war. It will, by building up the waste places, increase the revenues of the States it traverses or affects.

From a Pittsburg point of view, the canal will boom the city as it has never been boomed before. Pittsburg commerce with the great lakes in iron ore, lumber, etc., amounts to about 7,000,000 tons per year. Along the route of the canal there are fifty-seven furnaces, producing one-fourth of all the iron produced in this country.

C. F. HALL, State Oil Inspector, has made the following appointments of deputies: J. H. Boltz, Winchester; W. F. Daily, Peru; C. B. Dorsey, New Albany; Walter Derr, South Bend; W. H. McGee, Lafayette; J. M. Johnson, Logansport; W. C. Carr, Crawfordsville; W. C. Dorsey, Terre Haute; B. F. Shirk, Muncie; M. J. Bowman, Madison; J. M. Fells, Rushville; L. B. Mills, New Maysville; J. B. Cornell, Goshen; Walter Viele, Evansville; W. D. Sebring, Portland; Theodore Thorward, Fort Wayne; J. G. Davidson, Whiting; R. F. Weems, Vincennes; M. A. Schutt, Michigan City. William McCloud of Linton, Green County, was appointed Assistant Mine Inspector by Robert Fisher.

SEVERAL mounths since a number of prominent employers of the Fort Wayne electric street-railway were discharged just after the employes had made demands on the company. The prosecuting attorney filed a case against the officers of the company charging them with violating a statute of 1893 making it a violation of the law for a firm or corporation to discharge an employe because he was a member of a labor organization. Judge O'Rourke has decided that the law was defective and therefore inoperative, but gave it as his opinion that such a law properly drafted would be constitutional. The case was taken to the Supreme Court. The street-railway employers are backed by the State Federation of Labor.

WHILE playing on the falls at Jeffersonville a number of boys found what appeared to be an upturned flatboat, but on investigation they saw it was a box heavily coated with tar. The box was seven feet long, two and one-half feet wide and two and one-half feet deep. They tore off the top and discovered the skeleton of a man. The skull was indented as if struck by a blunt instrument. The boys ran away and notified the officers. From the appearance of the skeleton it had been in the box for some time. The coating of the tar on the box had a rusty appearance. The spot where the box was found was in a clump of trees known as the "willows," and it was partially hidden in the shore mud. From all appearances there is little doubt it is a case of murder. It is the skeleton of a very large man. The police are investigating the case.

THOMAS BEDFORD, the oldest Odd Fellow in the United States, died at Danville of old age in his eighty-eighth year. The claim made for him that he was the oldest Odd Fellow has never been disputed successfully. He joined the order in Philadelphia in 1828, at the age of twenty-one, that lodge being the fourth lodge in this country. He then moved to Cincinnati and was a petitioner for the charter for the first lodge in that city. He removed from the city, however, before the charter was issued. In 1861 he came to Danville and joined Silcox Lodge, of which he has been a member since. He has been an active member of the order Sixty-seven years. In 1891 he was presented a veteran's jewel by Danville Lodge, I. O. O. F., the exercises being very touching and attracting wide attention. His aged wife is laying at the point of death and will not survive many hours.

PATENTS have been granted to residents of Indiana as follows: John W. Adney, Darlington, steam feet cooker; Charles D. Ames, Portland, assignor to Creamery Packing Manufacturing Company, Chicago, Ill., machine for smothing and finishing exterior of casks, etc.; Augustus Bowser, Fort Wayne, automatic self-measuring apparatus for liquids; William H. Brown, Indianapolis, fire proof floor or ceilling; Daniel A. Gilliom, Berne, mower; Benjamin F. Grant, assignor of one-forth to J. H. Herig, Indianapolis, car door; George J. Herth, Evansville, lock brick; George C. Janney, Muncie, corn planter; George C. Janney, Muncie, as signor of one-half to H. P. Deuscher Company, Hamilton, O., corn planter; Frank E. King, Terre Haute, seal lock; Harris S. Long, south Bend, guide for band saws; Matthew R. Moore, Indianapolis, framing of steam engines; Alex P. Reed, Lincoln, dumping wagon; William Schwan, assignor to E. Over, Indianapolis, casting window weights; Walter S. Southworth, Mt. Vernon, assignor of one-fourth to B. K. Turner, Corydon, Ky., valise lock; Martin L. Webster and P. W. Hutchens, Richmond, steering device for traction engines; James Williams, Richmond, cabinet for typewriters; John F. Woods, Noblesville, apparatus for discharging liquids from gas wells; Charles J. Backhaus, Laporte, cabinet.

ANDERSON has at last solved the problem of city garbage, which has been vexing it for the past year. At a special meeting of the City Council bids were received for the construction of a city garbage furnace at a cost of about $5,000.

CHAUNCEY JONES, ex-County Commissioner, met with a terrible death at his house near Battleground. He had gone out to feed the cows and was gored to death by a vicious animal. He was dead when found. He was 73 years old and would have celebrated his golden wedding in May. He was a prominent member of the Methodist Church and an officer of the Battleground Camp Meeting Association.

THE new fish law makers a "closed" season for fish from April 1 to June 15. The Secretary of State is receiving a great many injuries about it. He says that the taking of fish in any way from any lake in the State of Indiana is made unlawful between those times, this being the spawning season, and there need be no hurry about cleaning up fishing tackle until June.

CHAPTER XIV.

When Roderick found his sister had gone, gone without even waiting to say to him "Good-by and thank you," he looked grieved, but neither surprised nor angry.

"We will not judge her," was all he said. "We ought not—we that are so happy."

"But there is something beyond both happiness and misery—the question of right and wrong."

"Nevertheless, I still say, 'Judge not, that ye be not judged,' especially in a question of husband and wife. Each individual case has its different aspect, which no outsider can quite understand. My darling, let us say no more about it."

And she knew by his manner that he was determined to say no more about it; so, being a wise woman, she also held her tongue.

But all that evening they seemed to breathe freer—certainly he did—thoroughly enjoying the empty house and the quiet fireside, where there was no need to make conversation, but the two sat together in the sweet unreserve and complete rest of married life, as free as being alone, and yet without any of the dreariness of solitude.

"Nevertheless, I mean you to go out into 'the world' to-morrow night," said Silence. "Have you forgotten the dinner at Symington?"

This was the New Year's eve party which they had discussed before Bella, and which Silence had urged him to accept, as it was half pleasure, half business. A certain "man of letters" (good old-fashioned words, and very appropriate in this case, as contra-distinguished from "man of genius") who had talked much with Roderick at the first dinner, had been rash enough to express a wish to see the rejected novel, now lying, forlorn and dust-enshrouded, on the top shelf of the old oaken press. Silence made her husband lift it down, and watched his eye brighten as he turned it over.

"'Nothing venture, nothing win,'" said she, as she rearranged it tenderly and tied it up afresh. "As you say in this very book, dear, 'Take the world at its best, and it will not give you its worst; believe in it, and it will believe in you.'"

"To convict me out of my own mouth, you traitor!" said he, laughing. He had been half inclined to hide his head at home, having grown very weary of late in body and mind, but the light in his wife's eyes lighted up his own courage once more; he consented to do as she wished. "But you, my darling?"

"I shall be glad to get rid of you—I have plenty to do at home."

"Only too much," said he, sighing. "Tell me honestly, was your visitor a trouble to you?"

"Yes, in some ways. But she could not help it, and I did not mind."

"Why did you not tell me?"

She smiled in his face with that half-playful, half-tender, yet wholly determined look she had at times. "Roderick, if you think I shall inform you of all my little household affairs—you, a man with quite enough cares of your own—you are greatly mistaken; I never shall. We will have fair division of labor—you the bread-winner, I the bread-dispenser. Did you not once tell me 'lady' was a Saxon word and meant 'loaf-giver?' which implies that the wife should manage the house and take care of the money. I intend to do it. I can't do your work, but I should be ashamed of myself if I could not do my own without laying the burden of it upon you, who are—slightly incapable."

Roderick laughed outright. "My queen!—as I used to call you—you are beginning to govern in good earnest. But your husband is not afraid."

"He need not be," she said, softly, taking his hand and kissing it. "He will always be stronger and wiser than I, in his own way. And now go to your grand dinner at Symington."

Though he had not liked going, when he really was there Roderick found he liked it very much. He had always been that best type of his sex—a man whom men appreciate, even as the woman whom women are fond of is certainly the noblest kind of woman. And now that his fate was settled, his wife chosen, his home made, taken his place among men as a man and a citizen, ready to help on in the world's work, without doubts or drawbacks, he found his position both pleasant and honorable. Sure of it and of himself, and finding himself among people who evidently neither knew nor cared how much he had a year, and whether he kept two servants or twenty, the young man's spirits rose, and he enjoyed himself heartily—so heartily that it was not until Lady Symington said something about a New Year's gift to his wife, that he remembered what night it was, and how Silence was sitting alone at home. All the party were to wait up together, Scotch fashion, to see "the old year out and the new year in," but he hastily made his adieus and walked off, rather vexed with himself, and yet not much, since he had good news to bring home. And he knew his wife was not one of these foolish women who exact endless outside observances; she was content to lie safe in his heart, knowing that she was as completely a part of himself as that true heart which went on silently beating, keeping fresh all the springs of life, whether he ever noticed it or not.

Walking rapidly through the starlighted night, strangely mild and still, as often happens on New Year's eve, just as though nature took a pleasure in this motionless watch over the old year that "lies a-dying," Roderick felt a softness almost like spring in the air. It seemed to stir all his young blood—he, with life all before him to will and to do. And some of the talk that night had given him a renewed impulse both as to will and deed.

"I must tell her at once. I know she will approve of it," said he to himself.

"It" was an idea started by the kindly "man of letters"—that did Mr. Jardine's imaginative writing fail, there was a subject very popular just now, and likely to attract attention, which, with a little pains, he might examine, read up for, and write about, so as to make an excellent quarterly article, sure of at least a moderate audience. The first step on the ladder, which, if taken cautiously and firmly, might lead him either by literature or politics, or both, to the very top.

"'Fain would I climb, but that I fear to fail.'

Only she will never say to me

"'If thy heart fail thee, do not climb at all.'

She would keep my heart up so that I could not fail. Bless her! I am sure of that."

So thinking, he came to his own door, stepping lightly across the grassy lawn, half in boyish mischief to look in at the parlor window—she liked to keep her light visible—and see what his wife was doing now the household has all gone to bed.

Sitting quitely and alone; beside her a pretty box of sandalwood, which looked like a present, for it had a Christmas card on the top, she was emptying it, layer after layer, and spreading its contents on her lap. Only little clothes—the little clothes that women and mothers think the prettiest in all the world. One after the other she unfolded them, putting her fingers through the tiny empty sleeves, looking at them admiringly, smilingly, and yet again with a strange sadness. All at once Roderick called to mind what Lady Symington had said to him, and her tone of saying it; he had been full of his own affairs just then, and had not noticed much else, but now, as he slipped quietly in-doors, and kneeling down beside his wife, helped her to examine her New Year's gift—man as he was—it touched him deeply.

"And the little fellow only lived seven years, yet his mother has remembered him all this while! Poor Lady Symington!"

He said it with a curious awe, as with his slightly awkward fingers he helped his wife to refold the wonderful little garments, and replace them, as they had lain, untouched, for nearly forty years. Then they put the box away and sat down by the fire, hand in hand, and he told her all his new hopes, new ambitions—the life that somehow seemed opening before him, if only he had strength to carry it out.

"I shall do nothing rashly. 'Authorship,' they say, 'is a capital staff, but a very bad crutch.' I shall stick to the mill at present. But you were right to send me away to-night. It does me good to have something beyond the mill, to mix with men and feel myself one of them, with life all before me, and power to do my work in it, with what poor old Tommy Moore calls, conceitedly,

"'The mind that burns within me,
And pure smiles from thee at home."

That quiet home smile, serene and pure, it beamed upon him now, and his whole heart was satisfied.

"This is the first new year we ever spent together, my wife. Shall we go outside and greet it in the open air, as is our Scotch fashion? My father always did so, and my mother, too—my poor mother!" he sighed. "I wonder whether Bella's being with us will do good or harm? whether they will be thinking of me just now? We always had a grand family gathering at Hogmanay—my two elder sisters, their husbands and children. They never cared for me much; I was a mere boy when they married. Still, to have quite forsaken me! Well, well, I wish them all a happy new year—my 'ain folk,' as we say in Scotland."

Silence had no "ain folk"—only two far-away graves—but she had her husband. He and she walked up and down in front of the hall-door talking of this and that, and especially of his work in the future, which seemed already to have taken a strong hold on his imagination, till in the dead stillness the distant stable clock at Symington was heard beginning to strike twelve.

Until then there had not been a breath stirring, the night was so wonderfully calm and mild, and dusk rather than dark; the half moon, slowly sloping westward behind the house, still showed faintly the belt of trees round the lawn, and even the dim outline of the distant hills. Above, the sky was parseme—no English word expresses it—with myrinds of stars. When the last stroke of the clock ceased, there seemed to descend from it, right down from these mysterious stars, a sough of wind equally mysterious. It rustled through the tree-tops, wandered round the house, and then passed away into stillness, almost like a living thing.

"Listen, listen, Roderick!"

"It is the sough of the air—the old year's last breath. I have often noticed it, and heard other people notice it, too. And now—our new year is begun. May it be a very happy one to you—to us—my darling!"

He kissed her, and then seeing how mute and passive she was, made a little innocent joke about not being able to add the usual Scotch wish of "a happy New Year, and afore the end on't," because she had already got her "man," and must make the best of him, bad as he was, to the end of the chapter.

"Which is such a long way off, my love. Quite alarming. Only to think that thirty, forty, even fifty years hence, you and I may be standing—two old people, old and gray-headed—under these very stars. I remember looking up at them this time last year, and thinking of you, and wondering if we should ever be married."

"You were 'in love' with me then; you love me now. And you will love me even when I am 'old and gray-headed' as you say. I shall love you, Roderick, even when you are an elderly gentleman, and—not handsome at all. Nothing on earth could ever part us; nothing—nothing——"

"What is wrong, dear? Are you cold? We will go in."

"No; wait—just one minute."

He wrapped her closely in his plaid, and she nestled in his arms, but still kept gazing up, far up, into that mystic floor of heaven, which, though we see it every night of our lives, never loses its wonder, glory, and beauty.

"I should like to live to be an old woman; I should like us both to be old, and yet love one another as dearly as when we were young It makes one feel immortal, this love. I should like, as you say, fifty years hence to stand with you under these stars, feeling that nothing could kill our love—or us. But if things were to be different; if this time next year I am—not here, but away—beyond the stars!"

"What do you mean?"

She turned upon him those eyes of hers—"heavenly eyes" he had called them since the day he first saw them on the Terrasse at Berne.

"I may die this spring. Sometimes, you know, women do."

He shivered, but violently controlled himself.

"Yes, I know that; but—you are not afraid?"

"No, I am afraid of nothing—neither life nor death—now. And I would have died, if I might have chosen—died gladly! to have been for this one year—this one happy year—my Roderick's wife, and—his child's mother."

There was such a rapture in her face, that whatever dread her words might have aroused in him sunk down. It was one of those supreme moments when two who are wholly united, as these were, feel that no real parting is possible, that "whatever happens" (as people say), they are one through all eternity.

"Hush!" Roderick said at last, in a broken voice. "God knows best. Let us leave it all."

And then taking her in-doors, he declared that the first of January was no time for moonlight rambles, and that he should abolish them altogether till the summer nights came.

Which seemed a long way off now; for not unusual in the north,

"As the days lengthened,
So the cold strengthened, and a long frost and snow shut up Silence entirely within her own peaceful home. A dull time to most people; but nothing ever seemed to make her dull. Not even when some weeks after Bella's departure, her husband was restless and troubled, evidently expecting some news which never came. One formal letter of thanks, announcing her safe arrival, a month after date, but explaining nothing further, was all Mrs. Alexander Thomson vouchsafed to her brother and sister. She never mentioned her mother at all.

"Evidently Blackhall is tabooed," said he, with a bitter laugh. "Never mind, my darling. Let us give it up, and not vex ourselves about the inevitable."

And by that she knew how, until this moment, he had not given it up; had never ceased to hope and crave for something—the one blessing which no man gets twice in a life-time. He may have as many wives and children as fate allows; he never can have two mothers.

But—and some mothers would do well to remember this—when a man has a wife and his home, his interests and his work, he does not mourn eternally; as Roderick said, he "accepts the inevitable," and turns his mind to other things. Though the young Jardines had a shut-up and rather lonely life, it was anything but an idle one. The MS. novel came back once more—alas! historical novels always do come back nowadays—but the "solid" article did not, until it had become transmuted into a bundle of those delightful proof-sheets which raise into the seventh heaven of happiness young authors, and even old authors can hardly see, without a certain thrill of pleasure, a faint reflection of the time when, as now with Roderick,

"The world was all before them, which to choose; Reason their guard and Providence their guide."

And both reason and Providence seemed to have taken in charge this young author. Roderick had "no nonsense about him." He did not start in literature with a picturesque and imaginative view of his own deservings, and how they were to be appreciated; he worked heartily at whatever came to his hand to do, and consequently he did good work. It might not have been the highest work, or the utmost he was capable of doing—Silence often thought so. She copied his MSS., taught herself to criticise them fairly, to see all the faults she could, "in order to prevent the world from seeing them," as she one day said.

"You see, dear, if you had to be killed, I would much rather kill you myself than let another person do it."

At which he laughed heartily and submitted to all fault-finding and subsequent correction with the best grace in the world "Who knows! Such a severe domestic critic ought to make me a celebrated author in no time. I think I will begin another magnum opus—not a novel, though; and by working at all leisure moments I may finish it before the year is out."

"Before the year is out," repeated Silence, softly. "Yes, yes; but will you not begin it now?"

And she not only got him to begin it, but she kept him steadily at it, copying in the mornings what he wrote over night, and arranging all that he had to "read up," according to his literary friend's orders, so as to give him the least trouble possible. It was hard work, but the mill-work happened to be slack just then, and Mr. Black was very kind and friendly—touchingly so. And thus, from day to day, Roderick's time was kept full, and his mind also.

Keen-Sighted Gulls.

Any one who has watched the gulls and other fish-catching birds along our coast must have discovered how keen is their sight and how cunningly they discover a school of fish long before a fin has disturbed the surface of the water, said Capt. E. M. Bates, of New Bedford. Oftentimes when at sea I've tempted the vision of gulls that happened near my ship, to the great amusement of the passengers. I remember one occasion when the ship was going along at a pretty rapid rate, I noticed a number of gulls following closely in our wake, apparently on the watch for anything that might be thrown overboard.

Going to the cabin I procured a small biscuit and, returning to the deck, prepared to show the passengers the wonderful powers of vision possessed by these birds. Breaking the biscuit into small pieces, the largest of which was less than an inch square, I dropped it into the seething waters, just under the bow of the vessel. It was of the same color as the hissing foam into which it was dropped, and by which it was of course rapidly carried astern. Once dropped, it was utterly invisible to our eyes, and we could only guess as to its whereabouts, but before it had fallen thirty yards astern a large gull detected it, and with a headlong dart dipped into the foam and secured it. With equal dexterity the other bits were picked up, one by one, the gulls at last venturing so close to the vessel that they seemed to be watching our movements with their large, bright eyes.

A Remarkable Dam.

One of the most remarkable dams in the world for height and construction is that by which the Vyrnwy River (Northern Wales) is enabled to supply water to the city of Liverpool, some seventy miles distant.

In building this dam a great trench was at first excavated across the valley for a length of 1,100 feet, a width of 120, and a maximum depth of 60. The masonry was started in this trench. It consists of irregular blocks of slate wedged together and thoroughly bedded in Portland cement mortar, the faces being formed of cut stone blocks fitted together with great care, the greatest height of the dam being 161 feet.

Its most remarkable feature is the lack of any channel to carry off floods, the surplus of the lake flowing down the front of the dam, which is curved to permit as free a descent as possible and prevent the formation of eddies at the bottom. The lake formed by this main dam covers an area four and three-quarters miles long, from one quarter to five-eighths of a mile wide, and holds largely over twelve million gallons.

The aqueduct leading from the intake tower to the distributing reservoir, about two miles from the city, is sixty-eight miles long, and consists principally of a large cast-iron pipe line from thirty-nine to forty-two inches in diameter. There are a number of reservoirs and tanks along the line, and at one place is a great filtering plant.

The polo, or ole, is an Andalusian dance of Oriental origin. The music is slow and melancholy, while the dance is full of wild contortions of the body, the feet being hardly lifted from the floor.

Wagner, the composer, spent no small share of his time when a boy in the police court, where his father was the clerk.

HERE has been so much talk regarding the better lot of the working American girl if she would accept a position in some one's kitchen rather than go into a shop or factory when necessity compels her to do something for her livelihood, that after considerable thought on the matter we have come to the conclusion that it will certainly do no harm if we state our reasons for thinking the latter a natural choice for the woman born under the stars and stripes. From the time she opened her eyes upon this very trying world she has been told that she was born free and with no question of social distinction to bother her whether she be rich or poor. But when she grows up and is forced to work for her living she very plainly sees that domestic service is the sole employment in which she can be told that she is inferior to some one else.

Now, born with all the instincts of an American, and proud, even when to put that pride in her pocket would mean pecuniary advancement, is it any wonder that she does not want to go where she must call another woman mistress; where she is not allowed to eat at the same table with those in whose house she lives or enjoy the rooms that others under the same roof occupy as owners? In the shop and in the factory she may recognize others as her superiors in business, but that is a very different matter from having to acknowledge it in the more personal relations of mistress and maid. She may return from her work to a poorly furnished, scantily heated room, but it is her very own and no one can call her from it to attend the bell or light the kitchen fire. She may walk home to a household of struggling adults and children whom she claims as parents and brothers and sisters. Their lodgings may be much inferior to the room in the house of Miss Croesus which as her maid she would be privileged to occupy, but she is with her family; she is regarded by them as a veritable wonder; she receives their homage and their admiration. Is it any wonder, then, that she does not see any advantage in being employed as a servant in a land where freedom is the watchword, and independence her brightest possession? Would she be benefited by sacrificing these? Honestly, we have to answer that she would not.—Philadelphia Times.

New Zealand's Lady Mayoress.

Onehunga, a flourishing little town of about 4,000 inhabitants on the north island of New Zealand, has the honor of having elected the first lady mayoress ever chosen on British soil. Mrs. Yates has for years borne a prominent part in all movements looking to the improvement of Onehunga. It was natural, therefore, that when New Zealand recently bestowed the franchise on qualified electors of the fair sex the inhabitants of the lively little place turned to her as one on whom they could depend. Mrs. Yates had not contemplated elevation to civic honor of such altitude and was at first too fearful of responsibility to consent to the use of her name. General assurance of adequate support and continued pressure overcame her fears, and she was elected chief magistrate of the place. Latest accounts indicate that her townsmen and women will have no cause to regret their choice.

MRS. YATES.

Girls, Learn to Cook.

A girl who deliberately marries without understanding the art of cooking is committing a—well, the law of the land does not call it a crime, but the unwritten law of the home certainly does constitute it a crime.

Especially is this true of those in modest circumstances who cannot employ efficient cooks. Burnt fingers, sour bread, scorched roasts, leathery steaks, wishy-washy coffee and disordered stomachs are not conducive to the happines that one imagines the honeymoon should be filled with.

There are so many reasons, logical and philosophical, why cooking should be included in the accomplishment of young girls that it is useless to enumerate them. Good cooking is the basis of happiness, health and success in the home life. One may thoroughly understand art, music, architecture, science, and philosophy, be familiar with astronomy, mythology, the mysteries of evolution politics and literature, yet if the chemistry of a loaf of bread has been neglected the education is sadly incomplete, so far as the "house mother" is concerned.

Want Married Women Shut Out.

A petition is being circulated in the Hartford (Conn.) shops where women are employed praying that the general assembly enact a statute requiring that unmarried women be given the preference in shops and factories where women are employed. The legislation is desired to prevent married women whose husbands earn good wages from working in shops, to the exclusion of single women, who have to support themselves and frequently relatives also. The principle is by no means new, and the cry has gone up elsewhere than in Hartford that married women who have homes and husbands should not usurp the places needed by women dependent upon their own exertions.

Belongs to a Fire Company.

Some women are surprised in one way, some in another, but few more peculiar surprises face a woman than that which has come into the life of Mrs. Maria Lawrence. It has just come to her knowledge that she is an honorary fireman and a member of a hook and ladder company of Palmer, Mass., where she lives.

Mrs. Lawrence gave largely to assist in fitting out the hook and ladder company several years ago, and the company made all who contributed over a certain sum honorary members. Mrs. Lawrence happened to be one of the largest givers. She is a wealthy widow and was rather surprised to find that if she wanted to ride on the hook and ladder truck she could.

Her Daughter's Husband.

A traveler saw a woman take a man by the collar, yank him up the steps into a railroad car, jamb him down into a hot seat near the stove, pile up a valise and two big brown baskets with loose covers and long handles at his feet, and say:

"Now sit there until I help Mary Jane on the car, and don't move till I come back."

When the woman reached the door the traveler said to her:

"Is that man your husband?"

"N-a-w!" roared the woman. "He's my daughter's husband, and she hasn't spirit enough to say her soul is her own."

In married life, as in everything else in this world, there is everything in beginning right, and the very beginning is when the young man and the young woman who are to comprise the future married couple receive their first training in early childhood. There are countless men like him who seek the club as a relief from home because their wives do not know how to manage husbands by making home pleasant.—Frances Hodgson Burnett.

Husbands and wives should try to manage themselves rather than each other. Each should make it a point to always observe and practice after marriage all the courtesy, thoughtfulness and unselfishness common to the "engagement" period. Neither should ever listen to a word of unfavorable criticism of the other from any relative of either, no matter whether that relative be father, mother, brother or sister. Any list of rules for the management of husbands, or wives either, need not be extended beyond these two.—Marion Harland.

The very best way for a woman to manage her husband is for her to immediately set about the study of her husband's needs, moods and foibles, with an earnest aim to strengthen and help him in every emergency with all the love, patience and charity of which her nature is or can be made capable. There are scores of miserably unhappy homes in which both husbands and wives unite in declaring marriage a failure which might be made havens of peace and joy if the wife would only try to become better acquainted with her husband in the way I pointed out.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

NECKTIES ARE ALWAYS NEW.

Mr. Feathers Learns the Secret of Mr. Ginks' Attractive Assortment.

"I am somewhat curious by nature," said Mr. Feathers recently, "and some time ago I was struck by the remarkable number of new neckties worn by young Mr. Ginks, who sits opposite me at our boarding-house table. I proceeded to study them, and after a week or two I discovered that they were not only always smooth and fresh, but that their appearance was regulated according to their hues. For two days he would wear a black and gray tie, for instance; then a black flowered red ground affair would creep out from his bosom, and then two or three more combinations would be worn. At last I could restrain myself no longer and I asked Ginks to explain to me his necktie system. He looked mysterious and beckoned me to a secluded corner.

"'Mr. Feathers,' he said, earnestly, 'I feel that I can confide in you thoroughly. The scarfs you have so kindly admired are five in number, and are all I have. I wear one until it gets soiled, and then I drop it in gasoline outside of my window. After the liquid has evaporated I take the scarf in and every sign of dirt has disappeared. By doing this in rotation with the five ties I keep up an appearance that would cost more than I could afford if I depended upon new ones.'

"I thanked the young man for his very interesting information," said Mr. Feathers in conclusion, "and I do not doubt that many others like him know the value of gasoline as a cleansing article, and put it to good use. I hope they will use it in the open air, however, as it is a very volatile and inflammable liquid and is liable to explode if exposed in a room where there is a gaslight or a fire"—Washington Star.

SURNAMES IN IRELAND.

Murphy the Commonest, but Smith Holds Its Own.

One of the curiosities of recent philological literature is the appendix to the 1893 report of the British Registrar General, which bears the suggestive title, "Surnames in Ireland." From that compilation one who has an eye for the curious may glean facts and figures for a most interesting article. For instance, it is shown that the most common name on the Emerald Isle is Murphy, the number of persons, great and small, who bear that cognomen being 62,600. The following come next in order of frequency: Kelly, 55,900; Sullivan, 43,600; Walsh, 41,700; Smith, 33,700; O'Brien, 33,400; Byrne, 33,300; Ryan, 32,000; Connor, 31,200; O'Neil, 29,110; and Reilly, 29,000.

The compilers of the article under consideration have very accommodatingly made a comparison of the above with the commonest names in England and Wales, which shows the following interesting figures: Commonest names in Great Britain, exclusive of Scotland and Ireland, Smith, 253,006; next, Jones, 242,100; next following being Williams, Taylor, Davies and Brown, in the order as given. In Scotland the order is: Smith, McDonald, Brown, Thomson, Robertson, Stewart and Campbell.

The tables show that in Ireland many of the old Celtic names appear, both with and without prefixes "O" and Mac." For the benefit of those readers who may never have seen the explanation, it may be said that, as a rule, "Mac" or "Mc" means "son of," and that "O" stands for "descendant of."

As far as local distribution is concerned, the Murphys are most numerous in Carlow and Wexford; Byrne in Dublin and Wicklow; Kelly in Kildare; and Sullivan in Cork and Kerry.

A WOMAN'S WATCH.

Travels All Over Her Person in Search of the Fashionable Resting Place.

The watch feminine, says the New York Times, shares the prerogative of caprice with its wearer; it is, like her, free from monotony. Last week it swung from the belt by a chatelaine clasp, yesterday it was tucked in the corsage by a slender fob chain, to-day it perches on the left shoulder, steadying itself by a matching brooch, or tucks itself under a filigree circle of gold or silver; to-morrow, according to the fashionable jeweler, it will do neither nor any of these things, but suspend itself from a short chain, which is strongly attached at each end to a gold pin. When these pins are caught to the bodice of a gown the watch swings between, the length of the chain being sufficient to allow the slight leeway.

It is an idea already developed by one woman that the for the moment useless fob chain can be adapted to this new attachment by a very simple means. Let the catch that snaps to the watch be removed, carefully be reserved for future use, and a decorative pin made fast in its place. The tiny ball at the other end is mounted on a pin, and the thing is done.

Quizzing as a Fine Art.

On the occasion of Lord Melville's trial before the House of Lords, Hook had a seat among the spectators. He could not resist the opportunity of mystifying his neighbors, a lady and her daughter from Sussex. When the Bishops appeared in their state attire—wearing scarlet and lawn sleeves over their doctors' robes—he confidentially observed to the lady:

"These are not gentlemen; they are ladies, elderly ladies—the dowager peeresses in their own right."

When the Speaker of the House of Commons appeared, and attracted attention by the rich embroidery of his robes, the lady inquired:

"Pray, sir, who is that fine-looking person opposite?"

"That, madam," said Hook, "is Cardinal Wolsey!"

"No, sir," cried the lady, with a look of angry disdain, "we knows a little better than that; Cardinal Wolsey has been dead many a good year!"

"No such thing, madam, I assure you,' replied Hook, with imperturbable gravity; "it has been, I know, so reported in the country, but without the least foundation; in fact, those rascally newspapers will say anything."—Temple Bar.

"Do you think a girl ought to learn to cook before she gets married?" asked the practical man. "Yes," replied his dyspeptic friend. "Either that, or else she ought to be willing not to try."—Washington Star.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY,.....MARCH 14, 1895

Thursday's Daily:

J W Boss, of Fairfield, was in town to day. He is a brother to Mrs A B Richards.

LAWYERS claim that the new Income Tax Law is safe and will be declared constitutional.

ARTHUR SAUER, of Defiance, was arrested in Chicago yesterday, and last night taken back through here. He was bookkeeper of a bank and got away with $1,500.

NOW LET the people of all political faiths study for the coming two years how to make the next legislature up of decent material. Indiana's good name is at stake.

FAWCETT, the Lagrange postmaster is likely to be removed on account of the recent scandal, and it is said that McNagny, though no longer a congressman, will choose a successor.

GOV. MATTHEWS claims he can sign bills after Saturday noon. Lieut. Gov. Nye says it would be illegal and refused to sign for the senate. So several needed laws were killed, and there is hard feeling between the two officials.

A REPUBLICAN exchange says "the McKinley law went into effect without a jar and with perfect smoothness." This shows a poor memory. So many articles rose in price then that no law of any sort ever caused such a big kick. The present law is the one that did not cause a jar.

THE Nicholson bill will be a law about the middle of the summer, when the laws are published.

SOME unknown members of the legislature stole eight copies of statutes. But the House voted $120 to pay for them just the same. They did not steal the state house, though they tore up the chairs to fight with.

MYRON D. KING, the Governor's secretary who was injured in the riot in the State Capitol Monday night is still very weak. He breathes with difficulty owing to the rib that is broken pressing on his heart. Yesterday, he had fainting spells. But his doctor believes he will soon get better unless inflammation sets in, in the region of the broken rib.

ONE of the new laws gives the Allen county commissioners a regular salary of $1200, We think our commissioners get about $250 and they do nearly as much work. But Allen county happens to have over 65,000 inhabitants, which fact brings it within the scope of the law

Friday's Daily:

MYRON D KING is reported better. If the improvement continues he will be able to go before the grand jury in a week or so, when he will testify as to how the riot was begun and who were the persons that prevented the governor's secretary from bringing into the House, laws signed or vetoed by the governor.

JUDGE O'ROURKE, in Ft Wayne court has decided that the act of 1893 that intended to make it an offense to discriminate against a man because he belongs to a labor organization, is null and void because it does not make make the act an offense. Either we should have less constitution or less law. The two do not seem to mix well.

THE new silver party should know that all its leaders are owners or shareholders in silver mines, and are taking this step to compel Uncle Sam to buy all they produce at high prices. Suppose we organize a "wheat party" to compel Uncle Sam to buy all our wheat at $1 a bushel The one reason is as good as the other. In a free government like ours no class should be favored.

CLAIMED that horses at Halifax, Nova Scotia, have small pox.

INDIANA makes all the wood rims for bicycles now on the market.

PEACE between China and Japan is in sight.

FT. WAYNE'S big bicycle show began yesterday, and continues to day and tomorrow.

SUIT has been commenced to test the constitutionality of the new law, changing the time of electing county superintendents from June to September.

SILER men, urged on by J. S Clarkson, of Iowa, once postmaster-general, and a strong republican, are trying to buy the Chicago Inter Ocean and make a republican-silver paper of it. Both parties will likely be divided on this question

THEY WILL VISIT ASHLEY

The Rathbone Sisters at Ashley will celebrate their anniversary next Friday evening and they have extended invitations to the Sisters of Auburn. So on Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock, they will depart for Ashley in carriages, to join in this celebration. The ladies of Ashley have made arrangements to serve supper at the hotel where they arrive and will also serve a lunch after the exercise. We feel quite confident this will be a fine occasion, and hope our ladies will be more successful in this journey than they were last winter.

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

Many persons have been suffering from poisoning from poison ivy or sumac. Mrs Emma Plum is among the number and thinks in her case it may have occurred by handling money from customers who were victims of poison.

Mrs. Ona Smith, nee Brand, died Saturday afternoon at the home of her parents, on this place, Mr. and Mrs. John Brand. The funeral occurred the following Tuesday afternoon at the residence. It seems but a brief time since Mrs Smith left Waterloo a blooming bride with her husband, to make Chicago their home. Perhaps the cutting lake winds were too severe, but that fell destroyer, consumption, seized upon her and cut down her young life.

BUTLER.

The County Christian Endeavor met here last Saturday in the Lutheran church, and had a very interesting session. Representatives were here from nearly all parts of the county.

Jacob Marks living four miles northwest of town is very ill with meager hope for recovery.

Mrs. Phebe Lowe widow of Edwin Lowe, has purchased the Bontrager farm three miles northeast of town, and will move there in the near future. Mr. Bontrager has purchased the Wanemaker dwelling on east Oak street, and will occupy it soon.

Miss Lizzie Champion, of Angola, is visiting with her sister, Mrs J A. Campbell, on east North street.

Rev. Cain closes up his ministerial labors in the M. E church next Sabbath for this conference year. His return for another year is requested as doubtful.

A great deal of sickness prevails in this vicinity, severe colds, lagrippe, Measles, and kindred complaints.

CORUNNA.

Say Ed. do you always pay when you bet? Hey?

Mrs Daniel Zonker is very sick, and we understand that her recovery is very doubtful.

John Bailey, of near Auburn, was on our streets one day last week.

Mrs. Sarah Johnson, of Goshen is visiting her sister, Mrs. Wetrman.

Rev. J. A. Sanwat preached his farewell Sermon at the M E church last Sunday evening.

Fred Ward was over in Steuben county last Wednesday and Thursday looking after his farm.

There were ten car loads of hogs Shipped from here last Thursday to Olds Bros. Wagon Works in Ft. Wayne.

James DeLong and family returned home last Tuesday, after a two week's visit in Ft. Wayne.

Milo Thomas got tired of burning a lamp all the time, so he built a glass tower (we suppose that is the name of it) on the top of his store building, with a chute, we are guessing at the name of this also extending down through the second floor, thus furnishing plenty of daylight for his office.

Our Babe.

Budded on earth to bloom in heaven.

Mildred H., infant daughter of Charles and Myrtle Towsley, of Elkhart, died March 8, 1895, aged 6 days.

Another tender bud has gone
To bloom with Him who gave.
Another darling little babe
Lies silent in the grave.
God wanted little Mildred
To join that heavenly band,
Then lent His tender loving smile
And clasped our darling's hand.
It rests within His bosom,
Freed from sorrow, pain and care,
And by simply trusting Jesus,
We'll meet it over there.

BIG TRIP HAMMER.

By the kindness of Mr Vann, the foreman in the blacksmith department of the Kiblinger factory, we took a look at the big trip hammer that was put into position a few days ago. It is a sort of iron giant and when at work gives one an idea both of its power and its skill, for it has skill of the most pronounced sort. Its work is to weld axles which it can do "with neatness and dispatch" These steel buggy axles are brought here in halves and must be welded together at the middle in order to make the full axle. This has heretofore been done by hand, but the increasing need of some speedier method, has made the addition of this new machine necessary. The two parts of the axle are placed to the proper degree and put together on the trip hammer in a slot made for that purpose and the big hammer smashes down on them and the two are made one in a jiffy.

LAST DAY OF SCHOOL.

No. 4 in Jackson township closed the year's school last Saturday by holding a public school day. The patrons of the school, and parents from outside the district came in, made a greatly interested audience. There was speaking, reciting and music, and at the proper hour, a fine dinner was enjoyed. All speak highly of the work of the teacher, W. H Zigler who has given excellent satisfaction wherever he has taught

OBITUARY

Mary Moyer, wife of Henry Bachtel, was born in Holmes county, Ohio, Feb. 6, 1834, age 61 years, 1 month and 9 days. She was married to Henry Bachtel in 1852. In the fall of 1859 they emigrated to DeKalb county, Indiana, and thirty-two years ago moved on the farm south of Waterloo where she lived until removed by death. To them were born nine children, of whom three preceded her to the heavenly home The husband and six children remain to mourn the loss of a beloved wife and mother. Sister Bachtel united with the U. B. church twenty-four years ago and lived a consistent christian until the Master said, "It's enough, come up higher" She was not only a faithful attendant upon public services, but was delighted in helping in all the various branches of church work, and anxious for the salvation of others. She stated to the writer during her sickness that she was ready to go home. Her husband remarked that he could not spare her She replied that the Lord had been very good to them, sparing her life until their children had grown up and He would care for him also. She was a noble woman, always looking to the bright side During her sickness her faith never wavered She did the family good by saying, "I am going home. I am at rest; and I am so glad! I am so glad! She also gave directions as to the minister and all the funeral arrangements. The funeral was at the U. B. church, March 17, 1895, Rev. S O. Fick and Rev. S P Kontz officiating; after which the remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at Waterloo May the great Head of the church grant to all surviving ones a reunion in heaven. PASTOR.

A COSTLY WIND.

A Playful Gust puts its Foot in at Bishop & Lackey's Big Window.

The wind don't stop for expense when there is fun ahead, and is no respecter of persons Just about 11 o'clock to day it played a costly joke at the north end of the big window at Bishop & Lackey's. The wind came whirling around by that entrance and flung one end of the awning rod or support around against the big pane that makes the slanting part of the north end of the big bay window. The blow cracked the glass, shivering it in all directions from the point of fracture. The next gust drove in the big and little fragments, which striking the curtains and other fine articles utterly ruined them One curtain alone is worth $10 and quite a quantity of millinery goods was spoiled. Take the window and the goods together it will be no trifling loss besides the inconvenience of having an open space at that end.

PRIMARY EXERCISE IN LATIN.

During a recent conference at Wabpeton, Minn., several of the ministers were visiting the Red River Valley University at that place, and were taking in the Latin class. One of them chanced to pick up a copy of Cæsar belonging to a very popular young lady student, and found the following poem on a fly leaf of the book.

Boybus kissibus
Sweet girlorum;
Girlibus likibus,
Wantisomorum.
—N. Y Evening Sun.

FIRST SUGAR OF '95

The first crop of the new sweetness made its appearance in town this afternoon It was brought in by Henry Husselman who lives north of town about two miles. He always makes maple sugar and as sure as the season rolls around you can see him here with either sugar, or syrup or both. It seems to us, it would pay our farmers to save their sugar camps and get some revenue for the product. We presume so few do because they would be obliged to work in the bad weather that generally prevails in sugar making time

D. Y. Husselman has received his certificate entitling him to practice before the pension bureau at Washington. In other words, he is a full pension attorney and prepared to do all that kind of work for the old soldiers.

Hillsdale (Mich.) Telephone-News:—Auburn, Ind., now has a daily paper, the DAILY COURIER, published by James A. Barns, editor of the Weekly COURIER. Mr Barns is one of the oldest and most careful newspaper men in northern Indiana, and commenced the venture after long and judicious consideration. The spirit of the enterprise shown by the business men and manufacturers of that city warrants an almost certain success of the new venture.

Supt C. M. Merica came in from the north on the 3 o'clock p. m. train from Ashley where he was visiting the schools, and instructing the School Board on taking their enumeration, making transfers and annual reports and collecting corporation tax. Ashley is situated partly in both counties and the trustees there consequently have had considerable trouble with these matters. Mr Merica reports the schools in a flourishing condition with four teachers and an enrollment of 173 pupils in that new town.

NEBRASKA SUFFERERS.

Recently we published a letter showing the receipt of aid, by the people to whom it was sent, and we now, by the kindness of M. B. Willis report more of the good work. The following letter from the president of the bank at Stratton, Neb, was accompanied by receipts he had taken for the various sums he paid out where it would do the most good.

STRATTON NEBRASKA March 6 1895.

M B. WILLIS, Sr Auburn, Ind.

DEAR SIR:—

Some time since Mr John Zimmerman of your place sent me the sum of $60 for the relief of the needy of this place and requested me to report to you the disbursement of the same with receipts of the parties obtaining the relief. I have endeavored to the best of my ability to have these funds reach the class for which it was intended, the deserving poor. I hand you enclosed receipts covering the full amount sent. Thanking you in behalf of the unfortunate whose needs you have ministered unto, I remain,

Very truly yours

NIGHT WATCH BAKER.

Seven years ago last Sunday evening Henry Baker began his service as night watch in this town and has been continually in the harness since. He has had a great variety of experience in that time, some of which was of an exciting and dangerous character. An example of this occurred the night when the safe blowers got in their work in the Ensley & Harter store, now Bishop & Lackey's. It was then in the Grager House building. The burglars overpowered Mr. Baker, bound and gagged him and had one of their number with a cocked revolver stand over him till they had accomplished their work. Lying half an hour on his back on the cold, damp ground in cool weather was a severe strain. It goes to prove an assertion in the "Pirates of Penzance" that,

"Take one thing with another,
A policeman's life is not a happy one."

But Mr, Baker is still at his post of duty in spite of its hardships.

FASHIONS ARE OLD.

Those who think certain fashions are new, should stop and think a little. Take our present fashion of big sleeves for ladies. Many of the older people can remember back fifty or more years ago, when ladies wore sleeves almost like those now in use except that a small pillow was used to distend the sleeve instead of crinoline, etc, now in use. And as if this were not ancient enough, we find an allusion to the same thing in the Old Testament Scriptures. In Ezekiel 13th chapter and 18th verse we find this:

And say, Thus saith the Lord God; Woe to the women that sew pillows to their armholes and make kerchiefs upon the head of every stature to hunt souls Will ye hunt the souls of my people and and will ye save the souls alive that come unto you?

The case from Garrett is not yet settled but may be finished to-night.

One of George Paulen's horses died yesterday. He brought a load of logs in from the country and the horse took sick. It was taken to Dr Fitch, but was so near gone that medicine was of no use. It is quite a loss to Mr. Paulen.

J F. Thorne, of Huntington, was in to see the COURIER Friday, He reports everything getting along fairly well down there. He is a relative of the families of Henry and Peter Shaffer, and had been spending some days with them.

Dr G E. Emanuel, formerly of Grand Rapids, Mich, has located in Edgerton and aside from his regular practice is making a specialty of chronic diseases and diseases of the eye, ear and throat Dr. Emanual is a brother of C. E. Emanuel.

The A. B. Nickey & Son's band saw mill is still running day and night. They expect to continue night work for about six weeks yet. It is surprising at the amount of lumber being piled up in their yards. They are now using the bottom near Cedar creek as it is farther away from the mill and in less danger of fire.

The Kiblinger company will this year double its largest output of buggies. It will crowd the 10,000 mark by the time the year is out. Take the output of this and the Eckhart and Zimmerman factories and we venture to say no town of its size in the country sends out as many finished buggies and carriages as Auburn.

Six years ago Saturday Lodie, the little son of S S. Potter, at their home in Antwerp, Ohio drank a few swallows of lye. He was not old enough to know what it was, but from that time till now, has not been able to eat much solid food, and has lived almost entirely on milk for the lye seems to have injured his stomach. Occasionally he can retain a small amount of food.

W. B. Preston, one of the teachers of Newville township, called on us Saturday He closed his school there Friday and reports good success in his school this year. As an evidence of the esteem in which he was held by the school, his pupils in the fifth grade, six boys and six girls came with him to St Joe this morning where a negative of the pupils and their teacher was struck off, so the pupils and teacher could each have a pleasant reminder of their recent pleasant relations.

There was a wild runaway on the streets Saturday evening. Fred Roesch was hitching up Charles Eckhart's horse at Tout's livery barn, when it got the start on him. At the Glazier House he managed to get it partly under control, and was getting back to the barn, when it got free and ran south and turned west on 9th street and then ran full tilt into Fred Sedtman's buggy which was standing on the south side. Both buggies were badly used up, but the runaway horse got mixed up with the harness, the buggy and some of the trees on the square and was caught.

COURT.

The gravel road case tried before F. M. Powers yesterday involved the question of granting an appeal from the commissioners' to the circuit court. The judge has the matter under advisement. John Yarde, as administrator for Wm. Sanders' estate, has a case vs the B. & O. for killing Sanders in 1890. This came up to-day with T. R. Marshall, of Columbia City, as judge, He granted a change of venue to Steuben county where he expects to hear it next term. Roby & Shuman are for the estate and J. E. Rose and Judge Collins for the road. Barton Shaffer vs B. & O. for killing stock was settled to-day, the road paying him $50. Clerk Moody is still confined to his house.

WILL EDIT A PAPER.

The Sorosis ladies at Angola will edit an edition of the Magnet on Saturday of this week, March 23. It will be called the "Woman's Edition of the Magnet," and they have the proceeds of the advertising and the sale of papers. Copies will be sent down here and will be on sale at Willis' news stand Mrs. Le Sure writes us that no pains will be spared to make the edition one of unusual value and interest. It is a sixteen page paper and will reach here Saturday morning. We will be pleased to see our people patronize them.

A BUGGY EVERY FIFTEEN MINUTES.

The Kiblinger factory had the biggest pay roll last Saturday, that the establishment ever had. The roll now shows about 140 names. A part of the force has been working till nine or ten o'clock, especially in the blacksmith department. They turn out about forty furnished buggies each day, or at the rate of one for every fifteen minutes. The two other factories Eckhart's and Zimmerman's are also full of work. Altogether our manufacturing interests are in a high state of prosperity.

The proposed law prohibiting the printing of advertisements on the United States flag is of course a great stroke of patriotism. Next let us have limitations placed upon the use of George Washington's picture in any save purely patriotic connections. What this nation needs above all things is a few hundred more purely sentimental laws with no foundation in reason or common sense.

The strength of a nation is in the intelligence and purity of its people, and that intelligence and prity are best secured by the circulation among them of the elements which contribute to the health of body and mind; and this circulation is brought about by their protection in the enjoyment of personal security, the advantages of education, and wages adequate to their proper maintenance.

An Eastern paper tells of the arrival of an emigrant steamer at the wharf of Philadelphia direct from Liverpool. It had on it "two crazy men," "several weakminded children," and "one poor woman whose friends at Manchester paid her way to Philadelphia." The Commission of Immigration refused to allow fifteen of the steerage passengers to land. But the chances are that all will get in. They usually do. It is too costly to carry them back.

However much there may have been of religious prejudice and bigotry in the mob gathering at Savannah, it is clear that there was no religion. The lecturer who had engaged to make assaults upon Catholicism had as much right to speak his mind as Ingersoll had a right to deride and decry the Bible in a Jersey town. What either says is not a fact because he chooses to make assertions, and no cause claiming to be good can possibly be benefited by mob demonstrations designed to close the mouth of a speaker. The cries of a mob, the missiles they hurl, are mere evidences of savagery. They do not answer allegations. Free speech is an essential of the republic. It is guaranteed by the fundamental law of the republic. The reputable school of belief that cannot maintain itself and its following by intelligent representation to intelligent beings of the grounds for its existence can find no support in resort to mob violence. No intelligent supporter of the Catholic church countenanced the mob violence at Savannah. It was the work of anger, ignorance, and fanaticism.

R. M. Wallace, a private in an Illinois regiment during the war, writes to an Atlanta paper that in '64 or '65 while encamped near Savannah, Ga., he purchased of a young lady living near there a cake of corn bread and gave her in payment $10,000 in confederate bills. If she is living he would like to hear from her. Mr. Wallace must not expect to find her the same gay, blooming, bright-eyed maiden she was then. Thirty years make a great difference in young women.

The railroad conductor who assaulted a native of Ceylon because he would not go to the smoking car, robbed the passenger of his 1,000-mile ticket and caused him loss of a trunk of tea, all because the conductor thought the Cingalese a negro, will learn something to his advantage in reading the civil rights law, and he will teach a costly lesson at the same time to the company whose agent he happened to be. The affair happened in Illinois near the southern border. There is no law in Illinois depriving people of any race or color of the right to travel in any class of cars they pay for so long as they conduct themselves in an orderly and decent manner. The Ceylon merchant must have thought he had suddenly waked up in China and was getting a dose of mandarin justice.

English mineral statistics show that a few years ago the average value of the coal produced in Great Britain was about $1.25 per long ton of 2,240 pounds, while for 1893 it was $1.66 per ton. In Germany the average value of the coal output was nearly the same, and in Belgium the cost was somewhat higher. In the United States the recorded value of the output of bituminous coal for several years past has not averaged much more than $1.04 and in some States the average was only 86 cents. The increased cost of production in the United Kingdom is due to the greater depth of working necessitated by economic conditions, the restrictions and the increased outlay entailed by the mines-regulation acts, and changes in the wage scale. On the other hand, the greater command of capital and the use of more economizing machinery and other improvements in handling have enabled some other coal producing countries to produce more cheaply than in former years. As a consequence of this double movement the British Isles are falling back relatively in coal production. In 1870 they produced about three times as much as United States. In 1881 the ratio was 2 to 1, and now the two countries have practically come abreast of each other. The London Times notes this fact and admits that the increase in the United States would have been much greater if petroleum and natural gas had not taken the place of coal for fuel to a large extent.

Popular Styles in Hats.

The continued liking for large sleeves has made popular and harmoniously effective the wearing of large hats, writes Isabel A. Mallon in the Ladies' Home Journal. Advance notes from Paris tell of the popularity of large hats in black straw, and with them feathers that are also black. Much care is taken in the arrangement of these tips, and the hats are so shaped that they permit an artistic arrangement of trimming, and yet are comfortable on the head. These large hats are narrow at the back and flare in front, while the brims are bent in fantastic ways to suit the wearer.

Very often a hat is seen that has a crown of close and a brim of open straw, a very good contrast being formed in this way. In the straws, the colors most popular are, first of all, black, then all the browns from golden to seal, light green, dark and light blue, gray, light yellow and the so-called white which comes very close to yellow. Elaborate hats, intended for driving or garden party wear, have lace brims formed of the very coarse white lace and crowns either of straw or velvet. Trimmings incline toward the side, either to the back or the front as is becoming.

Feminine Ingenuities.

Of the multifarious uses of the hairpin, some at least, are well known. They are suggested by a French traveler's description of a pin which the Indian women of Peru wear as a fastening for their shawls. Its head is in the shape of a spoon. In fact, it is a spoon and a shawl pin in one.

It is odd, the Frenchman says, to see a woman pull out the pin, letting her shawl drop from her bare shoulders, and proceed to use it for eating her soup or porridge. After the repast she passes the bowl of the spoon carefully between her lips two or three times, gathers up her shawl, and fastens it in place.

The same women use their slippers instead of pocket-books—a point in which they may be said to have the advantage of their North American sisters, who, having no pockets, or none within comfortable reach, are compelled to carry their purses in their hands.

The money of Lima consists of banknotes, which go very well into the bottom of a slipper. As to the effect upon the bills, perhaps the least said the better. There is an old saying that money always smells sweet.

German's Porcelain Stoves.

Another thing to pester the foreigner in winter will be the heating arrangements. The German himself is never warm enough. There are times in his life when he is almost warm enough. If you tell him about it he will say that it is because he does not want to be any warmer, and he probably does not. There are few dwellings even in Berlin heated in any other way than by the old porcelain stoves, artistic-looking monuments, often of great size. When they are not heated these stoves are as cold as a china plate. When they are doing their best, they are never so warm as to prevent one from standing up and embracing them. It is intended to build one fire per day in these affairs, then lock them up and let them radiate. Wood, peat and other punk fuels are used for this purpose. That they do not get hot corresponds to all the known laws of scientific physics. How many hundred years these stoves are to be used yet, perhaps nobody is competent to say.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

QUESTION PROPOSED FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

Let Our Leaders See that They Understand the Money Question Before Assuming the Role of Teachers—Object Lesson for Farmers.

Campaigns of Education.

With the close of the Fifty-third Congress the "campaign of education" on tariff reform may be said to have closed. It is not likely that the tariff law as a whole will be touched again for a dozen years, and the only changes that may be expected will be in the way of lowering the duties from time to time as the revenue increases beyond the needs of the Government. There will be no more general overhauling of tariff schedules. Whatever else the "campaign of education" has accomplished, it has instructed the people that much, at all events.

That "campaign of education" may be said to have begun in 1876, when the Democratic National Convention declared that "custom house taxation shall be only for revenue," but, in fact, the question was hardly discussed, the issues of the war being still paramount. Not much progress was made in education, however, for in 1880, when the Democrats declared for a "tariff for revenue only," late in the campaign, when Conkling and the Republican leaders suddenly challenged debate upon the question, the Democratic orators were so laughably incompetent to discuss it, or explain what they meant, that the party was most ignominiously defeated. Never was a party that had such prospects of success up to the last weeks of the canvass so utterly overthrown and routed through the sheer ignorance of its leaders as the Democratic party was that year.

Truly enough, there must be a "campaign of education," and the education must begin at home! For the next four years the Democrats studied tariff "for revenue only" so assiduously that they omitted to make their tariff plank quite so strong in 1884. Nevertheless the question was debated mostly by the Democratic orators from the revenue standpoint, and they carried the day.

But the Senate then, as it has ever since, stood in the way of tariff reform, and again the question was submitted to the people in 1888, with the result that tariff reform was given in charge to its enemies. The resulting McKinley law, and its subsequent repudiation by the people, need not be emphasized here as being the culmination of the "campaign of education."

The question proposed now for educational purposes is that of finance. In the light of past experience with such campaigns would it not be well for the leaders on both sides to see that they complete their own education first before assuming the role of teachers?—Chicago Times-Herald.

Look Out for Better Times.

It is not easy, says the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, to see why the trade of the country should not, from this time forward, show signs of healthy improvement. During the last two years of severe depression, business has undergone a thorough purgation. Its unsound elements have been almost entirely eliminated. Prices are, as a rule, low beyond all precedent within the last generation and, from all appearances, have touched bottom. There is in no branch of business any unhealthy element of speculation. In every form of enterprise, liquidation has removed from credit the last vestiges of insolvency, and the complaint among merchants and bankers is not about the status of buyers or borrowers, but of their scarcity. Outside the purely economic conditions affecting trade, there are now virtually no causes calculated to disturb confidence in the results of current commercial operations. The tariff has ceased to be an element of commercial distrust. At present, all indications suggest that no serious attempt will be made to materially disturb the new basis established by the Wilson act. The industries have already very generally adjusted themselves to the changed duties; and we hear of no important complaint that manufacturers find the new conditions incompatible with earning their former rate of profit, while some branches of trade are deriving acknowledged benefits and stimulus from the change. It is not to be overlooked that all commercial crises are attended by certain self-curative processes. They lay a safer basis of confidence. They weed out the impaired and effete; replace the weak in resource by the strong; and substitute old plant and methods by the most improved, so that industry makes a great economy in its operations. Thus in view of all the conditions at present affecting the business situation, it appears quite allowable to anticipate an early appearance of better times.

Cheap Coal in New England.

Within a few days the New York and New England Railroad Company has contracted for 50,000 tons of bituminous coal from the Beech Creek region of Pennsylvania, to be delivered in Boston at a cost of $2.50 per ton. This should lay the Nova Scotian bugaboo, which has been scaring the Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia coal operators who have predicted ruin to their New England trade as the result of the reduction of the duty from 75 cents to 40 cents per ton.

The placing of this large contract indicates that the Pennsylvania mine-owners still have a firm hold on the New England market. The Nova Scotia coal dealers are offering their coal in Boston, duty paid, at $2.85 per ton—a price which the domestic miners are able to meet without difficulty. Although Nova Scotian coal has not yet secured the New England market, the reduction of 35 cents in the duty seems to have been a substantial benefit to that section by forcing down the price of American fuel. For the coal which the New York and New England Railroad Company has just bought at $2.50 there would have been paid $3 last year, and $3.25 in 1893.—Philadelphia Record.

A One-Sided Bargain.

Mr. McKinley said recently: "We want foreign markets for our products of agriculture and manufactures, but not at the loss of a home market." He did not go on to explain, however, how our surplus products are to be disposed of. It takes at least two nations to make commerce and we can as easily be shut out from Europe as we can shut Europe out. And why does Mr. McKinley go back to the tariff and put off the financial problems with the meaningless equivocation that there is wisdom and patriotism enough in the country to relieve us of our monetary troubles?—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

An Object-Lesson for Our Farmers.

All American planters and farmers may profit immensely by noting the last census returns of Canada, showing a very distinct decline in the agricultural population of the seven Canadian provinces. The Halifax (N. S.) Morning Chronicle, quoting the census figures, says:

"While the farming population of the four original provinces of confederation increased from 476,922 in 1871 to 619,331 in 1881—the low tariff period—an increase of 142,409 in the decade, the farming population of Canada, as now constituted, declined 7,206 in the high tariff period from 1881 to 1891. The decline in the four old provinces was 36,277. The decline in the three maritime provinces was 18,965. These facts prove as clearly as facts can prove anything that the protective policy has been a burden and an injury to our farming interests. It has rendered farming less and less profitable, and accounts for the delay in agriculture."

It adds that in order to restore the pristine glory of farming, upon the prosperity of which the prosperity of all other industries largely depends, "we must reverse our fatuous protective policy and inaugurate a policy of freer trade, lighter taxation, clean and economical administration."

Though we in the United States have recently lowered our "protective" tariff somewhat, it is still inordinately high and presses with most unequal and disastrous effect upon agriculturists, who can sell their cotton for only 5 cents and their wheat for only 50 cents, while they must pay prices enormously and disproportionately higher for their clothing and other articles of consumption—all for the protection and enrichment of a few manufacturers, monopolists, and trusts. Both our own and Canadian agriculturists have suffered untold woes and losses aggregating many hundreds of millions of dollars through tariff-taxation. Unless they now combine against the "protectionists" and work earnestly for freer trade their future is dark and hopeless indeed. They must beware of being fooled by the false plea that "the tariff is not a tax."—New York Herald.

Europe for Europeans.

The Chicago Times says: "Now that the chickens have come home to roost it ill befits this nation to play the baby act. Europe is in dead earnest to give us a dose of our own medicine. Its ports are closed against American products. By their radical consistency in going the 'whole hog' the European statesmen are proving themselves most jealous students of Mr. McKinley and his brilliant school of political economists. America for Americans has been dinned so long into their ears that they have come to the conclusion it might be a good thing to have Europe for the Europeans. If protection is a good thing for America, why should it not be for Europe? The stronger the armor of protection the greater certainly must be its blessing. And why should not that form of protection which kills foreign competition entirely, namely, absolute prohibition of importation, hold the greatest blessing? In the logic of McKinleyism there is no answer to this chain of reasoning. Europe has finished its course of studies in American economics, and is turning, as is its undoubted right, from theory to practice. It is, indeed, not for the high-tariff philosophers to dispute the position taken by the continental governments. National selfishness is, according to them, the highest form of national wisdom."

A Consistent Protectionist.

From a protectionist point of view Mr. David B. Jones, of San Francisco, is quite consistent when he proposes that California shall levy protective duties on the products of the Eastern States. But as this is not feasible under existing political conditions Mr. James boldly proclaims that the Pacific States should secede from the Union and set up themselves. In this way alone, he says, can the Pacific States secure commercial and industrial independence. He is convinced that secession can be accomplished without shedding one drop of blood. Something like this was heard on the eve of the civil war in 1861, when it was urged that the "erring sisters" should be allowed to go in peace. But the erring sisters didn't go. The fact, however, that Mr. James placards his business establishment in San Francisco with a proclamation for secession indicates that he is not alone in entertaining this treasonable sentiment on the Pacific coast.

Weavers' Wages Increased.

The effects of free wool are seen in increased production of textile goods and in the increased wages which manufacturers are compelled to pay to secure workers. Wages have been advanced in more than a score of large textile mills since last August. On March 8 Bromley Brothers, one of the largest manufacturers of carpets in Philadelphia, granted their art square weavers an advance of 6 per cent. in wages, to go into effect at once. The sixty-three manufacturers of ingrain carpets in Philadelphia were also reported to favor the adoption of a uniform schedule of wages in all the mills. The weavers are selecting delegates to confer with the manufacturers and it is likely that wages will be advanced in certain mills and not reduced in any.

Since 1890 wages have declined rapidly in the textile industry. Free wool has stopped the decline and made conditions favorable to the workers.

The death is recorded at Alexandria of Sir Constantine George Zeroudachi, a Greek merchant, who was knighted by Queen Victoria in 1883 in recognition of his assistance to the British authorities after the bombardment of the city. He handed over his stores for the use of the sick free of charge and spent a large sum of money in providing for the comfort of the wounded and the sick.

NOTES ABOUT SCHOOLS AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

Laughter in the Schoolroom, Not Always Out of Place—Sarcasm Should Be Avoided—Compulsory Education—Brief Hints for the Teacher.

A Little Laughter.

A burst of laughter greeted me as I neared the entrance to Miss Bright's room. Doubtful as to whether I should enter, I stopped a moment; but knowing there could not be anything wrong in that class, and feeling sure that their teacher would not consider my visit an untimely intrusion, I knocked and stepped in. The children looked the picture of happiness and merriment, while Miss B—— was trying in vain to control her risibles.

With an effort she managed to regain her wonted gravity, and touched her silvery toned bell, when quiet again reigned and all looked very orderly and attentive. "You didn't know we were such a jolly class, Miss Lee?" she said. "We do not often make so much noise, but we were enjoying a good laugh over the funny experience of 'Mother Hubbard and her dog.' Freddy brought his Christmas book, and I was reading the story aloud when we became so uproarious." What is so refreshing as the unrestrained and unaffected laughter of children? "Cold water to the tired soul and food for the hungry mind," it is said to be by one of the sages. I begged that the story might be continued, and so the remaining verses were read, while the children sat with parted lips and sparkling eyes that danced from the teacher to each other with most infectious merriment.

I thought as I left the room what a pleasure it is to be in a good-natured atmosphere! Good humor was the standard rule in this class. Orders were given with the necessary firmness, and yet with a pleasant tone and manner that always insured cheerful and happy obedience.

No doubt some of my readers can recall teachers they had in their younger days who possessed the "knack" of creating cheerful atmospheres, and who carried sunshine with them wherever they went. They can doubtless recall others of a "nagging" disposition, who succeeded in producing instead a feeling very far removed from good humor.

The habit of good nature is one that needs to be cultivated in all parts of teaching, but especially among the little ones. Children are such brilliant reflectors. If we happen to be dull and dispirited, how quickly we see the same dark spirit taking possession of our scholars; but if, instead, we are bright and cheerful, we see the glad light of a happy heart reflected from every little face in the room.

It is from Joseph Addison's cheery pen that we have the words, "There is nothing that we ought more to encourage in ourselves and others than that disposition of mind which in our language goes under the title of good nature." . . . It is more agreeable in conversation than wit, and gives a certain air to the countenance that is more amiable than beauty.—The New Education.

Sarcasm in School.

There is no truth in sarcasm. The teacher who is sarcastic to her pupils will evidently lose their respect and confidence. Character cannot be formed with sarcasm. It is born neither of kindness, generosity, nor love, and it is axiomatic that no teacher can develop or improve the morals of her school unless these qualities are possessed. The untrained mind and heart of a young child are open to all pure and good influences. The true teacher will be careful that nothing falls from her lips that shall lower herself in the children's estimation.

If in recitation a dull boy makes a ludicrous statement, do not make a stinging, jesting criticism of it that provokes a smile from all the other members of the class. The boy will not easily forget your bitter remark, and the thought of it will produce an indifference that will be noticed with regret by the teacher. It will take days of carefully guarded efforts of kindness and courtesy to erase the effects of one taunting, sarcastic remark.

Sarcasm is a violation of true politeness. It is an excellent thing to be witty, but the teacher should know how and when to use her wit with her pupils. The shy girl in school who is the subject of the teacher's sarcastic wit grows shyer and less fond of her teacher, and the boy who happens to be overgrown and clumsy is glad and happy when the sharp little teacher leaves. Before a teacher makes sarcastic, brilliant remarks it would be better to think whether it be kind, and if such a course would be a model worth imitation.—Ella M. Powers, in American Teacher.

Students' Plot Failed.

Students at the Boston University Law School neglected the lectures and knew they were in no condition to take the recent examinations. So they contributed to a pool to bribe the printer and get from him the examination questions. The pool is said to have been $100. The young men discussed their plot in the room of one of their number and an inquisitive landlady overheard the details. She told the faculty and a counter plot was arranged. The conspirators received an entirely new list of questions and miserably failed. They agreed to stand by each other, but each man passed a very unpleasant hour with the faculty. Three of them confessed, and it is said that all of the offenders will be dismissed in disgrace.

New Era in Text-Book Writing.

Our best text-books, said a school teacher the other day, are getting to be more and more like the best newspapers; they give a clear and comprehensive outline of the whole story in the opening paragraphs, so that the student sees at once where he is going and what he is going for. We are all infants of a large growth. We are always asking: "What for?" When a child is taught to say that a State is bounded on the west by a river and on the north by something else, he says to himself, either consciously or unconsciously, "Well, what of it?" When he is told that a line is imaginary he inquires: "Who imagined and what did he do it for?" All these questions the scientific writer of textbooks endeavors to answer as far as possible.

Hints to the Teacher.

Your duty to your pupils is not measured by the size of your salary.

Keep your voice down to the conversational key. A quiet voice is music in the school room.

Seldom repeat a question. Train your pupils to a habit of close attention, so that they can understand what you say the first time you say it.

Give your slow pupils time to think and speak. The highest praise given by an English inspector to a teacher was that he allowed his slow boys time to wriggle out an answer.

Train your pupils to recite in good English, but do not worry them by interruptions, while they are speaking. Make a note of incorrect or inelegant expressions and have them corrected afterwards.

To have the pupil sit erect and look at the teacher is not always to secure attention. He may do all this and still his mind be engaged in something else, or perhaps not engaged at all. You must secure the genuine article and not the bogus, and in order to do this you must test the attention by proper questioning. The tactful teacher will find various ways of applying proper tests.

It is to be feared that in the teachers' profession there are more hard workers than hard thinkers. In these days when cut-and-dried methods are so abundant, and ready made model lessons can be had for the asking, the teacher who is so inclined can work very earnestly and diligently and tire himself very thoroughly without much thinking, just as the horse in the treadmill. Teachers, put brains into your work.

Compulsory Education.

The usual compulsory education law is before the Pennsylvania Legislature and even Delaware is catching the fever. It is probably useless to argue with the average legislator who catches this compulsory fever. He is usually a man of ideas, and unfortunately so thoroughly blinded by his prejudice on a question of this kind, that argument and adverse experience alike fail to convince him of his error. What is needed is not compulsory school attendance, but better accommodations, more attractive school rooms, better qualified and better paid teachers, and the best of teaching. When we get all these the cry will be not for compulsory education but for increased accommodations that all may attend. Where the banquet is appetizing and attractive, no trouble will be found in securing the attendance of guests.—Educational News.

Not a Test of Progress.

The ability to repeat the lesson off the book is not a test of progress, for the pupil may do this without having any knowledge what the words mean; nor can his understanding of the lesson be always taken as such test, for this may come from the teacher's explanations. It is only when the pupil can gather the ideas from the book by his own efforts and make from them his own deductions and express the results in his own language, that the teacher has any certain evidence that the pupil is making progress and gaining power.

The first English high school in America was established in Boston in 1821.

In the military schools of Germany, French is being dropped from the course of instruction and English substituted.

Newberry College, Newberry, S. C., has a bill before Congress to secure $15,000, for damages done to the building during the war.

The building which the University of the City of New York will erect on its old site in Washington Square will be ten stories high, and cost $700,000.

The State Normal College, Florence, Ala., is one of the leading institutions in the South for training teachers. It had three hundred students last year from eight States.

It is the general verdict of principals of schools in Philadelphia that after the third trial of promotions on the judgment of teachers for better selections result than from the examination method.

Ex-Governor Pennoyer of Oregon has endowed a scholarship of $3,500 in Williams College, Williamstown, Mass., to the memory of his son, Horace Nathaniel Pennoyer, who died last November at the college hospital.

Raleigh is trying a new experiment in grading. The organization of its schools is somewhat similar to that of the English schools. The old-time "grade" gives place to "forms." Three terms cover one year's work, and are themselves subdivided. Pupils are promoted three times a year if they deserve it, and on each subject as they are successful in passing the required examination. The same pupil may recite in two or three different forms.

The cry still comes from the higher institutions of learning for a better teaching of English. Teachers in all grades of school can do no more important work than that of giving close attention to the systematic work of teaching the principles of English. The twaddle indulged in lately by so many lecturers in advising the abandoning of grammar has already done an incalculable amount of mischief, which is constantly making itself apparent in the high schools, and making it almost impossible to build a higher education on a foundation that is found to have no substantial elements in its composition and structure.

A dance alphabet has recently been invented by a Russian professor who has devoted fifty-two years of his life to teaching dancing in the Russian Imperial College. His invention consists of minute figures which represent every conceivable position the human legs can asume. With these and certain small characters like dashes and accents he is prepared to write any dance. The music is printed as usual and just beneath it are two lines for the dance characters, one for the gentleman, the other for the lady, representing the various positions each assumes while the music is being played.

The Hayward Verdict.

Mr. Harry Hayward also has a very poor opinion of juries.—Washington Post.

Harry Hayward's bet of $10 that he would be acquitted of the charge of murder showed bad taste and had judgment in about equal proportions.—Washington Star.

The verdict will be indorsed by the general sentiment of the public. It was an awful crime, and the murderer deserves the full penalty of the law.—Baltimore American.

Among those who have followed the testimony in the Ging murder case there will be little doubt that the jury, in convicting Hayward, has brought a most desperate scoundrel to justice.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The conviction of Harry Hayward for the murder of Miss Ging in Minneapolis was expected.—It was the only thing to do. He has shown himself to be a vicious and dangerous person, and the life he led could lead only to State's prison or the scaffold.—New York World.

It is a grewsome thought that the news that a human being, full of life and abounding activity, is to be put to death should be accepted by any other human being with satisfaction. Yet that is unquestionably the feeling of the whole community over the verdict of the jury in the case of Harry Hayward.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Spring Medicine

Is so important that you should be sure to get THE BEST. Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven its unequaled merit by its thousands of remarkable cures, and the fact that it has a larger sale than any other sarsaparilla or blood purifier shows the great confidence the people have in it. In fact, it is THE Spring Medicine. It cures all blood diseases, builds up the nerves, and gives such strength to the whole system that, as one lady puts it, "It seemed to make me anew."

If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla for your Spring Medicine, do not buy any substitute. Be sure to get

I would often have to stop when going up-stairs on account of palpitation of the heart. I had no appetite and a distressed feeling in my stomach. I resolved to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I took two bottles and have not had a spell of sick headache for four months, feel well, work all day, and eat heartily. My friends remark how well I am looking. I think all nervous, run-down people ought to take it, especially nursing mothers." MRS. S. ASHWORTH, Eaton, O.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

A Hog in a Well Sixty-five Days.

A remarkable circumstance is reported to the Covington (Ga.) Star from Rocky Plains district in Newton county, one which almost surpasses credulity, but which is told by gentlemen whose veracity cannot be questioned.

On the 25th day of December last a young hog, weighing about 175 pounds, was missed by its owner, Mr. Wesley Mitchell, who was living on the Hollis farm, and it could not be found anywhere. It was a pet hog and was finally given up as lost.

On the farm there is an old dry well, now about 30 feet deep, and on Wednesday last, the 27th of February, as some men were plowing near the well they heard a noise in it, and upon examination found it to be the long lost hog, which had been in there since Christmas. Ropes were secured and it was soon gotten out, alive and all right, except that it had become rather poor during its long confinement in the well without food. The hog is all right and hearty with but slight loss of flesh from its long fast of sixty-five days in the well.

This is the most remarkable instance of the enduring qualities of the hog ever heard of and proves that Newton county hogs are the best in the world.

New York Chivalry.

The old woman who for years has sold papers upon the steps of the old Herald building, at Ann street and Broadway, was ruined and restored to fortune in less than one minute the other day.

The incident is chiefly notable because it developed the fact that chivalry still swells in the bosom of the universal New Yorker, high and low.

In an unguarded moment the wind caught her stock of papers, and away they went like a flock of white pigeons. She raised a cry and the great crowd broke ranks and started each man after a paper. She got them all back in a few minutes—fifty newspapers, and a man for each one. A well dressed man who had overtaken and captured one kept it and dropped her a quarter.

At Interest 100 Years.

One hundred years ago Benjamin Franklin left a fund of $5,000, which he directed should be put at interest and left to accumulate for a century. When that time had come round, according to the directions of the splendid old philanthropist, half of the money thus accumulated should go to some good public purpose for the benefit of the people of Boston. The other half was to be put aside, as in the first case, for another century, at the end of which time the State and the city should be equal partners in the fund. Now, arising from the $5,000 there is an aggregate of something near $700,000, half of which the trustees will use to build and equip an industrial training school, one of the best uses to which the money can be put, and one which Franklin would surely approve if he were living now. The board of alderman and three ministers of the oldest religious societies in Boston are the trustees. Next week they are coming to Washington to learn as much as they can about the manual school here, and they will visit nearly all the large cities of the United States on the same mission.—Washington Post.

The Cucumber Explanation.

"As cool as a cucumber" is a phrase which is common enough, and yet I will wager a good deal not one person in a dozen who uses it knows the true inwardness of the comparison.

It is a queer fact, but a cucumber is always one or two degrees cooler than the surrounding atmosphere. It was, of course, at first a scientific discovery, and from that start the knowledge gradually trickled through the pates of the masses until the above catch phrase was evolved. That stuck, but the information which led to its adoption seems to have fallen into "innocuous desuetude." You will find the same thing true in other instances of "old saws," most of which are explainable on excellent logical or scientific grounds; but the facts on which the different proverbs were originally founded are, for the most part, lost in oblivion—whatever that may be.

Coffee Consumption in the World.

Mr. A. M. Woolson, President of the Woolson Spice Company, gives to the Toledo Blade statistics showing that the United States consumed 4,375,000 bags of coffee of 132 pounds each in 1894. Germany consumed 2,025,000 bags; France, 1,030,000; England, 230,000; Russia, 250,000; the world, 10,875,000 bags. It will be thus seen that the United States consumes more than two-fifths of all the coffee used in the world.

ONE OF EDISON'S SCHEMES.

It Failed Through the Kindly Consideration of a Freight Crew.

"It was while Thomas A. Edison and I were co-tramp operators together years ago that the then very amusing genius of the great inventor was made manifest and utilized by him to subserve his purposes in obtaining sleep while on duty at a small town in New York State," said Colonel L. C. Weir, President of the Adams Express Company, to a Cincinnati Enquirer reporter. "We had both secured positions as operators at the railway station, I being the day and Mr. Edison the night man. As Mr. Edison's whole mind was absorbed in his electrical studies he spent his entire time when off duty and supposed to be sleeping in his experiments, and when the time for him to relieve the day man came he was very much physically and mentally fatigued. In fact I have seen him come in the office to begin his day's work almost worn out. But fortunately there was little for him to do other than answer the calls sent over the wire every two hours by the dispatcher to ascertain if all the operators were on duty. To Edison to have to keep awake for such trivial duties as this was very trying, and though then quite a noviate he conceived of a plan by which he could sleep and wake in time to answer the calls.

"It was this: Near his instrument he placed his cot and over the head of that he placed a bucket. By means of a rubber tube he conveyed the water from an overhead tank to the bucket, which was so constructed that within less than two hours enough water would be conveyed from the tank to the bucket to completely fill the bucket, and when it began to pour over it would drop in his face, awakening him in time to answer his call. By this means he continued to make his electrical experiments through the day and sleep at night and answering every call for three months, when one night a belated freight was sidetracked at his station. The night was very sultry, and the crew sought the office for water. They discovered the bucket almost full of water, and also Mr. Edison sound asleep. Without awakening him they emptied the contents of the bucket, supposing it to be drinking water, and departed. The call came. Edison slept soundly on, oblivious of all about him. The bucket refilled just as the succeeding call went over the wire. Springing up, he answered it, and the question, 'Where were you when the previous call was sent?' greeted his ears immediately and was a puzzler until he glanced at the old office clock and saw he had slept four instead of two hours. Frank and brief was his reply, 'Asleep.'

"'Report at the office here to-morrow and get your time,' spoke the dispatcher, and the next day we were tramping for new pastures. It was several days afterward before Edison learned of the secret of the failure of his new invention to do its work at the proper time and cause his dismissal. He swore me to secrecy at the time and I had not thought of it in years before until just now."

How Whittier Tried Her.

In 1877 a great fair was held in Boston under the direction of prominent philanthropists. One evening Whittier made his appearance, and was escorted from booth to booth by Mrs. C., one of the committee. As the two reached the Portuguese table, which was under the special supervision of Mrs. C., Mrs. Robert C. Winthrop espied the poet.

"Mr. Whittier," said she, "I have already spent one hundred dollars at this table, but if you will write me an autograph couplet I will contribute ten dollars more."

Taking a block which lay on the table Whittier wrote:

"Rejoicing that the humblest fame
May change at charity's sweet claim
To gold of God, I give my name.
—John G. Whittier."

"O, Mrs. Winthrop," said Mrs. C., "may I copy it?"

"No," answered Mrs. Winthrop, laughingly, "I've bought and paid for this, and I'm not going to give it to anybody."

Mrs. C. and Mr. Whittier passed on. Said the kind-hearted poet: "Does thee want the little line?"

"O, Mr. Whittier, I do want it so much."

"I will write it for thee, if thee wishes it."

"Oh, but I'm afraid that would not be honorable, would it?"

The good Quaker replied: "Thee is right about it. I was testing thee."

"But you tempted me awfully, Mr. Whittier," said Mrs. C.

On reaching home, however, she found the "little line," which Mrs. Winthrop had read aloud, safely treasured in her memory.

They Live at Sea.

Steamship agents are not at all surprised at the allegations that have been made against an American woman of some property, who is now the subject of a suit to restrain her from spending the rest of her fortune in traveling back and forth on the Atlantic She inherited $100,000, and has already spent $85,000 of it in traveling between this country and England. Her prospective heirs have made an attempt to restrain her from spending the other $15,000 on the ocean, and a great deal of comment has been aroused over her curious taste for sea travel.

Steamship men insist that it is by no means an exceptional instance, and that there are literally hundreds of people who spend a considerable part of their lives on the sea. Some of them travel for their health. An instance is cited of a man who has made nearly 200 voyages across the ocean, who is always comfortable when at sea, and can hardly endure living ashore on account of the asthma. Another is a consumptive, and believes that the sea air will prolong his life; and there is a well-known instance of a man who suffered from neuralgia to such an extent that he had the bones of his jaw removed and a silver plate substituted in the vain hope of relief, and who claims that when at sea he does not know what the sensation of pain is. These are a few instances, but there are many other people who take sea voyages on account of the excitement attending it, and who think nothing of making a dozen voyages a year.

LINES OF OCEAN TRAVEL.

The Chances of Sighting Missing Vessels.

During the anxious days when La Gascogne was missing and speculation as to her whereabouts was nearly as varied as it was common a good deal was said about her having drifted in a helpless state out of the lines of ocean travel. This was to explain why she had not been sighted by any of the incoming vessels. The weight of expert opinion was that she had been carried to the south by northwesterly gales, and that she was likely to be heard of first from the Azores. Failing to reach some port of these islands it was conjectured that being caught in the equatorial branch of the gulf stream she might even circle the islands unperceived, pass by the Canary islands, and, skirting the Madeira islands, reach the equator, and turning thence northwestward with the current bring up to some port out of the Gulf of Mexico.

The chances of such a thing happening to any vessel rendered helpless by disablement of her machinery are remote. To those whose acquaintance with ocean shipping is limited to the steamships that ply between this port and the various well known ports of Great Britain and the continent of Europe the ocean, outside of the lines followed by those well known ships, may be a trackless waste, but shippers whose goods are carried to every part of the world know that few parts of the ocean are not constantly traversed by steamers and sailing vessels, and that the chances of a helpless craft drifting for many days unobserved and unsuccored are really remote. The neighborhood of the Azores in particular, contrary to an apparently general impression, is crossed by a great many lines of travel. It is doubtful, indeed, whether in any other part of the ocean a disabled ship would be more likely to be sighted by passing vessels. The numerous lines from British and other European ports to points in Africa and Central America traverse these waters, as do those from American ports, the Mediterranean to Africa, and the islands of the southeastern Atlantic.

The hydrographic maps show that the waters near the Azores are crossed by thirty-seven lines, of which twenty-three are of steamships and fourteen of sailing ships. Each line has a separate lane coming and going so that there are practically seventy-four routes across which a vessel not in control of her crew might drift.

SERVED IN TWO WARS

THE GRIP ALMOST WON WHERE THE BULLETS FAILED.

Our Sympathies Always Enlisted in the Infirmities of the Veteran.

(From the Herald, Woodstock, Va.)

There is an old soldier in Woodstock, Va., who served in the war with Mexico and in the war of the rebellion, Mr. Levi McInturff. He passed through both these wars without a serious wound. The hardships, however, told seriously on him, for when the grip attacked him four years ago it nearly killed him. Who can look on the infirmities of a veteran without a feeling of the deepest sympathy? His townspeople saw him confined to his house so prostrated with great nervousness that he could not hold a knife and fork at the table, scarcely able to walk, too, and as he attempted it, he often stumbled and fell. They saw him treated by the best talent to be had—but still he suffered on for four years, and gave up finally in despair. One day, however, he was struck by the account of a cure which had been effected by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He imediately ordered a box and commenced taking them. He says he was greatly relieved within three days' time. The blood found its way to his fingers and his hands which had been palsied assumed a natural color, and he was soon enabled to use his knife and fork at the table. He has recovered his strength to such an extent that he is able to chop wood, shock corn and do his regular work about his home. He now says he can not only walk to Woodstock, but can walk across the mountains. He is able to lift up a fifty-two-pound weight with one hand and says he does not know what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for others, but knows that they have done a great work for him.

He was in town last Monday, court day, and was loud in his praises of the medicine that had given him so great relief. He purchased another box and took it home with him. Mr. McInturff is willing to make affidavit to these facts.

The proprietors of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills state that they are not patent medicine but a prescription used for many years by an eminent practitioner who produced the most wonderful results with weakness curing all forms of weakness arising from a watery condition of the blood or shattered nerves, two fruitful causes of almost every ill to which flesh is heir. The pills are also a specific for the troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, all forms of weakness, chronic constipation, bearing down pains, etc., and in the case of men will give speedy relief and effect a permanent cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature. They are entirely harmless and can be given to weak and sickly children with the greatest good and without the slightest danger. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price (50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

A Bycicle Built of Bamboo.

One of the chief attractions of the Stanley show, held at the Agricultural Hall last week, was a bamboo cycle. No other material but steel has been used for a similar purpose up till now, the cycle constructed of bamboo cane being fitted with aluminum joints, frames, front forks, handle bars and seat pillars, while in some of the machines on view the cranks are all made of bamboo tubes instead of steel, and in the latest machine even the metal rim is replaced by one of ash. In the matter of price the machine does not vary much from others constructed of steel, but as far as weight is concerned the difference is very considerable. The machines can, we believe, be turned out to weigh not more than 22½ pounds, and are strong enough for a 226-pound man.—London Invention.

Lazy Life of a Queen.

Queen Ranavalona of Madagascar is like the little girl who, asked what she would do if she were a queen, replied: "I would sit on my gold throne." This absolute and dusky ruler of 3,500,000 persons takes her sovereignty very thoroughly, but very lazily. She has no children, and spends her time wearing Paris gowns, munching betel, a Madagascar comfit, gossiping with the ladies of her court, and playing cards. She is a handsome woman, with an intelligent face that indicates much more wisdom than her rule displays.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

At Interest 100 Years.

One hundred years ago Benjamin Franklin left a fund of $5,000, which he directed should be put at interest and left to accumulate for a century. When that time had come round, according to the directions of the splendid old philanthropist, half of the money thus accumulated should go to some good public purpose for the benefit of the people of Boston. The other half was to be put aside, as in the first case, for another century, at the end of which time the State and the city should be equal partners in the fund. Now, arising from the $5,000 there is an aggregate of something near $700,000, half of which the trustees will use to build and equip an industrial training school, one of the best uses to which the money can be put, and one which Franklin would surely approve if he were living now. The board of alderman and three ministers of the oldest religious societies in Boston are the trustees. Next week they are coming to Washington to learn as much as they can about the manual school here, and they will visit nearly all the large cities of the United States on the same mission.—Washington Post.

Clothes for the Emporor.

Though the German Emperor employs Berlin tailors he believes in giving provincials employment also. In every good-sized town there is a court tailor, who occasionally has the honor of supplying the Emperor with a uniform, and as his uniforms are as diverse and numerous as the stars of the heavens there is good business done, especially as his Majesty differs very materially from his grandfather, who had his uniforms and caps repaired and cleaned so often that the tradespeople had to declare at last the garments would bear no more renovation. The imperial measure is always kept in stock by the tailors, so that only the minute details are sent when an order is given. A tunic for the Kaiser costs on an average between $40 and $50.

"Remittance men" is a term applied in British Columbia to sons of Englishmen sent there to learn farming. "They go about in knickerbockers, big shoes, cloth caps, and eyeglasses, painting things red as long as their remittances last. For two weeks before the next check arrives they keep quiet, because they have no money for making a noise."

WOMEN'S FACES

—like flowers, fade and wither with time; the bloom of the rose is only known to the healthy woman's cheeks. The nervous strain caused by the ailments and pains peculiar to the sex, and the labor and worry of rearing a family, can often be traced by the lines in the woman's face. Dull eyes, the sallow or wrinkled face and those "feelings of weakness" have their rise in the derangements and irregularities peculiar to women. The functional derangements, painful disorders, and chronic weaknesses of women, can be cured with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. For the young girl just entering womanhood, for the mother and those about to become mothers, and later in "the change of life," the "Prescription" is just what they need; it aids nature in preparing the system for the change. It's a medicine prescribed for thirty years, in the diseases of women, by Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will cure the chronic inflammation of the lining membranes which cause such exhausting drains upon the system. It cures nervous prostration, sleeplessness, faintness, nervous debility and all disorders arising from derangement of the female organs and functions.

MRS. JENNIE WILLIAMS, of Mohawk, Lane Co., Oregon, writes: "I was sick for over three years with blind dizzy spells, palpitation of the heart, pain in the back and head, and at times would have such a weak tired feeling when I first got up in the morning, and at times nervous chills.

MRS. WILLIAMS.

The physicians differed as to what my disease was, but none of them did me any good. As soon as I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, I began to get better; could sleep well nights, and that bad, nervous feeling and the pain in my back soon left me. I can walk several miles without getting tired. I took in all three bottles of 'Prescription' and two of 'Discovery.'"

Beyond Her Years.

A little girl had for some time wanted a dog. Finally she was taken very ill. One day, when she had begun to get better, she told her mother how she wanted a dog, and begged her to ask "grandpa" to buy her one. The mother answered that "grandpa" did not like dogs, and probably would not be willing to buy one. Then, seeing the little invalid look sadly disappointed, she said, "Wait till you get well, my dear: then we will see."

"Oh, no," answered the child, whose few years had taught her a little wisdom: "the more ill I am the more likely he will be to buy it for me!"

Briareus Had a Hundred Arms.

Nervousness has as many queer symptoms. But whatever these may be, they one and all depart in consequence of the soothing, invigorating influence of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which tones the system through the medium of thorough digestion and assimilation. Tremulous nerves soon acquire steadiness by its use. It promotes sleep and appetite, and fortifies the system against disease. Malaria, constipation, rheumatism and kidney troubles are relieved by it.

MANY dealers have imbibed the conception that dignity must never be laid aside in framing advertisements of any kind. It's a mistake. There are more people to be turned and swayed by humor than may be influenced by things. We ourselves know how ready we are to find an excuse for being amused. No, do not be afraid of dropping "dignity" as ordinarily construed. You are just as truly dignified when you are humorous.—Hardware Dealer.

One Hundred Years of Law Suits.

The first real estate entry of record in Kanawha County, West Virginia, was made Jan. 2, 1795, and is of 150,000 acres of land to Phineas Taylor of Waterbury, Conn., who was the grandfather of Phineas T. Barnum, the great showman. The property has been in litigation almost ever since.

THE Christian Endeavor Convention for 1895 will be held at Boston, Mass., next July, and the Nickel Plate road has effected arrangements by which the lowest rates will be offered, either good returning same route, or by going one route and returning in whole or part by different routes. The following points of interest may be visited without extra charge: Chautauqua Lake, Niagara Falls, Thousand Islands, The Rapids of the St. Lawrence, Saratoga, Palisades of the Hudson, and The Hoosac Tunnel.

Big Palms.

Certain leaves of the Ceylon palm attain a length of twenty feet and the remarkable width of sixteen feet. The natives use them for making tents. The umbrella magnolia of Ceylon bears leaves that are so large that a single one may sometimes serve as a shelter for fifteen or twenty persons.

By so doing many of the following notable resorts may be visited without additional expense: Chautauqua Lake, Niagara Falls, Thousand Islands, The Rapids of the St. Lawrence, Saratoga, Palisades of the Hudson and the Hoosac Tunnel. The above arrangements will, no doubt, make the low rate excursion tickets offered by the Nickel Plate road very popular.

We would not have expended HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS doing galvanizing, for which we made no extra charge, had there not been merit in it. Galvanizing consists in sealing the strong but most perishable (in this climate) metal, steel, with the almost indestructible (even when very thin) metals, zinc and aluminum. If there were not great merit in galvanizing, no one would pay 4 cents for galvanized barbed wire or about twice the price for galvanized cloth. If we were making painted windmills to-day, we should furnish an

That is a good price for an 8-foot painted windmill. WE BUILD FOR THE AGES. WE WOULD SOT SELL YOU A POOR, PAINTED WHEEL, FOR ONE HALF OF METAL GALVANIZED BEFORE BEING PUT TOGETHER, IF YOU WOULD PAY US DOUBLE PRICE FOR IT. We build the best we know, and knowing that painted thin sheets are practically worthless, we have nothing to do with them. The enormous cost of preparing to do galvanizing, and of doing it well on a large scale, deters others. SO WE BUY GALVANIZED SHEETS AND PUNCH AND SHEAR AND MAKE THEM UP AFTERWARD. WHEELS OR VANES MADE OF GALVANIZED SHEETS HAVE OUT FIRST AROUND THE RIVETS, SOLDER, AND EDGES, AND ARE, THEREFORE, NOT SO GOOD AS PAINTED ONES. How any concern can get our prices for painted windmills and painted towers, or those made up of galvanized material, cut, sheared and punched after the galvanizing is done, can only be explained by the fact that people who buy them are ignorant of the value of galvanizing. We now galvanize everything after it is completed, even bolts and nuts. We galvanize with the most improved processes and in the most perfect known and attainable manner.

The process: When a section of our Aermotor Wheel is all riveted up, completed and cleaned of rust and impurities, it is immersed in melted zinc and aluminum and left there until it becomes hot enough to melt every crack and opening of every cleaned up and saturated metal, and then removing the pieces (supposing the solderer and welder then you have something durable and reliable. Sick headache, constipation and indigestion are quickly cured by De Witt's Little Early Risers, the famous little pills.

The Proof Accumulates.

The evidence continues to come and all helps to prove our claims for Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer. W. C. Flick, ex-postmaster, New Garden, Columbiana Co., Ohio, says: "About two years ago I was all run down, had no strength to work, was listless, drowsy in day time and wakeful at night, and felt about as nervous and miserable as I could feel and live. Salem doctors applied a battery, examined me closely and pronounced it a serious case of nervous prostration, or which there was no help except to keep as quiet as possible. I think that they didn't expect me to live long. I spoke of trying a patent medicine, but the doctor said no patent medicine could help me. But as I steadily grew worse I had to try something, so got Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, which was highly recommended for nerve diseases. I felt a good effect from the first use of it, so continued to use it and continued to improve in health. Think I used six bottles and I believe I am perfectly cured." Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is a medicinal preparation which cannot fail to help any nerve disorder or "run down" condition of health. Sold by Davenport.

J. A. Richardson, of Jefferson City, Mo. Chief Eorelding force 38th general assembly of Missouri, writes: I wish to testify to the merits of One Minute Cough Cure. When others called cures failed, I obtained almost instant relief and a speedy cure by the use of One Minute Cough cure.

Cramp Colic and Cholera.

For seven years or more Mrs. W. D. Louder, of Quincy, Ks., was subject to attacks of cramp colic. Mr. S R Morse, a druggist of that place, recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which has effected a permanent cure, saving her much suffering besides the trouble and expense of sending for a doctor, which was often necessary. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

True to its Name

Nearly twenty years ago one of the most eminent physicians in Indiana was noted for the wonderful success that he achieved in all diseases of the stomach. The remedy was so ready and perfect in its efficacy, that large as his practice was it was deemed proper to put this remedy in such shape that humanity at large could have the benefit of it. This remedy is Lyon's Seven Wonders, which is performing marvelous cures in indigestion, dyspepsia, catarrh of the stomach, and other serious ailments caused by functional disturbances of the stomach. The certificates of cures performed by Lyon's Seven Wonders bear the endorsement of the best people in the land, of those who are well known in the communities in which they live. Among these may be mentioned Gen R S Foster, of Indianapolis; Hon. A. M. Sweeney, Ex Clerk of the Supreme Court of Indiana and Judge Wangle of Tipton.

Take Care of the Lungs:

"Perhaps you would not think so, but a very large proportion of diseases in New York, comes from carlessness about catching cold," says Dr. Cyrus Edson "It is such a simple thing and so common that very few people, unless it is a case of pneumonia, pay any attention to a cold. New York is one of the healthiest places on the Atlantic Coast and yet there are a great many cases of catarrh and consumption which have their origin in this neglect of the simplest precaution of every day life. The most sensible advice is, when you have one get rid of it as soon as possible. By all means do not neglect it" Dr. Edson does not tell you how to cure a cold but we will. Take Chamberlain's Congh Remedy. It will relieve the lungs, and expectoration open the secretions and soon effect a permanent cure. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 1013

A Chance to Make Money.

I am delighted with my success selling Dish Washer; in the last six week I made $534, and was sick part of the time. I think this is pretty good for an inexperienced lady. I am surprised there has never been a good Dish Washer put on the market before, as everyone seems so anxious for one. It certainly is a popular demand that is supplied, and that means big money for the agents that supply the demand. I believe any woman or man can make from $5 to $12 a day anywhere in this business, and by addressing the Iron City Dish Washer Co., E. E. Pittsburg, Pa., you can get full particulars. It simply requires a little push. You can't expect to make money unless you try. I would like to have the experience of others of your readers in this business.

THE AUBURN GAS FIELD.

SHALL WE TRY AGAIN IN ANOTHER PART OF IT?

This subject comes up in a new form. There is no doubt but we have plenty of gas and that the field is a good deal larger than the part we have occupied. John H. Pyle, east of town, has persistently claimed that the gas area reaches out his way, and we have no reason to dispute this. Acting on this idea Mr Pyle has corresponded with several parties, both as to putting down more wells, and as to the matter of testing the various localities to determine the proper point for putting a well down. This latter feature is a new one to us. But he has lately received two letters from an expert in this line, Mr. H. McDougall, of Richmond, Ind., who has perfected some instruments by which he claims he can locate, gas, oil and other minerals. These letters we have seen, as Mr. Pyle sent them to Dr. Swarts, and to give the "DAILY" readers a better idea of the matter, we copy Mr. McDougall's last letter which is as follows:

RICHMOND, IND., March 8, 1895.

JOHN H. PYLE, Auburn, Ind.

DEAR SIR:—Yours of the 7th to hand this morning, and in reply would say that it required about eight years to experiment with and perfect my instruments besides a considerable amount of money, and I am satisfied they are now absolutely correct, and that where they indicate gas or oil they will be found at the proper depth; some fields, of course, vary in depth from 1,000 feet to possibly 2,000 feet. I have tested over 300 wells while in process of drilling and in each instance they came in as the instrument indicated they would. Where nothing was indicated the wells came in dry, and where oil was indicated they proved to be good wells. I made three locations for parties, one for gas and two for oil The location for gas proved to be a two million well, and the oil locations proved to be for about two hundred barrels each per day. Another party had a location made for a gas well and requested me to try it, which I did, and failed to find any indication whatever, and at the party's request I selected a location on which he drilled and got a two million well. One well was put down here and gas was reached at 1,472 feet and a few feet lower a vein of water was struck which filled the hole to within 200 feet of the surface, shutting off the gas and spoiling it as a gas well. Another well was then started, and at the depth of 1,400 feet a vein of water was struck, and as the well was too small to case the water off, it was thought best to abandon it and start another well with a ten inch hole, so that if water was struck it could be cased off with proper sized casing. This well is now going down, but when it will be finished I cannot say as the driller who has the contract is the slowest mortal I ever had the misfortune to fall in with. The second well put down and abandoned here shows gas, which forces its way through 1,200 feet of water showing that the pressure of gas is greater than that of the water.

Yours Truly,
H. MCDOUGALL

We cannot refrain from further mention of that most beautiful of all monthly publications, Sarony's Living Pictures. It is so highly meritorious and so fitly calculated to afford to its possessor the greatest amount of entertainment for the smallest outlay, that we are doing our readers a kindness in again calling their attention to it. Compared with its real worth, its cost, 25 cents, is but a trifle.

Right Arm Paralyzed!

Saved from St. Vitus Dance.

"Our daughter, Blanche, now fifteen years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. We feared St. Vitus dance, and tried the best physicians, with no benefit. She has taken three bottles of Dr. Miles' Nervine and has gained 31 pounds. Her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid."
MRS. R. R. BULLOCK, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Cures.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold on a positive guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. All druggists sell it at $1, 6 bottles for $5, or it will be sent, prepaid, on receipt of price by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev J Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding lagrippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interuption and it seemed as if she could not survive them A friend recommended Dr King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. Regular size 50c. and $1.00.

WH[illegible] TO SAY ABOUT MONEY.

The Indisna Mutual Building Loan Association, which we represent in this part of the state, have gaain reduced their interest, which has always been from 2 to 5 per cent less than any other Building Loan Association Do you know that if you are about to borrow money and give a mortgage on your home, you should take the time and trouble to investigate the plan of different associations, so that you may know, regardless of what any agent may tell you, which is the cheapest andthe best?

There are three items which should also be considered and thoroughly understood, especially by the borrower, before he makes his application for a loan:

First: The rate of interest and premium he is charged per annum.

Second: What the earnings of the Association are.

Third: How economically the Association is conducting s affairs.

We are prepared always to compare our company with any other, and can prove to your entire satisfaction that we are the cheapest, and

THE JUNIORS.

Among the many organizations con[illegible]cted with our churches, none seem so [illegible]ccessful as the Junior societies of [illegible]hristian Endeavor and Epworth [illegible]eague. This is also true in a number of ways. not only in point of attendance but financially. On last evening the Junior League of the M. E. church gave a twenty five cent entertainment and nearly all of them told how they earned their quarter. Some did it by hard labor and some by doing little deeds of kindness, and in the little speeches a number proved to be quite poetical If we had space would like to give all of their speeches, but there were more than a hundred of them and we can not. But we quote a few. Little Bessie Zimmerman said;

A quarter is quite a sum to earn these times
So I saved all my pennies, nickels and dimes
I went to a neighbor, for eggs a dozen or two,
For which I got a nickel, a plenty I think don't you?
For learning to play a waltz called the "Sunlight"
Mamma gave me a new dime shining and bright
For bread, to Mr. Baker's down town I was sent Receiving a nickel, making in all twenty cents
For staying at home, once upon a time My dear papa gave me another half-dime
How I earned my quarter I think you can see
And that I did quite well I hope you'll all agree.

Paul Wooton one of the carriers for the DAILY COURIER believes in being in line:

With the rest of the Juniors to fall in line,
And get my quarter and be in time
First I thought of this and then I thought of that
And then Mamma proposed that for five cents a week that I hang up my hat.

Delia Richards also had this rhyme:

How did I earn my quarter?
Why, like any dutiful daughter,
I washed the dishes and carried in wood
And ran on errands ever so good.
Then I sold some rags and took it in tin,
But that's when I got taken in.
Forthe church don't take its pay in trash
So mamma helped me out with cash.

The little ones all deposited their quarters in a dish and a collection was also taken which in all amounted to $14,00. While the collection was taken the little Missees Florence Wooton, Lois and Dora Galloway and Pearl Wilcox sang a song, "Dropping in the Pennies."

Court.

Thursday's Daily:

It appears that when T. R. Marshall came here yesterday to try the case against th B. & O. for killing Sanders, the attorneys had found out that a special judge must have taken the oath three days before he tries a case. This compelled a delay, and then there was a change of venue to Steuben county as stated.

The case of Fisher vs King for partition was on to-day, but finally settled. J. J. VanAuken. John Yarde and P. D West were appointed to divide the land by Judge Marshall. They have completed it and made their report. Rose & Rose were for plaintiff and Shuman & Roby for defense. No jury this week. Clerk Moody is better, but not able to be in court.

S. S. Norris and his brother Wm. W. Norris were in town to-day. They are getting ready for their suit against the B. & O. Mr. Norris expects it to come up for a prelimary hearing on Saturday. His attorneys are Roby and Shuman. We did not learn who represents the road, but presume it is Mr. Rose. There were four put off the train when Mr. Norris was, his two brothers Isaac and William and Joseph Seeberg.

Friday's Daily;

Work began at 8:30 with Judge Marshall in the chair. The old case of Phillips vs Kennedy was to be tried again, and Judge Penfield having been an attorney in the original case, could not sit as judge. The case was begun about 1891 if we are not mistaken, when Mr Phillips sued Wm. Kennedy for a fee of $5.00 for acting as Kennedy's attorney in a law suit. It was tried before a justice, with Leas for Phillips and Gen. Blair, if we mistake not as attorney for Kennedy. The justice decided that Kennedy must pay the fee. But it was appealed to the circuit court. The court decided that Kennedy must pay, but in the meantime he had transferred his property around, till it was in the name of his wife and self jointly. He also "filled a schedule" and it became a question whether he had done this merely to avoid paying the debt. The case went to the supreme court and it was considered there and sent back here for a new trial? The point still is, to decide whether Kennedy's property is liable for that $5 judgment.

Kennedy claims that Phillips owes him $4,45 for fees in Phillip's case against C. K. Baxter years ago. Phillips claims that Kennedy admitted a time or two that he owed this money. Judge Marshall had to go to Ligonier this evening but will be here at ten to morrow to go on with the case. Clerk Moody is better.

Saturday's Daily.

This forenoon, the Phillips-Kennedy case was practically finished though some points are not settled. Phillips probably gets his $5, At noon R. C. Bell came up from Ft. Wayne, to try the Ralston will case, but was as unfortunate as before, as a motion to dismiss service of the writ was made by Judge McClellan, Mrs. Dills' attorney and sustained by the court. Now it takes a change of venue to Judge Adair and will likely be put at issue next week. The case of Matilda Hursh against her husband for maintenance was brought up. He had deeded away his property. But this was set aside and he is made to pay her $350 a year. This afternoon they are arguing the motion for a new trial in the recent case of Cochran vs Marshal Baker.

BAD ACCIDENT.

Thomas Hallam was helping Carnahan & Simons load cattle at the Lake Shore depot this forenoon, and it seems he was holding up one end of a wagon tongue to guide the cattle in the car. when they rushed against it and the tongue struck him across the left shoulder, breaking the shoulder blade and bruising his head some. Drs. Mattheny and L. A. Hines were called and dressed the fracture. It is a serious accident and one that will take a long time before Mr. Hallam can use his shoulder.

A BAND STAND.

The commissioners have granted the Auburn Military Band the privilege of placing their band wagon on the northwest corner of the court house square. The wagon was built last year and a number of our business men have their advertisements printed on the sides and ends. The trucks under the box will be sold and a brick foundation put down and the box placed on it. A canopy top will also be put over it and all given a new coat of paint. The band will give an open concert one night each week. When completed in will make quite an attractive band stand and will make a convenient place for the boys to give these concerts. We hope our citizens will take pride in our bands and subscribe liberally to their maintenance. Mr. Calkin, the leader of the Military Band has many calls to other towns and can earn more money than he is getting now, but as he is located here he is willing to stay and help the boys on. Their expenses for rent and instructor of course must be paid and this is why they are canvassing the town for donations. We think all who contribute will get value received.

MORE ABOUT THE GAS QUESTION.

RICHMOND, IND., Feb. 15, 1895.

JOHN H. PYLE, Auburn, Ind.

DEAR SIR:—Yours of the 5th inst. just to hand and contents noted.

I have invented a set of forty instruments for the purpose of locating gold, silver and other minerals, as well as gas and oil. The moment I get to the edge of the vein the instrument will indicate it. I can tell the width of the vein as well as its strength. Each instrument will only indicate the mineral for which it was made. For instance, the instrument for oil will notice nothing but oil, and the instrument for gas, nothing but that element. So that one instrument does not interfere with the other. My charge for locating gas or oil is $50 and my expenses there and return, which charge will include all the oil and gas upon a 30 or 80 acre tract, which may include a sufficient number of veins for half a dozen wells. The charge I now make is not my regular charge, but I am willing to go there for the sum stated if you wish, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not gas and oil are so far north. In which event a good field could be opened there, and in future operations I would be willing to make the locations for an interest, provided a few (not over four or six) good, reliable parties could be had with capital sufficient to develop the property. Yours truly,

H. McDOUGALL

Up at Shipshewanna in LaGrange county they have "roast pig socials." The people are said to enjoy it. We have no report from the pigs.

Dr. Buchtel has broken the record He announces a baby born at eleven o'clock last evening and a 9lb girl to Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Gale the Lake Shore Section foreman, at 5:30 this morning and a 9¼lb boy to Mr. and Mrs. Madden at 11:00 this forenoon.

The rooms of the west end of the Kiblinger store building are being refitted and changed to be ready for new occupants at some future day. The room on the second floor was never plastered, ceiled or finished in any way, but was left to furnish a store room for the hardware store.

The Sorosis paper, the Angola Magnet, reached us this forenoon. It is about the largest paper ever issued in this part of the state, having twenty two pages well filled with good reading and neatly displayed advertising. It gave the ladies a good deal of work and thought to provide the matter. But it does them great credit. It may be added that this effort will also do for them what is one of the objects of their society to secure—will enlarge their field of knowledge and experience, giving them for a brief season, a taste of the character of labor the average newspaper man sustains through the year. The COURIER compliments the Angola Sorosis on their pronounced success and hopes they may reap abundantly a financial harvest.

Friday's Daily:

FIRE! FIRE!

THE AUBURN FOUNDRY IN FLAMES!

THE PLANT ALMOST A TOTAL LOSS.

MANY THROWN OUT OF EMPLOYMENT. INSURANCE SMALL.

Just as we got ready to close up this afternoon the fire alarm called all onto the streets. It was the Auburn Foundry and Machine Works that had caught fire in the old part from the engine. Everything was as dry as a tinder, and a light wind, and the flames spread so rapidly that little could be done when the fire department had made its half-mile run.

We understand there is only $3,000 or $4 000 insurance. Several policies had expired, viz: $1,000 in the Manchester, $2,000 in North British, and $1,000 in Hamburg-Breman, since Jan. 1.

The bridge building and storage house was saved, but the main building which contained the machinery, moulding room and office, were completely destroyed. The books and a few light tools were also saved.

Later. There is $2,000 insurance in the Continental of New York, $150 being on the storage room, so that only $1850 is available.

Let our people move right away without waiting, to secure means to rebuild this, one of Auburn's valuable industries.

ECHOES OF THE FIRE.

The Fort Wayne Journal is wrong in its saying that Fort Wayne parties own some of the stock. The owners are J. W. Baxter, S. D. Hanna, Hovey Hanna, F. T. Zimmerman, S. J. Bookmiller, J. J. Bennigan and Mat Miller, A part of the machinery and some of the brick wall will be saved and a smaller plant may be started. Some machinery is being moved into the bridge room. The greatest loss is in patterns, for they had not only a large stock of their own, but some owned by parties all over the country for whom they have done work. The Zimmerman Co. lose heavily in patterns. The firemen did good service. But one of them, Perry Long, was hit by a heavy timber falling on his neck, but is able to be out again. Business men are circulating a paper to see if help can be secured. We have not learned as to their success.

MIGHT HAVE BEEN WORSE.

E. R. Shoemaker, of Waterloo, was in town to day, and as his carriage was standing in the street near Cowan Sisters' millinery store a lady was getting in the buggy. As she was raising herself with one foot on the step, her foot slipped and she fell under the buggy. This frightened the horses and they began to back up. J. J. VanAuken was near and he pulled the lady from under the buggy, but it is thought she is hurt somewhat as the wheel struck her.

ROBBERY AT BUTLER.

The Fort Wayne Journal of Sunday morning had a dispatch from Butler stating that two farmers living north of that place had been burglarized. The dispatch says: Two daring robberies occurred near here Friday night. About eight o'clock three masked men entered the home of Thomas Leeson and demanded his money and proceeded to pound him over the head with their revolvers until he gave them $20. They then went to a neighbors by the name of Ben Wise and all the family having gone to bed, but a young lady whom they made keep quiet by threats and then went to Mr. Wise's bedroom and secured $5 from him. They are supposed to be the same gang that has been robbing farmers in Steuben county.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."
UNITED HOSPITAL AND DISPENSARY, Boston, Mass.

BAD ACCIDENT.

Thomas Hallam was helping Carnahan & Simons load cattle at the Lake Shore depot this forenoon, and it seems he was holding up one end of a wagon tongue to guide the cattle in the car, when they rushed against it and the tongue struck him across the left shoulder, breaking the shoulder blade and bruising his head some. Drs. Matheny and L. A. Hines were called and dressed the fracture. It is a serious accident and one that will take a long time before Mr. Hallam can use his shoulder.

A BAND STAND.

The commissioners have granted the Auburn Military Band the privilege of placing their band wagon on the northwest corner of the court house square. The wagon was built last year and a number of our business men have their advertisements printed on the sides and ends. The trucks under the box will be sold and a brick foundation put down and the box placed on it. A canopy top will also be put over it and all given a new coat of paint. The band will give an open concert one night each week. When completed in will make quite an attractive band stand and will make a convenient place for the boys to give these concerts. We hope our citizens will take pride in our bands and subscribe liberally to their maintenance. Mr. Calkin, the leader of the Military Band has many calls to other towns and can earn more money than he is getting now, but as he is located here he is willing to stay and help the boys on. Their expenses for rent and instructor of course must be paid and this is why they are canvassing the town for donations. We think all who contribute will get value received.

MORE ABOUT THE GAS QUESTION.

RICHMOND, IND., Feb. 15, 1895.

JOHN H. PYLE, Auburn, Ind.

DEAR SIR:—Yours of the 5th inst. just to hand and contents noted.

I have invented a set of forty instruments for the purpose of locating gold, silver and other minerals, as well as gas and oil. The moment I get to the edge of the vein the instrument will indicate it. I can tell the width of the vein as well as its strength. Each instrument will only indicate the mineral for which it was made. For instance, the instrument for oil will notice nothing but oil, and the instrument for gas, nothing but that element. So that one instrument does not interfere with the other. My charge for locating gas or oil is $50 and my expenses there and return, which charge will include all the oil and gas upon a 30 or 80 acre tract, which may include a sufficient number of veins for half a dozen wells. The charge I now make is not my regular charge, but I am willing to go there for the sum stated if you wish, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not gas and oil are so far north. In which event a good field could be opened there, and in future operations I would be willing to make the locations for an interest, provided a few (not over four or six) good, reliable parties could be had with capital sufficient to develop the property. Yours truly,
H. MCDOUGALL

Up at Shipshewanna in LaGrange county they have "roast pig socials." The people are said to enjoy it. We have no report from the pigs.

Dr. Buchtel has broken the record He announces a baby born at eleven o'clock last evening and a 9lb girl to Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Gale the Lake Shore Section foreman, at 5:30 this morning and a 9¼lb boy to Mr. and Mrs. Madden at 11:00 this forenoon.

The rooms of the west end of the Kiblinger store building are being refitted and changed to be ready for new occupants at some future day. The room on the second floor was never plastered, ceiled or finished in any way, but was left to furnish a store room for the hardware store.

The Sorosis paper, the Angola Magnet, reached us this forenoon. It is about the largest paper ever issued in this part of the state, having twenty two pages well filled with good reading and neatly displayed advertising. It gave the ladies a good deal of work and thought to provide the matter. But it does them great credit. It may be added that this effort will also do for them what is one of the objects of their society to secure—will enlarge their field of knowledge and experience, giving them for a brief season, a taste of the character of labor the average newspaper man sustains through the year. The COURIER compliments the Angola Sorosis on their pronounced success and hopes they may reap abundantly a financial harvest.

Friday's Daily:

FIRE! FIRE!

THE AUBURN FOUNDRY IN FLAMES!

THE PLANT ALMOST A TOTAL LOSS.

MANY THROWN OUT OF EMPLOYMENT. INSURANCE SMALL.

Just as we got ready to close up this afternoon the fire alarm called all onto the streets. It was the Auburn Foundry and Machine Works that had caught fire in the old part from the engine. Everything was as dry as a tinder, and a light wind, and the flames spread so rapidly that little could be done when the fire department had made its half-mile run.

We understand there is only $3,000 or $4,000 insurance. Several policies had expired, viz: $1,000 in the Manchester, $2,000 in North British, and $1,000 in Hamburg-Breman, since Jan. 1.

The bridge building and storage house was saved, but the main building which contained the machinery, moulding room and office, were completely destroyed. The books and a few light tools were also saved.

Later. There is $2,000 insurance in the Continental of New York, $150 being on the storage room, so that only $1850 is available.

Let our people move right away without waiting, to secure means to rebuild this, one of Auburn's valuable industries.

ECHOES OF THE FIRE.

The Fort Wayne Journal is wrong in its saying that Fort Wayne parties own some of the stock. The owners are J. W. Baxter, S. D. Hanna, Hovey Hanna, F. T. Zimmerman, S. J. Bookmiller, J. J. Bennigan and Mat Miller, A part of the machinery and some of the brick wall will be saved and a smaller plant may be started. Some machinery is being moved into the bridge room. The greatest loss is in patterns, for they had not only a large stock of their own, but some owned by parties all over the country for whom they have done work. The Zimmerman Co. lose heavily in patterns. The firemen did good service. But one of them, Perry Long, was hit by a heavy timber falling on his neck, but is able to be out again. Business men are circulating a paper to see if help can be secured. We have not learned as to their success.

MIGHT HAVE BEEN WORSE.

E. R. Shoemaker, of Waterloo, was in town to day, and as his carriage was standing in the street near Cowan Sisters' millinery store a lady was getting in the buggy. As she was raising herself with one foot on the step, her foot slipped and she fell under the buggy. This frightened the horses and they began to back up. J. J. VanAuken was near and he pulled the lady from under the buggy, but it is thought she is hurt somewhat as the wheel struck her.

ROBBERY AT BUTLER.

The Fort Wayne Journal of Sunday morning had a dispatch from Butler stating that two farmers living north of that place had been burglarized. The dispatch says: Two daring robberies occurred near here Friday night. About eight o'clock three masked men entered the home of Thomas Leeson and demanded his money and proceeded to pound him over the head with their revolvers until he gave them $20. They then went to a neighbors by the name of Ben Wise and all the family having gone to bed, but a young lady whom they made keep quiet by threats and then went to Mr. Wise's bedroom and secured $5 from him. They are supposed to be the same gang that has been robbing farmers in Steuben county.

Gives Satisfaction.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy gives the best satisfaction of any cough medicine I handle, and as a seller leads all other preparations in this market. I recommend it because it is the best medicine I ever handled for coughs, colds and croup. A. W. Baldridge, Millersville, Ill. For sale by Robbins & McCord. 10-13

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

Uncle Sam Fooled 'Em.

Two cargoes of coal for the Navy Department have arrived at Kingston, Jamaica, according to information which reached New York recently. When the United States cruiser New York reached Kingston a short time ago, short of coal, the United States Government had to pay $11.50 a ton. In anticipation of doing a good business the coal merchants imported a large quantity of coal. The United States Government saw what was going on and sent four cargoes of coal to Kingston. The bark Golden Sheaf, of Portland, and the four-masted schooner Jennie S. Butler have arrived there. The Kingston coal merchants do not know what to do with the supply they have on hand.

Ohio the Scene of a Hurricane.

A windstorm of great force caused considerable damage at Delaware, Ohio. Fifty poles of the Long Distance Telephone Company were blown down and the brick business house of W. E. Kruck was badly damaged. Several people were injured, but none seriously.

At Creston, Ohio, the side walls of a two-story brick building in the course of erection for Griscon Bros., were blown down by the wind. Jacob Wentz, contractor, was killed; Andrew Baird's scull was fractured and crushed, and Martin Murray internally injured. Wentz leaves a widow and three children.

Reunion of Coxeyites.

The survivors of the invading army that marched to Washington under Gen. Coxey a year ago, had a reunion at Massillon, Ohio. Carl Browne lectured at length, and made the startling announcement that when the troops were in the heart of the Alleghenies a conspiracy was hatched for the capture of the newspaper correspondents and the execution of those most offensive to the reincarnated reformers. Browne says that he held the destroying hand, and the reporters were permitted to live.

On the War Path.

Tacoma (Wash.) special: The Puyal lup and Nisqually Indians have decided to go on the war path and avenge the killing of Medicine Man Jim Bouchette, who was murdered by Jerry Dominick, of the Muskelshoot reservation three weeks ago because three of his children had died after Jim treated them. There being no witnessses, Jerry has been dismissed by the authorities. This will be the first uprising in forty years.

Killed by Lightning.

During a terrific thunderstorm which passed near Pine Hill, Monroe County, Ala., lightning struck the residence of Jeptha Williams, a prominent farmer. The bolt ran down the chimney, instantly killing James Williams, aged 10, who sat before the grate. The boy's mother was hurled across the room and killed. Williams, who was standing in the doorway, was rendered totally blind. A 2-year-old child playing near her father alone escaped unhurt.

Another Bloody B. & O. Box Car Mystery.

In a Baltimore & Ohio box car, which reached Toledo from Detroit, was found a pool of blood and several bloodstained stones. The roof and sides of the car were bespattered with the same colored fluid and a bloody collar and necktie were also found. Prints of bloody fingers on the car door showed that the victim had been thrown out probably by two men.

Attacked By a Ferret.

The two younger sons of Mrs. R. L. Hudson of Delaware, Ohio, are suffering from a fierce attack made upon them by a ferret while the little fellows are asleep. Only by accident did Mrs. Hudson look into their bed-chamber to see if the boys were awake or not, and, to her surprise, saw that one of them had his nose nearly eaten off by the animal, and the other's cheeks were badly lacerated.

Presidential Appointments.

The President has made the following appointments: Joseph H. Outhwaite, of Ohio, to be a member of the board of ordinance and fortification, vice Byron M. Cutcheon, resigned; Julius G. Tucker, of Texas, consul of the United States at Martinique, West Indies.

The Mikado is Sorry.

The news of the attempted assassination of Li Hung Chang created much excitement at Yokohama. The Emperor and Empress will send a messenger to Shimonoseki to express to the distinguished Chinese statesman their regrets at the most unfortunate occurrence.

Police Justices Wiped Out.

The New York city magistrates' bill has passed the assembly by a vote of: Ayes 85, nays 19. The bill abolishes the New York city police justices and provides for the appointment by the Mayor of nine police magistrates in their stead to take office on July 1.

The Reina Regente.

The Spanish government is officially informed that all reports that the warship Reina Regente has been found submerged in the straits are wholly without foundation, and also that neither wreckage nor bodies from the ship have been washed ashore.

Fierce Fire.

At Medaryville, Ind., fire destroyed five business places and a residence, causing a loss of $30,000.

Killed by a Sweeper.

A group of children persisted in playing about the street-sweeping machines at Indianapolis, which were preparing for the night work. After the machines started one of them clogged, and upon investigation it was found that Frank, the 6-year-old son of Albert Whittlin, had been drawn into the sweeper and crushed to death.

Warehouse in Ashes.

The Charles Lieb chair factory warehouse at Rockport, Ind., burned. Loss, $4,000; partially insured.

Many Killed.

Tokio special: Details of the capture of New Chwang have been received. After a contest of several hours the Chinese were driven toward New Chwang within the fortifications of which city they established themselves apparently determined to defend the position in earnest. The attack was made on March 4. Two points at north and east were assaulted at dawn and at 10 o'clock the gates were forced and breaches made in the walls. The resistance was stubborn but not until 11 o'clock at night was the struggle ended. Eighteen hundred of the Chinese were killed before the streets were cleaned and victory was proclaimed. Five hundred prisoners were taken and the balance of the beaten army escaped in the darkness. Sixteen large guns and an immense quantity of other war material were taken. Latest advices convey the impression that the capture was effected by the troops of the first army from Hai Cheng.

REVOLUTION ENDED.

A New Government Formed Down in South American.

Buenos Ayres, special: Advices from Peru are that President Caceras has resigned and a provisional government was formed after the conclusion of an armistice between the government and insurgents, which preceded Gen. Caceras' resignation, and consists of representatives of both belligerents. The provisional government will issue a decree ordering the holding of new elections.

A dispatch has been received by Secretary Gresham from Minister McKenzie, in Peru, in reference to the recent revolution there. According to McKenzie, there had been bitter fighting in and around Lima for three days. At the end of this time, over 1,000 dead bodies were lying unburied in the streets, and both sides were exhausted. An armistice was agreed to to permit the dead to be buried and wounded to be cared for. After this was finished negotiations were still continued, and finally an agreement of some sort was reached by the leaders of the contending factions, but the details of this were not learned by the minister. Some sort of a provisional government now seems to be in control.

A CYCLONE

At Augusta, Ga., Wrecks Fifty Houses.

A cyclone passed over the southwestern portion of Augusta, Ga., doing considerable damage to property. The large flour mill of Miller & Co., in the track of the cyclone, was partly blow down. The round house of the Central railroad was demolished, and several small houses were unroofed. Men working in the roundhouse of the Central road had narrow escapes, some taking refuge under the engines. Three small children who were in the streets were blown some distance and badly injured. The damage to property amounts to several thousand dollars.

Fifty houses were wrecked, mostly small ones occupied by negroes, who with their families have been made homeless. The electric light and telephone wires were blown down. A live wire fell on a mule, killing him instantly. A number of negroes were slightly injured from being whirled about in falling houses. One negro had his leg broken. Small huts and planks and tin roofing were sent flying through the air and driven into buildings on the line of the storm, which traveled in a circle. The escapes from death were miraculous.

FIENDISH.

The Torture Inflicted On an Aged Couple by Masked Robbers.

Three masked men tortured and robbed Merrit Childs and his venerable wife at their home at Palmer's Mill, in the Melvin Creek Valley, Pennsylvania. The couple were preparing to retire when a rap on the door attracted Mr. Child's attention. He opened the door, and as he did so was knocked down by a blow from the fist of a masked man, who, followed by two others, entered the house and bound and gagged Mr. Childs and his wife. They put Childs' feet against a stove until his wife divulged the hiding place of $500 in bills. She insisted that that was all they had. Then they pushed her bare feet against the hot stove, and she told them where to find another $100. The robbers refused to believe that this was all the old folks had, and tortured both of them again. Thirty cents was all this produced. The robbers then went away. Mrs. Childs' condition is dangerous. She suffered so much from fright, shock and burns that it is doubful if she will recover.

Bold Work.

Chicago special: When the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul train, which leaves the city for Omaha at 10:40 p. m., was passing through the yards to the Union depot the other night, with the crew on board, three robbers, armed with revolvers boarded it at Wood and Kinzie streets. They went into a Pullman car and attacked M. C. O'Connell, the brakeman, beating him over the head with their weapons and taking his money. When the colored porter, called Charlie, came to see what the trouble was he was assaulted in like manner and robbed. Frank Wilbur, the conductor, pulled the air-brakes and when the train stopped the police were called. The robbers escaped, although the railroad men assert that an officer caught one of the gang and then let him go.

The Nicaraguan Controversy.

The latest developments in the Nicaraguan question are of a character that at least temporarily sets at rest any baleful impressions that may have been created by the strong ground England has taken in the demands made by her upon the South American republic. The government is not on the verge of trouble with England, inasmuch as dispatches from Ambassador Bayard, at London, in response to telegrams from this government requiring him to ascertain the attitude of Great Britian in case Nicaragua should refuse to pay the indemnity demanded for the outrage upon Mr. Hatch, indicated very clearly that whatever else might happen, England will not seek to acquire American territory.

Fire at Seville, Ohio.

Fire broke out in the American Hotel, at Seville, Ohio. It started in an upstairs room where fire had been started and had been forgotten. The entire upper part of the building was afire when discovered. The building was a two-and-a-half-story frame, and is a total loss. Fire communicated to adjoining buildings quickly and the entire town seemed doomed. The Medina Fire Department was telegraphed for, and arrived on a special train. The run was made in about 20 minutes by Engineer Herman Eddy. By the time it arrived the wind had changed and the town was saved. The total loss will be about $8,000, probable insurance $2,000.

Killed in a Mine.

An explosion of gas occurred in the Rocky Mountain Coal and Iron Company's mine, No. 5, Red Canon, Wyo., with terrible results. James Bruce, mine foreman, ex-County Commissioner, was instantly killed by flying timbers as were also four others. From twenty-five to fifty were in the mine at the time of the explosion and at this time have not been rescued and are certainly dead. About 150 men are employed in this mine, and most of them had gone out. The covering of the slope and buildings at the mouth were blown to atoms. The mine was considered one of the safest in the State.

A New Treaty.

Preliminaries are being arranged for the framing of a new treaty between the United States and Great Britian concerning Bearing sea seizures. The negotiations will be carried on in Washington. Sir Charles Tupper, minister of the marine and fisheries for Canada, and other leading statesmen of the dominion, including probably Minister Foster, will come to co-operate with Sir Julian Pauncefote, British ambassador, concerning the terms of the treaty. The meeting will probably be deferred until late in the summer or fall.

Bank Robbers Thwarted.

A fruitless attempt was made to burglarize A. Wasmuth's bank, at Roanoke, Ind. Burglars succeeded in blowing off the outside door of the large safe, with nitroglycerine, and were at work on the inner door when they were discovered by Chris Regadanz, who was awakened by the explosion. Regadanz gave the alarm and the thieves fled, followed by several shots fired by Regadanz. The bank contained a large sum of money, as it is the only banking establishment within ten miles. This is the second attempt to rob the place.

Secretary Morton on the Apple Crop.

The foreign demand for apples grown in the United States has always been in excess of the supply. Great Britain alone, during the nine months ending September, 1894, paid the orchards of the United States $2,500,000. In view of the fact that the entire apple crop is sometimes threatened by the worms that infest the trees, Secretary Morton has had the matter investigated, and finds that spraying with a solution of Paris green is a simple and effective remedy, which he urges all farmers and horticulturists to try.

A Mob Liberates Prisoners.

A mob broke into the jail at Woodward, O. T., overpowering the guards and deputies, and three prisoners, Will Blackshear, Tom Yest and Edwin Lahr, were liberated. The jail is a mere shell, and the mob had an easy time effecting an entrance, but the guards made desperate resistance, succumbing only to overwhelming numbers. No one was seriously hurt so far as is known, and not a shot was fired. The guards claim to have recognized some members of the mob, as few wore masks.

George Gould Hopeful.

George J. Gould believes that the better times have set in. He says of the situation: "I am confident that there is a general improvement under way. The earnings of the Western Union Telegraph Company are a good index of business conditions, and receipts at test offices show increases of about $10,000 each week. This advance will continue, I think, and I should like to see a tendency in railway earnings to increase as compared with corresponding periods last year."

Crash on the B. and O.

The westbound Fairmount passenger train on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, while running thirty miles an hour, collided with a gravel train at Oakdale, Pa. Engineer Wm. Bradley and Fireman Geo. Hutchinson, of the passenger train were dangerously hut. Engineer Kerrins, of the gravel train also sustained serious injuries. The passengers were not seriously hurt. The wreck occurred on a sharp curve and the occupants of both engines had no time to jump.

To Aid Rebels.

The following advices have been receivet from Mexico, through Spanish official sources: Cuban committees are raising funds for the insurgents in Cuba. The Spaniards in some localities are offsetting this by preparing to organize for service in support of the crown in Cuba. They have appointed a committee to wait on the Spanish minister to ask him to obtain from President Diaz permission to organize such bodies on Mexican soil.

Earthquake's Horrors.

Rome special: A very heavy earthquake occurred at the town of Comacchio, located in the province of Ferrara, in the midst of the marshes of Valli Comacchio, three miles from the Adriatic. One of the churches and a number of houses were damaged at Mirabella in the province of Catania. The wall of the church fell burying a number of worshippers. Up to the present time six bodies have been recovered.

A Woman Raids a Bar-Room.

Mrs. Michael Cotterman, wife of the leading shoe merchant, and prominent in church work, while angry because Samuel Villard, saloonist, of Apple Creek, Ohio, sold her husband whisky, armed herself with a hatchet and began smashing in the plate-glass front to Villard's saloon. When the hatchet flew out of her hands she finished the job with her fists and a broom.

Gas Main Exploded.

A gas main on the line of the Mississinewa Company burst at a station near the Soldiers' Home, Marion, Ind., while a workman, William Coon, was working with it. Fire was communicated to the gas from an adjacent heater, and an explosion followed. Coon was hurled twenty-five feet under the blaze and was severely burned.

Reunion of the Army of the Cumberland.

Gen. H. V. Boynton, corresponding secretary of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland, has been authorized by Gen. Resecrans, its president, to appoint the next annual reunion of that society at Chickamauga, Ga., on Sept. 13, being the day before the dedication of the national military park.

Burned to Death.

Mrs. Harriet McKensey, 80 years of age, and one of the oldest pioneers of Madison Township, Scioto County, Ohio, was fatally burned. She was passing the grate, when her clothes caught fire, and, before help could reach her, she was fatally burned. She died almost instantly.

Judges Appointed.

Wm. M. Springer of Illinois, has been appointed Judge of the United States Court of the northern district of the Indian Territory, and Constantine Buckley Kilgore of Texas, Judge of the United States Court of the southern district of the Indian Territory.

A Town Burned.

Almost the entire business portion of the town of Fort William, Ont., was, burned. Sixteen buildings were destoryed, among them Spharr's hotel, the Woodbine hotel, O'Connor's hotel, the Ontario house, Ingall's block and several residences.

Gen. Badeu Dead.

Gen. Adam Badeu, who was on the staff of Gen. Grant as military secretary, and who afterwards served as Secretary of the American legation in London, died, aged 64 years, at Ridgewood, N. J.

REINA REGENTE LOST

SPANISH CRUISER WAS SUNK NEAR GIBRALTAR.

Second Search of the Alfonso XII. Proves Successful—It Is Believed the Whole Crew, 420 in Number, Have Been Lost.

Divers to Recover Bodies.

The Spanish cruiser Reina Regenta lies at the bottom of the sea. There is no longer any doubt as to her fate or the fate of the 420 officers and men she carried. Every man on board must have perished when the boat went down near the Straits of Gibraltar, for not one has been found to tell the story of the awful disaster. Aside from the little wreckage picked up and which first gave a clew to her fate nothing remains above the water but about twenty inches of her masts.

It is another one of the terrible wrecks of history in which boat and crew disappeared so completely that it was only after a long search that the scene of the disaster could be located—another that called for the sacrifice of hundreds of human lives. The men must have had absolutely no chance for escape. They must have gone down with the boat almost before they realized their danger or some bodies would have been found. As it is they are all believed to be in the wreck, and divers have been sent to the scene to attempt to recover them.

The ship was found by the Alfonso XII., which was sent in search of her after it was reported that wreckage from her had been picked up. She was found near Bajo Aeitanos, not far from the Straits of Gibraltar. The Alfonso XII. and the Isla de Luzon started in search of her immediately after she was reported missing on March 13, and they have kept up the search continuously since, but without success until now. The Alfonso XII. returned to Cadiz after locating her, but has started back again with divers and appliances to attempt to recover the bodies of the officers and crew.

The Reina Regente was reported missing on March 13. She had just conveyed from Cadiz to Tangier the returning Moorish mission to Spain. The cruiser left Tangier on March 10 for Cadix, and her whereabouts were not definitely ascertained until to-day. Pieces of one of her boats and semaphore flags were reported to have been picked up along the shore near Ceuta and Tarifa. She carried a crew of 420 officers and men, and all hands are believed to have perished.

The Reina Regente, about two years ago, came to New York as one of the Spanish squadron which escorted across the Atlantic the Columbus caravels. The Infanta Isabel, now reported to have sunk an American schooner off the coast of Cuba, and the Nueva Espana were the other ships of the Spanish squadron. The Reina Regente was launched in 1887 and was one of three second-class deck-protected cruisers of the same build, her sister ships being the Alfonso XII. and Lepanto, all of 4,800 tons, 12,000 horse power, and expected to steam twenty knots. The wrecked cruiser was 320 feet long, had 50 feet 6 inches beam, and a draught of 20 feet 4 inches. She was propelled by twin screws. Her protected deck was 4¾ inches thick on the slopes, her conning tower had 5 inches of armor and her gun shields were 3 inches thick.

INSULTED NOW BY JOHN BULL

No American to Be Consulted in Settlement of Nicaraguan Affairs.

A dispatch from Managua, Nicaragua, says: "Through its minister here the British government has submitted an ultimatum to Nicaragua. It demands a cash indemnity of £15,000 for the expulsion of Mr. Hatch, British consular agent at Bluefields, and also the appointment of a commission to adjudicate the damages sustained by persons and property of British subjects expelled from the Mosquito reservation about the same time. By the terms of the ultimatum Great Britain is to name one of the commissioners and Nicaragua another, and these two are to choose a third, who shall not be a citizen of the United States. It was also made known that a British warship is now on her way to Nicaragua to enforce these demands, which must be complied with in seven weeks from Feb. 27 last, the date of the ultimatum."

From all that can be learned in Washington, Great Britain's attitude in this matter is regarded as one of great severity. It is said that Mr. Hatch, who was expelled from Nicaragua last July, was not the British consular agent at Bluefields. It is authoritatively stated that he had received no exequator from the Nicaraguan government and was not recognized by them in any official capacity. He was a merchant at Bluefields and is represented as having been active in fomenting troubles in the Mosquito reservation between the Indian residents there and the Nicaraguan government. He was expelled for this reason, and with him went a number of other foreigners, several of whom were Americans.

The United States made no complaint of the expulsion of its own citizens, believing that they merited the punishment they received. Apparently the British government is not disposed to take that view of the matter, so far, at least, as Mr. Hatch is concerned. It is said here that Mr. Hatch was fortunate to escape so easily. There are people in Washington who are familiar with the occurrence in the Mosquito reservation. They believe that Mr. Hatch should have been hanged for his complicity in the revolution, and it is for this reason that great surprise is expressed at the radical position taken by the British government with reference to him.

ANOTHER GREAT UNIVERSITY.

Soon to Be Built by the Methodists at Washington.

Washington is to have another great educational institution rivaling the Catholic University. It is to be known as the American University and will be conducted by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In February, 1890, the wife of Bishop Hurst urged her husband to take $1,000 from her private purse and expend it for the option on ninety acres of ground four miles northwest of the White House, where it was designed to establish a great Methodist American university. Last week the final payment on the $100,000 purchase price of this land was paid over, and in addition to the value of the site the promoters of the university enterprise are now able to report assets aggregating nearly $400,000. Next September the corner stone of the first structure of the American University will be laid with impressive ceremonies. That will be the hall of history, estimated to cost $150,000, of which sum nearly $100,000 is now in hand. By autumn it is hoped that the main or administration building fund will also be sufficiently advanced to permit of the laying of the corner stone. It is an open secret that a prominent American Methodist is ready to give the whole sum necessary for the construction of this building, $250,000. The year 1895 is likely to mark the laying of the foundations of the great educational institutions which the Methodists have for thirty years had their hearts set upon.

The American University is designed to be purely a postgraduate institution. It will have no collegiate course. The hope is to make it take the place now filled by the foreign universities in finishing the education of large numbers of graduates from American colleges. Though distinctively a Methodist institution, it is designed to build and manage the American University upon a very broad policy, not especially Methodistic in its operation, nor yet wholly Protestant, but broad enough to take in everything for which there may be demand and for which an endowment or a faculty may be secured. The ultimate cost of the university, as Bishop Hurst and his enthusiastic co-workers have it in their minds, will be at least $10,000,000.

SHE WAS A HEROINE.

A 15-Year-Old Girl Gives Up Her Life for Two Children.

Somewhere under the ice of Peconic Bay is the dead body of a heroine—Lillian McMullen, says a Sag Harbor, L. I., dispatch. She was only 15 years old, but she sacrificed her life to save two children who were under her care. With two little daughters of George Gordon in her charge, and accompanied by a big dog, she set out to cross the ice. They were half way across when Lillian, who was slightly in advance, suddenly sank out of sight. She had stepped in a hole nearly covered with snow. The children set up a shriek, as they looked in terror at the gap in the ice. When the girl came to the surface she was quite near the ragged edge, and she grasped it firmly. The children started to her assistance. "Keep back!" she said, firmly. "I think I can get out all right." But her warning was unheeded. "Keep back! Keep back!" she repeated, but too late. The children tried to grasp her, the ice gave way under them and they went into the water.

The elder of the children grasped Lillian's dress and sustained herself, and Lillian, still holding to the edge of the ice with one hand, grasped the younger child with the other, and held her head above the water. The children were screaming all the time, and the dog ran barking around the spot. Lillian gathered herself for an effort. She pushed the smaller of the Gordons to the edge of the ice and attempted to lift her upon it. The little one grasped the ice and the dog seized her by the clothing. Rover tried to pull the child from her position, but the noble brute slipped on the uncertain surface. He, however, hung on, and at last lifted his charge so far from the water that she was able to clamber out on firm ice.

The other two girls in the water, meantime, were having a desperate struggle. Lillian tried to raise her companion upon the ice. Once, twice, thrice, she made the effort, and every time the ice broke under the strain. Her breath became labored and her movements feebler. The water chilled her through and through and her hands were bruised and numbed, but still she clung to the ice and the girl to her.

Now she was beyond further exertion. "I'll hold on fast," said she to the Gordon girl. "You climb up over me. Hurry up! I can't last much longer." And the other attempted to reach safety in that way. The ice broke under the double weight repeatedly, and each time the heroic McMullen girl grasped where it was firm and held desperately to it. "Now make one more trial," she said, weakly. This time the Gordon girl raised her shoulders above the water. Rover seized her and tugged gamefully. Lillian added what little strength she had remaining, and at last the second child was in safety.

"Keep away!" again cautioned the little heroine. She made a feeble effort to draw herself up. She slipped back. Her numbed hands grasped the edge of the ice for an instant and then released their hold. She went under the water and under the ice, for there was no sign of her after that. The children reached home almost prostrated by their experience. Between sobs they told the story to their parents, and Rover crouched in a corner and whined piteously.

SPAIN FIRES AGAIN.

One of Her Gunboats Dismasts the Little American Schooner Irene.

A Key West special says: "The latest report is to the effect that the schooner Irene was fired into and dismantled by the Spanish cruiser Infanta Isabel. The news was brought to this city by a vessel engaged in the cattle trade between this port and the mainland. The Irene is a small schooner owned in this port by Canary Islanders. She has been employed in the fish trade all winter, but within the past few days returned with a party of court officials from Fort Meyers, where an important murder trial has been held. She afterward sailed for the fish ranch at Punta Gorda, whence, it is reported, an expedition sailed for Cuba. This point has been under surveillance by the Spanish cruiser and the schooner was followed from here and fired into. This is the report given by fishermen at the ranch to a vessel which has just arrived. The family and owner and the crew of the Irene live here.

"No further particulars have been learned about the American schooner reported to have been sunk off Puerta del Padre, Cuba, by the Spanish cruiser Arcedo. No denial is made here by the Spanish agents as to the corectness of the report, but it is said the vessel was not flying the American flag. The reason advanced for the sinking was that she would not answer signals. Diligent inquiry among ship owners fails to show any vessel belonging to this port missing."

SAIL FOR THE PROMISED LAND.

Two Hundred Georgia Negroes Begin Their Voyage to Liberia.

Tuesday afternoon the steamer Horsa sailed from Savannah, Ga., for Liberia. Those on board sung a farewell song, of which the refrain was taken up by thousands of negroes on the harves. Great crowds followed the steamship to the end of the wharves, nearly two miles away. The emigrants continued to sing until the steamer had been lost to view. The vessel carries 200 negroes, who go to make their home in Liberia.

This will be an occasion of much importance to the negroes of the South. After all the requirements of the United States laws on carriage of passengers to sea were complied with the officers of the Emigration Society began to arrange for the embarkation of the colonists. Early in the morning negroes from all sections of the country began to gather near the dock to see their brethren start for Africa. By 10 o'clock upward of 5,000 had assembled, but none were admitted within the inclosure of the ship at the dock. The scene was pathetic. Men and women of all ages, children from 4 years of age upward and one or two cripples, all joined in prayer and hymns, making a scene never to be forgotten by those present to see the colonists depart.

LI HUNG CHANG SHOT

JAPANESE FANATIC ATTEMPTS TO KILL HIM.

The Affair Creates the Greatest Excitement—Emperor and Empress Express Their Regret—China May Now Get Better Terms of Peace.

Story of the Assault.

As Li Hung Chang, the Chinese peace envoy, was returning to his lodgings in Shimonoseki, Sunday, after having attended a conference with Count Ito and Viscount Mutsu, the Japanese peace plenipotentiaries, a young Japanese fired a pistol at him. The bullet struck Li Hung Chang in the face. It is believed that the wound is not serious. Prime Minister Ito telegraphed to Hiroshima asking that Dr. Sato, the imperial physician, be sent to Shimonoseki to attend the Chinese Commissioner. The Minister of State and a number of other officials visited Li Hung Chang and expressed their deep sorrow at the occurrence. Every precaution was taken by the police and military to prevent any trouble. The attempt to assassinate the representative of the Emperor of China caused the most intense excitement and on every side there were expressions of deep regret. The would-be murderer was arrested. It is believed that he was prompted to the crime by misguided patriotism. The news of the attempted assassination of Li Hung Chang created much excitement at Yokohama. The Emperor and Empress sent a messenger to Shimonoseki to express to the distinguished Chinese statesman their regrets at the most unfortunate occurrence.

Great Excitement in Washington.

The news of the assault on Li Hung Chang has caused a sensation in diplomatic circles in Washington. Cases where an envoy of any kind has been assaulted in the country to which he is accredited are rare, and those in which a peace commissioner is attacked are almost unheard of in modern days. The opinion in Washington is that Japan will suffer greatly in consequence of the assault, and that the position of China will be so strengthened that she may be able to secure better terms of peace than she could otherwise have hoped for.

LI HUNG CHANG.

The incident may lead to the breaking off of peace negotiations, which were proceeding so satisfactorily, or at least may postpone further action in this direction until Japan has guaranteed the safety of Chinese envoys and made proper reparation.

The Chinese legation received prompt notification of the matter, but their advices contained nothing not in the press dispatches. Minister Yang Yu did not care to discuss the subject. It was stated at the legation that it was not believed that it would lead to the total breaking off of the peace negotiations, although it might cause them to be interrupted for a time.

The Attack on the Czarowitz.

The attack on Li Hung Chang calls to mind the attempt made on May 11, 1891, to kill the czarowitz, now the Emperor of Russia. In November, 1890, the czarowitz, in company with his cousin, Prince George of Greece, started on a tour of the world. They visited Vienna, Athens, Cairo, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Ceylon, Bangkok, Siam, various places in China and Japan. While at Otsu, Japan, the czarowitz was attacked with a sword by a fanatical Japanese officer and quite severely wounded. He would in all likelihood have been killed had it not been for the bravery of Prince George, who sprung upon the would-be assassin and felled him to the ground. The affair caused the greatest excitement, and the mikado traveled to Otsu to visit the czarowitz and express his regret for the attack.

MILLION DOLLARS IN ASHES.

Big Packing House at Kansas City, Kan., Destroyed by Fire.

At 6:30 o'clock fire broke out in the hog building of the Reid Packing Company's plant at Kansas and Railroad avenues, Kansas City, Kas., and almost the entire group of buildings was entirely destroyed, causing a loss of over $1,000,000. Before the firemen had laid a line of hose the roof had fallen in. The flames from the hog building communicated with the engine house on the south and soon wrecked the boilers and destroyed the effectiveness of the company's fire apparatus. A disastrous explosion was narrowly averted by the firemen who, at the risk of life and limb, rolled twenty barrels of gasoline from the buildings.

From the engine building the fire spread to five one-story ice-houses, each 200 by 125 feet. These were rapidly devoured by the flames, and the four-story storage building, which was right in line, fell a prey to the flames. There was $100,000 worth of meats in the basement in this building. The first floor was used as a warehouse, the second was filled with dry salt meats. On the third floor were big hogsheads filled with meat ready for shipment, while the fourth floor was packed with dressed meats.

The fire leaped from room to room and roared and crackled until the roof fell in and the flames shot fifty feet in the air. At this point the Kansas City, Mo., fire department was appealed to for assistance, and six hose companies and two engines responded. The water tower from the Armour-packing company also assisted. The firemen turned their whole attention to saving the beef house and a dozen streams were turned on the burning bridge. Notwithstanding the strenuous efforts of the firemen section after section of the bridge was partially destroyed and finally fell to the ground, while the work of destruction was complete. Finally the beef house caught fire and the firemen were powerless to stay the greedy flames as they ate their way into the building through the bridge. The entire plant is valued at $600,000, while the estimate placed on the stock ranges from $800,000 to $1,000,000. The loss on the buildings destroyed will probably reach $400,000 to $600,000 and that on the meats, oil, lard and other products consumed will bring the total to over a million and a quarter dollars. The insurance is ample to cover all losses. Four men were slightly injured.

SIXTY WERE KILLED.

AWFUL DEATH ROLL OF A MINE DISASTER.

Red Canon, Wyoming, the Scene of the Most Horrible Explosion in the History of Western Mining—Two Fires Cost a Million.

A Blast of Death.

The details of the explosion at the Rocky Mountain Coal and Iron Company's mine No 5 at Red Canon, near Evanston, Wyo., Wednesday evening mark it as one of the most horrible in the history of coal mining in the West. There are over sixty widows and 250 orphaned children as a result of the disaster. The names of the dead as gathered from the company's pay-roll are:

Willard Brown,	Charles Kazola,
James Bruce,	Marshall Langdon,
Aaron Bull,	Wm. Langdon, Sr.,
Henry Burton,	John Lapar,
Albert Clark,	John Lester,
Charles Clark,	Joseph N. Lesti,
James E. Clark,	James Limb,
James T. Clark,	David Lloyd,
Samuel Clay,	John G. Locke,
W. E. Cox,	David W. Lowrey,
Jerry Crawford,	O. B. Maltby,
George Critchley,	John T. Martin,
John Dexter,	Walter Miller,
John Fearn,	Fred Morgan,
Wm. Graham, Jr.,	John Morriss,
W. H. Grieves,	William Morriss,
James Haden,	William Pope,
Samuel Halston,	Henry Scothan,
George Hardy,	Wm. Sellers, Jr.,
James Hutchinson,	Wm. Sellers, Sr.,
Thos. Hutchinson,	Matt. Silta,
H. A. Hyborn,	Hugh Sloan,
George Hydes,	John Theby,
Isaac Johnson,	Wm. Wagstaff,
Matt Johnson,	Wm. Weedup,
Baptiste Julian,	John Wilkes.
Gus Kazola,

About thirty of the men killed belonged to the A. O. U. W., in which order they were insured for $2,000 apiece. It is estimated that sixty men perished in the disaster. Seven were killed on the outside.

The slopes and entrances to the lower workings are blockaded by wreckage, and several days will be required for rescue parties to reach the bodies in the mine. The explosion in the mine shook the whole country around, wrecked the power plant, a fan house, and several other buildngs, entailing heavy loss, but the death roll far overshadows other considerations. Immediately after the explosion Supt. Bradbury telephoned for physicans. Brave men tried to descend some of the air shafts and escape slopes without success, and it was not until three hours after the explosion that a volunteer party entered the main entrance to the slopes, and soon afterwards returned with two bodies. Then reported caves stopped further progress down the slope. Then a party went down to shovel out the caves, after which the searching party again entered, and work in that line is new going on.

The explosion is described by many as most terrific, shaking the whole town and causing women and children to run into the streets imploring for the safety of the beloved ones. Though there is no fire in the mine, the explosion is supposed to have come from a blast setting fire to dust, making a dust explosion. The mine was supposed to be free from gas and well ventilated. This is the third disastrous explosion in this vicinity. In 1881 No. 2 mine, Rocky Mountain, exploded, killing thirty-six Chinese and four white men. In the spring of 1886, Union Pacific Mine No. 4 killed thirty-six men.

WAREHOUSE IN ASHES.

Fire Causing Nearly Half a Million Loss in Sioux City, Iowa.

The destruction by fire at Sioux City, Iowa, of the Western Transfer and Implement Company's warehouse and the storehouse and elevator of Hubbard & Gere's linseed oil mill Thursday caused an aggregate loss of $400,000. The storage building was an immense structure, 150x60 feet, including a brick oil storage annex. The main part of the elevator was five stories high, and had a capacity of 150,000 bushels of flaxseed. In bins at the time were stored 100,000 bushels, and on the lower floor several thousand tons of linseed-oil cake were ready for the market. In the annex the oil was in huge tanks, having an estimated capacity of 120,000 gallons. The huge warehouse of the Transfer company, 100 by 150 feet in size and with four stores besides the basement, was filled from top to bottom with farm implements and machinery. The machinery was owned by about twenty implement companies in different parts of the United States. The contents of the burned warehouse were covered by insurance aggregating $31,750. The warehouse building itself was covered by $30,000 insurance in Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company. The insurance on the oil mill cannot be obtained, as the National Linseed Oil Company handles the insurance on all its plants. Franklin and Pennsylvania companies carried $3,000 each and the Commercial Union $6,000 on seed in the elevator.

NEW ORLEANS COTTON BURNS.

Fire that Causes a Total Loss of Over $500,000.

Two squares of cotton presses and warehouses and 20,000 bales of cotton were burned Thursday morning at New Orleans, La., the total loss being over half a million dollars. The blaze originated in a bale of cotton in Yard No. 1 of the International Cotton Press Company at Calliope and Peters streets. Owing to some unusual confusion in the yard the night before a number of bales of cotton were not covered with tarp

Silence

By Miss Mulock

He never spoke of his mother at all now, yet he was neither dull nor melancholy. It is a remarkable fact, which people who desire to punish other people, deservedly or undeservedly, would do well to remember, that the sharpest pain cannot last forever, and that a young couple, thoroughly happy in each other, will remain happy in spite of all their affectionate relatives, who think they ought to be miserable. Ay, and in spite of many outside things that might have been hard in later years; but youth is the time to fight with fate—youth with its infinite courage, its eternal hope.

Working at the mill all day, writing his book at night, with little society, for the Symingtons had gone into Edinburgh, with no relaxation except the daily walk "between the lights," which his wife insisted upon, Roderick had yet, he declared, never spent a happier three months. And he looked so well, too, for it is not work that kills, but "worry," foolish ambitions, unsatisfied cravings, jarred tempers, stinging remorse or unrepented sin. Not mere sorrow; that can be borne. Both of these had known sorrow—she especially— but there was a holy serenity now, even when one day she spoke of that grave at Neuchatel.

"Sophie Reynier sent me these violets from it. She says they are having such a lovely spring. And so are we. Just look, in bud already. And only listen, Roderick, how that mavis is singing?"

They were walking up and down the sheltered kitchen garden—lovely, though it was a kitchen garden, with its walks bordered by flowers, sweet-fashioned perennials, which sprung up year by year, not disdaining the neighborhood of the vegetables, but growing together, each after its kind, in happy union. "Like you and your poor folk," Roderick once said, noticing how everybody loved her and did her honor—maid-servants, milk-girls, all the people about the place. "They are so kind. I have such a happy life," was all the young mistress answered. And her fair, pale face bent down over her flowers, and up again to her budding apple blossoms and her tall forest trees, now growing full of nest-building birds.

"That mavis, I have watched him this week past. I am sure he has a young family somewhere near. And he sings—how he does sing!—in the top of that sycamore. He began the very day they planted out the hyacinths in my garden under my window."

This, too, was a labor of love, arranged surreptitiously between Mr. Black and his old gardener—a little mathematical diagram of beds, with grass lawn between, in which had sprung up, as if by magic, successions of spring flowers, snowdrops, crocuses, hepaticas. Now, April being come, even in the dear Scotch climate, the sunshine was strengthening and the garden brightening every week.

"I shall have a beautiful nosegay presently," she said; "just in time for my wedding-day."

He had almost forgotten it—the villain. He could hardly believe he had been married a year. And yet it felt sometimes as if they had been married all their lives, so completely had they grown into one another. It was only by an effort that either could recall their old selves, in the days when they were apart.

"That sunset" (they were watching it from a favorite seat she had—a summer-house, warm and dry, facing the south-west, and looking down the winding glen toward the mill, which, hidden by trees, only presented a few chimney-tops, and that fairy-like column of white smoke, unobjectionable to even the most aesthetic eyes)—"that sunset," she said, "it makes the whole sky 'colorise,' as we used to say in Switzerland. Do you remember the Jungfrau and the Wetterhorn that day at Berne? and the Alpes Bernoises from Lausanne? Oh, my land! it is a heavenly land! I can never forget it. But this is my home."

She had been speaking French for a wonder; they had dropped almost entirely into English now, even when together, but she said "home"—that one dear word which we Britons specially have—with an intonation inexpressible but unmistakable. All her heart had settled into her husband's country. "Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God."

Never, though Roderick Jardine may live to see thousands of sunsets, will he forget this one, nor his wife's face as she looked at it, watching it till the last glow had died away. Then she rose.

"Now let us go in, dear."

"Are you tired?"—

"I think so." Leaning heavily on his arm she went indoors; but she sat up sewing till her usual time, and rose as usual when, at a specially early hour—for he happened to have a long and busy day before him—he went off to the mill.

He was sitting in his little, dingy office there, quite late in the afternoon, for he had some difficult accounts to make up, which he hated, poor fellow! not having been blessed by nature with a talent for arithmetic; but it was Roderick's peculiarity that what he did worst he always worked hardest at, and what he particularly hated he always forced himself to do at once. His head swam, and his eyes were dazed, yet he still stuck bravely to those mountains of figures, alp after alp arising before his troubled brains, when he was startled by a little knock, and old Black, who he thought had gone home two hours ago, presented himself with a beaming countenance.

"Busy? Ye're always busy. And so I thought, sir, I'd just come mysel' and be the first to give ye the good news. Laddie, laddie," with a slap on the back which contrasted oddly with the respectful "Sir," "go your ways, man, and thank the Lord for all His mercies. Your wife's doing well; and ye've got a bairn."

"My wife!" Roderick sprung up like a shot.

"Ou, ay, she's fine; and it's a lad-bairn. She bade Janet come and tell ye. She wadna hae ye fashed about it till all was over. My certie! but she's a brave woman—a woman in a thousand, is young Mrs. Jardine."

The old fellow drew out his snuff-box, took several pinches, and blew his nose with great violence, deliberately turning his back upon the young man, as perhaps was best.

"Thank God!" Roderick said at last, quietly and gravely. "Have I a son or a daughter? I forgot. I did not quite hear."

"A son, sir. Another Jardine of Blackhall. They tell me—I've been up at the house mysel'—that he's such a grand bairn that his mother is so proud of him."

"His mother—my son; how strange it sounds!"

Roderick put his hands over his eyes, mainly trying to realize that great change in a young man's life, when he has actually "given hostages to fortune" and sees himself not merely as himself, but as the father of a race to come, who will carry down his name, laden with curses or blessings, to remote posterity. A certain momentary terror—or less terror than awe—came over him. Then, as if accepting the responsibility which no good man need fear, and which most men in their secret hearts are rather proud of, he shook hands with Mr. Black, put his account books aside—luckily they were nearly finished—and prepared to go home at once.

It was a wet night, had been pelting rain all day; truly the small Jardine of Blackhall got but a weeping welcome into this "wearifu' world." But the young father never noticed it. He was fully and overpoweringly happy. The fear which half unconsciously had hung over him like a cloud for weeks was now all changed into a delicious hope and joy.

Bidding a cheery good-night to Mr. Black ("By the by, I had a line from your wife yesterday, but that's no matter now," said he, as they parted), Roderick walked rapidly up the brae—the familiar walk, with the light in the parlor window shining ahead all the way. It was dark now, but there was a faint glimmer from the room upstairs, his wife's room. His heart swelled almost to bursting as he looked at it.

"My son, our son. Another Henry Jardine. If my father had only known! And my mother, shall I write to my mother? Perhaps! No!"

Choking down the pain that would rise, turning resolutely from the ever-lurking shadow which no sunshine of joy could quite banish, the young man passed through the dark garden to the hall-door.

Faithful Janet was there to open it; only she. All was safe now, but it had been an anxious day. The house felt quiet—painfully quiet, its master thought, as he went into the empty parlor. They would not let him speak to his wife, but only look at her as she lay asleep, like a marble image. Her eyes were closed, but a sweet smile flitted about her mouth, and her left hand was extended outside the coverlet, over a small heap, a little helpless something. What a slender, soft hand it seemed, with the wedding-ring shining upon it, and yet how strong it was—strong and tender—essentially a mother's hand.

The young husband's eyes were dim, but he had self-control enough to obey orders and creep quietly down-stairs, not even asking to see his little son; in truth, just then he hardly thought of him at all as a human entity, but only of the mother, the precious life imperiled and saved. And he had known nothing—nothing, all this time. With what silent courage had she sent him away at breakfast time, and kept him ignorantly content at his work all that long day; that terrible day!

"Just like her. She never thinks of herself, but of me. My darling—my only darling!"

By and by she awoke, and he was allowed to kiss her, without speaking; indeed, she made no attempt to speak, only smiled—her own ineffably peaceful smile. Then he settled himself in the parlor, which looked frightfully empty, all the more so that so many of her things were lying about—her garden shawl and hat, which she had taken off when she came in the evening before, her work-box, her desk—carefully left open, with a little heap of addressed envelopes placed on the top of it, so as to save him all possible trouble. There were even the foreign stamps ready affixed to the Neuchatel letters. No one at home had been forgotten; neither Mrs. Grierson nor Lady Symington—not even Mrs. Alexander Thomson. At which Roderick again muttered, "Just like her." But there was no letter—how could there be—addressed to Mrs. Jardine.

"Best not," he said, with a thrill of anger, the sharpest he had ever yet felt; "we bore all our sorrows alone, we will not make her a sharer in our joy. It is nothing to her, and she is nothing to us now."

But even while he said it Roderick's heart melted. It seemed as if, now he was a father himself, he felt all the more yearning toward his mother—the mother who bore him. Nothing could alter that fact.

With a great sigh he sat down to his solitary supper, and prepared for an equally solitary evening.

He was slightly occupied, however, by the letters he had to write—in French or English—letters to those whom his wife loved, and who loved her and would sympathize with her to the uttermost, he knew. Faithfully he fulfilled all her wishes, even writing a line to his sister Bella. But this, unlike the others, was brief and cold. As he did it hot indignation, righteous indignation, flamed up in the young man's heart—he would not have been a true man else—a wrathful sense of all his darling had been made to endure—his innocent darling, whom his mother had never known nor taken any pains to know, and whom his sisters, following her lead, had as completely ignored as if she were no wife at all. But the storm did not last long—he was of too gentle a nature; and then he was so happy, so very happy. From his calm height of content that night he felt as if he could afford to look with placable and even compassionate eye on his whole family—on the whole world.

Until near morning he sat writing, and then, finding that all was well in the silent room upstairs, he went to bed, just looking out first upon the dim dawn—only one long yellow streak in the horizon—and thinking, if to-morrow happened to be a fine day, how pleasant all would be in his wife's room, where the sun shone almost all day long; how the hyacinths would send up their fragrant breath from the garden below, and the mavis, her own particular mavis, would sing his incessant song "from morn till dewy eve" over his busy mate and newly hatched young. All the world seemed full of life and joy and hope. He had to cover his ears ere he could get to sleep, for the birds were already awake and singing so loud.

An hour or two's rest and Roderick was up again, half dizzy with his unbelievable new joy, and trying hard to talk business with Mr. Black, who had come to Blackhall himself to get the earliest news, and persuade the young father to escape from the ignominious position of total neglect which befalls all fathers under these happy circumstances, and take refuge in "bachelor's hall." Directly after there drove up the Symington carriage, with Lady Symington in it, who straightway disappeared upstairs.

When she came down her round, rosy face was pale and her manner painfully quiet. She offered no congratulations, but laid her hand on Roderick's arm.

"I have been up seeing your wife. Have you seen her this morning?"

"Not yet. They would not let me."

"Quite right. Stop! You must not go to her just now. Instead, take my carriage and fetch Dr. ——"

Roderick in his turn became ghastly pale, for this doctor was the most noted man in all the country-side, and he lived twelve miles off.

"Is there then such vital necessity? Is she in danger? Why did they not tell me? Oh, my God! my God!"

"Hush! we must not waste time in talking. It may be nothing, my dear"—the old lady's soft "my dear" was more terrifying than aught else—"but we never know. The horses are fresh; they will go there and back without stopping. Bring the doctor with you—don't come without him. I will stay here till you return."

She spoke briefly, almost sharply, with the calm decision that reassures even while it alarms.

Without a word Roderick obeyed; allowed Mr. Black, who had listened in silence, to give him his hat and coat, and throw a plaid into the carriage after him.

"Will you not go, too, Mr. Black? You had better. He is quite stunned, you see."

"Yes, my lady; but I know him—he's a brave lad, he will bear up alone. And I must go elsewhere."

The old man grasped the young man's hand with a sudden "God bless you!" then Roderick sprung into the carriage and drove away.

Oh, that awful drive! sitting like a stone, watching mechanically the trees and moors and hills slip by, his watch in one hand, counting the half hours—no, the very minutes—as they crawled along; in the other hand clutching Lady Symington's note, ready to be given to the doctor as soon as he could be found.

And then the drive back, with the "celebrated" man to whom "the case" was only a case, and who talked cleverly and cheerfully and indifferently of that and many other things, till he saw he was scarcely heard, and then, with a natural human sympathy for the white, set face beside him, dropped into silence and a book; for years Roderick never saw the title of that book without a shudder.

A "ray of hope" he learned there was. Only a ray! and three hours before the whole world had seemed to him to be flooded with sunshine. He asked no questions, made no remarks. Mute and unappealing he sat, half stunned, half blind, like a man who has suddenly received sentence of death—death utterly undeserved and unexpected—death in the very midst of life, so that reason refuses to take it in as a reality, and the mind is conscious of neither terror nor pain, only a dull sense of something happened, or being about to happen, which one can no more escape than one can escape from the falling rock or the advancing breaker, either of which will bring certain and instantaneous doom.

They reached Blackhall, and he heard at the front door the Doctor's question, "Is she alive?" and Lady Symington's affirmative answer; then he staggered in, and Janet had to fetch her master a glass of water, and put him into the armchair, quite dizzy and blind.

But he soon recovered himself, and went back to listen at the foot of the staircase.

"It will be a hard fight—a hand to hand fight—but we'll beat, I trust," the Doctor was saying, with a thoroughly professional look on his clever face, and a gleam of his keen eyes often seen in men like him when they brace up all their skill to do battle with the great enemy. Then he and Lady Symington both vanished, and Roderick was left alone.

Hour after hour he sat, no one coming near him. Once Janet knocked at the parlor door and asked if she might bring in the baby whose crying disturbed the mother. Roderick assented, but took no notice of his son; indeed, at the moment he almost felt as if he hated him. Kind Janet was the only person who paid the least attention to the young heir of Blackhall.

(To be continued.)

He Leaped for Life.

James H. Budd, of California, recently told the following story of an escape from the bite of a rattlesnake which he once had: "I was up in Calaveras County fising along the Stanislaus. I had been told of an almost inaccessible pool up the river at the base of the perpendicular cliffs, and fairly alive with trout. I found the place, and also found that there was only one way to get a hook in the pool. I had to climb on my hands and knees up a steep path to a sort of shelf on the cliff. On the other side of the shelf was a sheer drop of forty feet down to the pool. Just as I dragged myself upon the top of the ledge the whirr of a rattlesnake startled me. Naturally I jumped to my feet, exhausted as I was, but dropped my fishing rod.

"The coiled rattler was within two feet of me and preparing to strike. Either I had to get down on my hands and knees again or jump forty feet into the pool. As I saw the diamond head of the snake draw back to strike I decided and jumped. Just as I sprung the rattler struck. I had a pair of moccasins on my feet and the fangs of the snake fastened in the one nearest him. As I went down I remember seeing the snake flying over the side of the pool. Its fangs had caught and I had carried it with me.

"Just what happened in the second or two after I struck the water in my dive of forty feet I don't know. Fortunately the pool was fairly deep. As I dragged myself upon the rocks at the edge, I realized with a thankfulness I never knew before that I was not only alive but had escaped the snake and broken bones. I was badly bruised, but not seriously hurt. What became of the snake I don't know."

American Horses in England.

There is a growing demand in England for American horses. During the first nine months of the year 1894 the English market took 2,811 American driving horses at an average value of $139 per head. Last year the average price of those shipped was $230.

A sound, light draft horse, in good condition, of the size and weight adapted to omnibus work in cities, will generally bring in Liverpool or London $150. Nearly all of the shipments of horses thus far from the United States to England have been through English buyers.

Arriving in England the animals are put out to grass, as a rule, for a month at least, and are then sold at auction. Canada has about an equal share with ourselves in the English horse market, although Canadian shipments have the reputation of being somewhat better in quality. The average price of Canadian geldings during the last nine months has been $160, as against $139 for the American.

The English understand perfectly well that prices of horses have fallen in the United States on account of the extensive substitution of trolleys and bicycles for horses, and it is generally conceded that a considerable demand for American horses will soon spring up throughout Europe.

The great omnibus and tramway companies of London are recruiting their stocks from the United States and Canada very generally at the present time.—Exchange.

Mrs. Harriet Duterte, a colored woman, is one of the most successful undertakers in Philadelphia. She has carried on the business for about twenty-five years. She furnishes hearses, carriages and all the requisites for funerals.

BETTER TIMES AHEAD

SIGNIFICANT INCREASE IN IMPORTS AND REVENUE.

William McKinley's Incipient Presidential Boom—Gresham's Commendable Course in Dealing with Spain—"Protection" in Canada.

Suggestive Figures.

The main feature of the new tariff law went into effect on Aug. 28. During the six succeeding months the receipts from customs amounted to $79,686,456, against only $64,786,541 for the corresponding six months one year before under the McKinley law. This suggests that by increasing importations the new tariff yields more revenue than the McKinley system, with its higher duties did, not counting the gain to be made from sugar duties. These have yielded scarcely anything during the six months, because of large free importations made in anticipation of the tax.

But the suggestion is not quite fair. The increase in importations is not altogether a matter of tariff difference. A study of the figures shows that it is due in part to that general improvement in business which is reflected in increasing railroad traffic, in rapidly growing bank clearings and in other ways. It is apparent also that the people have been economizing closely during the last two years and merchants keeping their stocks down, until now the time has come when purchases long deferred must be made.

Significant of this is the fact that during January and February the imports of dry goods increased by no less than 89 per cent., while other imports, excepting sugar, increased only 12.5 per cent. Sugar imports, for the reason already referred to, fell off $2,240,000 from last year's figures.

The dry goods imports at New York amounted during January and February to $34,768,129, against $21,107,018 for the corresponding two months of last year. The gain has been in manufactures of wool and cotton. Silks and linens show a decided falling off. The cheapening of woolen goods, both foreign and domestic, by the removal of the wool duties and the lowering of duties on woolen cloths, is enabling the people to buy such fabrics in larger quantities than before. Probably the improvement in domestic silks and the cheapening of their cost during recent years affect unfavorably the import trade in fabrics of that class.—New York World.

The Untaxed Foreigners.

The tidal wave of last November evidently gave to the New York Tribune a firmer faith in the gullibility of the people. It delivers itself of this bit of McKinleyism, which is usually reserved for the rural stump:

"Still worse is the fact that the nation's taxes are no longer paid, as they formerly were, in great part by foreign manufacturers and by importers, but have been so shifted by this same Congress that they fall in far greater proportion on the people of this country, and particularly on the working people."

How familiar this fatuous old fallacy appears! Perhaps its new sponsor will answer a few questions to which we failed to elicit a reply from Mr. McKinley when he was regaling backwoods audiences with this preposterous theory.

If tariff taxes are paid in great part by foreigners, why did the Republican Congress continue $150,000,000 of internal taxes which, as the Tribune truly says, "must be paid entirely by our own people?" Why did it not raise all the revenue from the tariff and compel the foreigners to pay the entire cost of supporting our Government? Why did the Reed-McKinley Congress stop appropriations at a billion of dollars? Why not spend two billions and fructify this favored land with the tribute wrung from foreign nations? In Germany and France we are "the foreigners." Do we pay the high duties which they are now imposing on our imports? On many articles the McKinley tariff imposed a duty of over 100 per cent. Did the foreigners give us the goods and pay us a bounty besides for using them?

The people were not fooled last year. They were disappointed and angry. Why try to fool them now with these stupid old fallacies?—New York World.

"Protection" Across the Border.

Though Canada has never sunk quite as low down in the "Serbonian bog" of "protectionism" as the United States, the Canadian voter is, nevertheless, beginning to find out that his tariff is an elephant for him to carry.

The Toronto Globe points out that, while pig iron in Canada is taxed from 30 to 60 per cent. (the tariff duty there being $4.48 per long ton on soft iron, such as is used for radiators), "it is as cheap—in many cases cheaper—to import from the United States than to buy in Nova Scotia. It says:

"The Nova Scotia furnace men get a direct bounty of $2 and an indirect bounty represented by the low rates on the Intercolonial, yet the price of their iron laid down in Toronto is higher than the price in the States by the amount of our duty ($4.48)."

Under our new tariff the prices of pig iron in New York now range, according to brand, from $9.50 to $12.50, as quoted in the Iron Age of the 7th inst., which journal also quotes steel rails at $20 to $22, according to section. The Iron Age says editorially that, "judging by some of the figures talked of by those who are interested in new steel plants on the lakes, low costs of production have not yet reached their limit." And it thinks that the prospective prices of iron and steel in the United States "foreshadow for many American collateral industries a continuance of low priced crude materials which will make them lively competitors in the world's markets."

The outlook is, therefore, favorable for a considerable increase in our exports of pig iron, steel rails, hardware and all iron and steel products to our Canadian neighbors, unless they sweep away their grand "national policy" of "protection," and thus reduce the cost of production to a natural level.—New York Herald.

Free-Wool Carpets for Switzerland.

It must go hard with the high tariff editors on the New York Tribune to print such unpatriotic items as the following from the New York Tribune of March 10:

"American carpets are being introduced into Switzerland by a German firm of Stuttgart, and the American Consul at Zurich, in his investigation of the matter, has found that United States manufacturers have a great field in Europe for their fabrics. There are no carpet factories in Switzerland, the supply being imported from Germany, England, France, and Belgium. The Consul points out a single difficulty to be overcome in creating a market there, which is the prevailing opinion that everything called Amedican must naturally be high-priced. It appears to be certain, however, that if Swiss merchants are willing to pay a commission to German middlemen to secure American goods, direct trade might be more advantageous to all concerned."

Exportation of Iron.

Under free wool our manufacturers have already begun to export woolen goods to England. It now looks as if we would soon begin to export iron to Europe. Here is what Mr. J. Bowron, secretary of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, said in Baltimore on March 13: "I have become perfectly satisfied that, starting as we do with the price about $2.50 per ton for gray forge or No. 3 foundry below the free-on-board price of Middlesborough (England) iron of similar grades, we certainly ought to be able to compete in neutral markets. It will, however, require time and patience to attain this end, for the reason that the vast bulk of ocean tonnage is in the hands of English owners, who will make freight rates to facilitate English exports and obstruct ours.

"Unfortunately, American producers are handicapped by the fact that the tonnage of our exports largely exceeds the tonnage of our imports. This fact enables the English to make the American charterer pay the cost of the round trip, and he is willing to accept a mere ballasting rate from England outward to this country.

"I am afraid from this cause that it will be impossible for some time to sell any southern iron in England unless it can be shipped to Manchester on board cotton ships, which would lessen the freight rate. The markets of the Mediterranean and of the Baltic are not, however, subject to the same remarks, except to a limited extent, and I am quite hopeful that the rates which are now under the consideration of the southern railways to Mobile, Pensacola and Savannah for foreign shipment will enable us actually to commence exporting pig iron to Italian, Spanish and Russian ports."

An Incipient Presidential Boom.

William McKinley, who has paid very little attention to his duties as Governor of Ohio, has started south to show himself to the people, make speeches and start a boom for the Republican nomination for President next year.

Mr. McKinley may succeed to some extent in the South. What will it avail him? At the Minneapolis convention he occupied the chair while Southern Republican politicians cast their votes for Benjamin Harrison. Lightning played around the head of Mr. McKinley until the Southern Republican politicians with votes in the convention, but none in the electoral college, carried the convention away from him to a nominee who proved unsuccessful at the polls. Republican votes from the South in a national convention are potent to make the candidate, but they are impotent to elect a Republican President of the United States.

Governor McKinley would gain more by staying at home and attending to his duties as Governor of Ohio. Presidential booms born at so early a period are liable to a nipping frost before they have passed the critical period of infancy.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Income Tax.

The opponents of the income tax affect to regard the question at issue as one which involves the right of the Government to tax the rich man into poverty. One of them says that if there is no limitation against such legislation "there is no constitutional barrier against the most demagogical class legislation under the cloak of taxation." This is a terrible picture; but it will be quite time to discuss that question when it becomes a practical one. The income tax which has passed both houses of Congress and become a law is utterly lacking in the terrible features with which the imaginary enactment of the future is endowed. It involves no hardship to anybody. It simply insists that the rich shall bear a part in the support of the Federal Government a little nearer proportionate to the benefits they derive from it than is the part they now bear. To refuse because somebody else may at some future time be treated less justly is illogical.—Detroit Free Press.

Gresham's Promptness.

The promptness of the State Department in calling for reparation for the outrage on the Alliance comes so near satisfying the utmost demands of the jingoes that there issues from the other extreme a suggestion that the State Department may have been too hasty and that we ought to go slow in such matters. As an abstract principle it is undoubtedly true that there should be no undue haste in an affair of the kind; but it does not appear in this case that there has been any. If Spain can show that the action of her subjects was justifiable, or that the facts have been misrepresented, there is nothing in the stand of the State Department to prevent it. But if such a showing can be made, it cannot be made too soon. The matter is of too grave importance to be dawdled over.—Exchange.

Folly of the Jingo Policy.

One of the most disquieting signs of the times is the jingo policy into which protectionists are betraying the Republican party. Not content with sacrificing the internal interests of the country to maintain the profits of a favored few, they now proceed to court disaster abroad by an aggressive foreign policy, contrary to the wise maxims of the fathers of the republic. One would think that all the energies of our statesmen might be fully occupied for some years yet in solving the domestic problems with which we are confronted.—Baltimore Sun.

The constancy of sages is nothing but locking up their agitation in their hearts.—Rochefoucauld.

Not Spoken Of as Suicide.

In Vienna they still talk in whispers about the tragic death of Prince Rudolf, and no one dares to refer openly to it as a case of suicide. An American tourist who was being shown through the royal stables said when he saw the Prince's riding horse: "Ah, yes; that was the Prince who committed suicide."

"No, madame; he died," said the attendant in a serious tone.

GOLD to the amount of 1½ millions went out of the country during February while the amount that came in was 5½ millions.

MICHIGAN legislature is trying to pass a law to regulate the size of a peach basket. We presume the berry basket will be looked after also. Both need enlarging.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, is using a sort of gas that is shipped to them in chunks. It is made of lime and coal dust, and is put into water to generate the gas. It makes a bright light.

THE congress that died March 4; should be credited with saving some money. The appropriations are 36 millions less than by the last congress and 45 millions less than the one before.

CUBAN revolution still going on. There is a growing sentiment in favor of annexation to the U. S. In Grant's administration we had a fair chance to buy it for 100 millions but divisions in the republican party prevented. We could have annexed San Domingo, but for the same reason.

Two years ago the legislature appropriated $106,000 for its expenses and had $3,000 left. This year, in order to make capital, the legislature appropriated only $100,000, but have a debt left over of $5,000. Buncombe don't always pay. And then there are the broken chairs and doors to be paid for by the people, which will amount to quite a sum more.

SEVERAL of the late "law-breakers" are still trying to smooth over that disgraceful ending of a very weak minded legislature. But the effort seems to be a painful one and not very successful. It is not easy to convince the mistaken voters who sent them there, that the proper way for members to do is to kick and fight and bite and chaw each others' ears, all for the sake of political advantage.

Court.

Tuesday's Daily.

We said yesterday that the Dawson divorce case was going on. It appears that at the recent trial the judge did not conclude the matter, but waited for a better understanding of it. So this trial is a sort of supplement, or second pull at t. There seems to have been a good deal of trouble in the lady's family—the family of Charles Rogers, as well as between her and her husband. This came out when her brother took the stand. He agreed with other witnesses that her reputation was not of the best, and said plainly that she always had an uncontrollable temper. Then he said that a woman named Wolf had been staying with his sister, Mrs. Dawson, and that she too had a bad reputation. When asked if he ever saw any man visiting or calling on them, he said "yes." Question. "Well, who was it?" Ans. Charlie Rogers." Q. "Is Charlie Rogers your father?" Ans. "He is." He also spoke of the separation of his father and mother. One witness also testified that Mrs. Dawson's reputation was bad. He named several men he had seen going there, and thought it looked suspicious that they should go there while her husband was absent at his work. He said one man had gone home with her from Christian Endeavor meeting, and when asked by attorney if that was not a branch of the church, said he did not know, as he did not belong. Altogether, it is a mixed up case and a very unfortunate affair. This morning it went on again. The principal witness to-day was O. C. Clark, who testified in a very conservative way that seemed to be favorably received by both sides. He said that among all classes it was considered that Mrs. Dawson's reputation was not good. She was especially blamed for having the woman, Mrs. Wolf, or Lake, as she is sometimes called, staying at her house. He believed the woman was not a proper person to have about. Clark was excused, and there followed a discussion in which both sets of attorneys and the judge took part. Judge Penfield thought the case should not be disposed of rashly, and proposed to take time till next term, as it was a difficult case to say the least. Both parties, he though, had done wrong. Both were high tempered and rash. It would be better if the parties could agree, but it was doubtful if this was possible. Up to this moment he had felt like granting a divorce to Mrs. Dawson. But it now seemed as if that would not be the proper thing to do. Clark was recalled and reiterated his first statements. Covell, for Mr. Dawson, did not want a divorce; Brown, for Mrs. Dawson, did want one. But the case goes to next term. The judge, however, dissolved the injunction which was given to keep Dawson from drawing his wages from the B. & O. road, by which he is employed. The case has been a very disagreeable one for all concerned, and it is no wonder that both husband and wife often hang their heads. It is unfortunate, to say the least, and has brought up a whole neighborhood as witnesses in a case they would gladly have avoided.

Wednesday's Daily:

Judge Adair missed the morning train and so did not get here, but came on the 2:04 train this afternoon.

The St. Joe gravel road case came up when F. M. Powers, as special judge in that case, reached here. This case came up originally before the Board of country commissioners, who first appointed viewers and had the work viewed by them and report made. But afterwards a remonstrance was filed and after a full discussion the Board decided that they had no jurisdiction. Then it was taken into court. Judge Penfield having been attorney in the case gave it over to F. M. Powers, who heard it a week or two ago, and to-day gave his decision. The following motion was made by the defendants in this case, the men opposed to the gravel road, their attorneys being Emanuel Roby & Shuman.

The defendant separately and severally, each for himself, and not for the other, move to dismiss the appeal from the board of commissioners for the following reasons:

First—That the order appealed from is not a final decision or oder from which appeal to this Court will lie.

Second—That this court has no jurisdiction on the subject matter of said appeal.

Third—That the right and power to establish the proposed work is exclusively vested in the board of commissioners.

Fourth—That no bond is filed for an appeal from the board of County Commissioners, as by law required.

Fifth—That the pretended appeal bond herein is insufficient and void.

Sixth—That no appeal has been prayed, attempted or taken by any person having right or authority to do so.

Seventh—That this Court has power to hear or determine the matters involved in the plaintiff's petition, and no power to order or establish the proposed work.

Eighth—That the pretended appeal is not taken by the petitioners, but that a majority of such petitioners have expressly refused to so appeal, and are satisfied with such order, as more fully appears by the written statement of the following named persons, Signed by J. R. Culberson and 75 others. To this is added the statement that, "All of said persons were original petitioners." Judge Powers overruled the motion to dismiss, giving his reason on each item. Judge McClellan is attorney for the plaintiffs. It is an important case and its progress in court will be watched with great interest

BUTLER.

Rev. Cain left for conference at Logansport, last Monday.

The Lutheran minister has not yet made his home among us.

Our town has been headquarters for tramps for the past few days.

The wife of Rev. John Topper was buried at Hicksville last week.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her, and she says it saved her life. Mr Thomas Eggers, 139 Florida St., San. Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption. He tried without result, everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medecine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Editor Gardner, of the Butler Herald, has been over to North Manchester to see for himself about the trouble in the college there. He says it is not half as bad as reported. He believes that Mr. Kriebel never guaranteed an endowment of a million, but that he has in some way, the control of an income, which he uses to pay the expenses of a number of students who are studying for the ministry. Of course public sentiment over there is divided, but it appears that it is by no means all against the president, Mr. Kriebel.

W. H. Rakestraw has had his harness stolen, as well as the lap-robes, whip and everything belonging to such an outfit. The thief must have had nerve. It is a wonder he did not take the stable. We expect to hear of his coming in to answer this advertisement.

Prof. M. W. Harrison, at Wabash, was married recently to a lady in Chicago. She is said to be an excellent musician, a teacher in fact, and a niece of Jeff Davis. Our people, which of course will include many friends and admirers of Mr. Harrison will be interested in learntng this important piece of news.

Ora Knisely, of Butler, came through here Saturday on his way home from Ft. Wayne. He has just finished a very thorough course at the Ft. Wayne Business College and very wisely laid that kind of a foundation for successful business life. We are not informed as to what special line he will follow, but presume he will have no difficulty in finding a good position anywhere.

Pastor G. M. Hirsch, missionary from Marion, Indiana, will preach at the Reformed church next Sunday, in the morning in the German, and in the evening in the English language, beginning at 10:30 in the morning and 7 in the evening. A collection will be taken for the benefit of building a chapel in one of said pastor's missions. All are cordially invited to attend and help to further this cause. God loveth and blesseth a cheerful giver.

Without the influence of the county teachers institute no society can hardly feel justified in placing first-class lecture talent before our people at the extremely low rates that have been established by such institutes. But as Col. Bain is so well and favorably known and everybody will be anxious to hear him, the Sabbath school has assumed the risk and will conform to the institute rates of 25 cents for general admission and 35 cents for reserved seats. They, however, heartily solicit a liberal attendance.

Mrs Mary Brown.

Died at her residence, five miles east of Auburn, March 26, 1895, Mrs. Mary Brown, nee Lykens. She was born in Washington Co., Pa, October 11, 1803. She married Samuel McClelland in 1819, and soon after removed to Wayne county, Ohio. She united with the M. E. church and has since been a faithful member. Two sons and five daughters were born to them, one son and three daughters surviving her. Her husband died in 1839 and in 1840 she married W. S. Brown. To this union were born five sons—four surviving. In 1876 Mr. Brown was killed on the B. and O. railroad Since then she has resided on the farm where they settled in 1846 She leaves five sons and three daughters. Her age was 91 years, 5 months and 15 days.

The children hereby express their grateful thanks to all the neighbors for their sympathy and assistance.

Tuesday's Daily:—

A SAD ACCIDENT!

IRA BROWN, OF NEAR DAYTON, OHIO, HAS HIS FINGERS CUT OFF

WHILE AT WORK WITH THE NIGHT FORCE AT THE BAND SAW MILL.

His First Experience in a Saw Mill.

One of the saddest accidents the reporter has witnessed for some time was at the band saw mill this morning. Ira Brown, whose home is Preble county, Ohio, had all of the fingers and part of the thumb of his right hand cut off by a saw. Mr. Brown came here Wednesday and had been visiting his grandmother at Churubusco, and last Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Ben Diller, of this place visited there, Mr. Diller being an uncle to Mr Brown. Mr. Diller is head sawyer and works nights, and he asked Mr. Brown to come home with him and accept a position in the mill. This he did. He had no old clothes with him and wore some of Mr. Diller's. He was just helping to edge the last board before quitting time this morning when he reached into the saw. He was acting as off-bearer on the edger. He is twenty three years of age and has always worked on a farm. He was taken to Mr. Diller's home this morning and Drs Swarts and L. A Hines were called. But before they arrived he sat there moving the stumps of his fingers and repeating he ought to have known better as he had always been a farmer and had never had any experience in saw mill work. He also stated that now he would not be able to do any work this summer, which seemed to worry him very much. The first finger was cut off near the second joint and the next near the hand. The others were so badly mangled they were taken off. The two ends were found in the mill about fifty feet from the saw where they had been cut off. The accident falls very hard on the young man, as he only earned $1.25 and lost almost his entire hand.

"WHEN SPRING COMES

"I Recommend Pe-ru-na to All Sufferers," Says Editor W. T. Powell of Clarington, Ohio.

W. T. Powell, editor of the Independent of Clarington, Ohio, writes that he was taken sick with bronchitis and catarrhal fever, head was in a terrible condition, lungs were badly effected, being so tight and sore he could hardly breath and coughed almost incessantly. For two months tried local physicians, took cough medicines and others medicines. Took three bottles of Pe-ru-na and was entirely cured.

It is needless to attempt to give only the vagnest outline of the wonderful success which Pe ru-na has met with in the cure of catarrh. This success is entirely due to the fact that Pe ru-na eradicates the disease from the system, instead of temporarily relieving some disagreeable symptom. Not only is catarrh in all stages and varieties cured promptly, but also colds, coughs, bronchitis, la grippe, catarrhal dyspepsia, all yield, surely and permanently, to the curative virtues of Pe-ru-na.

As a spring medicine Pe-ru na is a never-failing remedy. It cleanses the blood through digestion, and gives tone to the whole system by increasing the nutritive value of the blood. "Spring fever," as it is sometimes called, which produces a tired-out, sleepy feeling, and inability to do much mental or physical work, is the result of a sluggish digestion and no blood medicine will be of any use whatever unless it is able to rectify the impaired digestion. The great popularity that Pe ru-na has is due to the fact that in all such cases it at once corrects digestive derangements and enriches the blood by purifying this very important source of that vital fluid. Send for book on spring medicines and spring diseases. Also a valuable treatise on catarrh, la grippe, consumption, coughs and colds, by Dr. Hartman, sent free. HE LEADS THEM ALL.

We speak of what we know, when we say this. A man who is ahead of all competitors, is ahead, and that's the main point about it. We have a business man here who just fits this description; we refer to A. Lewis, the veteran lumber dealer—in fact, the leading lumber dealer in this part of the State. Mr. Lewis has been in the business longer continuously, than any other man in Northern Indiana, and understands his business better. He knows how to buy and what to buy, for he knows what lumber is worth, and what sorts are needed to supply the needs of the people, and wants of the trade. Mr. Lewis has the largest and best selected stock of lumber of any one in this section, and buying, as he does, in the most available markets, is able to give you the best goods at the most reasonable prices. This is the verdict of the thousands who have dealt with him for the last dozen or so years. No one who contemplates building should buy his lumber till he sees Mr. Lewis and inspects his immense variety of lumber of all sorts. It always pays a man to get his supplies from a big stock, and especially one that is well selected. In all these ways, Mr. Lewis offers the best choice for bargains.

Just in Time.

As the reporter came from the 12:29 Lake Shore train to-day noon he met A. Lewis and he insisted on us taking a ride out to the Hoffman farm north of town. This we did and as we passed by George Grogg's residence property we discovered the east part of one room was all in flames. We rushed to the front door and it was locked and then we went to the back door, and informed Mrs. Grogg, and got a pail and proceeded to put out the fire. A ladder was hanging on a shed near by and this enabled us to get on the roof. One hole perhaps four feet in diameter had burned out the sheeting and all, and in more than a half dozen other places the fire had started. A strong wind was blowing from the south-west and it is supposed a spark from the chimney started the fire. Mrs. Grogg was home alone, her husband being away at work. She has been sick and just as we arrived intended going to bed. The only possible reason we were able to save the house was because the fire was on the east side where the wind could not hit the flames, and the building being low so the ladder reached.

Mrs. Grogg could not find words to express her thanks to us, for happening by there and discovering the fire. For if it had not been for us in five minutes more the house and contents would have been lost. However, we are just as thankful that we took the ride with Mr. Lewis and thereby discovered the fire.

DR. CASEBEER COMING.

The way to overcome the theater-hat imposition is to elevate the stage.

The Czar has insomnia. He is not losing any time in the way of taking all the trouble he can get.

A Philadelphia paper says "there are still a few honest politicians in the land." Most of them are in the cemeteries.

The English youth who inherited a fortune and in two weeks had spent $435,000 for jewelry is in danger of being left soon with no capital but his brains.

Queer people, these Chinese generals! They run like sheep for fear of being killed by the Japanese, and then prove that they don't fear death by committing suicide.

"The New York horse show is already responsible for several engagements," says a Gotham society letter. They probably will be followed by the bridals of the thoroughbreds.

A rare example of absolute self-abnegation is furnished to the world in the Missouri fellow who blew his brains out so as to let his wife live in happiness with a handsomer man.

Four new postoffices have been established in Washington State. They are Pysht, Quitlaquette, Utsaladdy and Klickitat. There isn't much likelihood of duplicating them in the postoffice directory.

A class of medical students at Lincoln, Neb., and another class at Kansas City have been arrested for grave-robbing. Before long they will be licensed to fill graves instead of empty them, and nobody will interfere.

A certain class of newspaper readers will wish that Miss Gould, now happily married, will stay married. The thought of the volume of tuft-hunting writing on space that would be done should the Countess of Castellane seek a divorce is appalling.

A Minneapolis exchange says: "Trilby's" author handles a pen like a scholar, but he couldn't hold a job on a Minnesota paper as a maker of pictures.

Then he must be hopelessly bad as an artist.

A Washington jury has decided that Captain Howgate is not guilty of the charge on which he is arrested. But $118,000 is government funds disappeared when he did about fourteen years ago. "Button, button, who's got the button?"

Dr. Bertillon has a scoop on the experts in handwriting. He holds that in each person the pulsation of the heart has an effect upon his writing—that if the writing is enormously enlarged this is very clearly seen, and will, in any case, by comparison with a known specimen of writing, identify the writer.

John Burns has been telling the newspapers in New York that he finds fewer workingmen in public office in the United States than abroad. That may be because he studies them after they are in public office—a situation in which we regretfully admit Americans are too prone to stop working. But the real reason why Mr. Burns misses a distinctively working class representation in Congress, for instance, is that over here there is no such clear division into classes as abroad. Practically everybody elected to Congress is a workingman, or was before he became a professional politician. Once in a while a mere moneybags gets to the House of Representatives, but that occurs but seldom and he stays there briefly. Nine out of ten of the men elected to Congress for the first time are men who must work for their living with plow or tools, pen or lawbooks. Men need not necessarily toil at manual labor to be workingmen in the fullest sense of the word.

Mrs. Micah Dyer Jr., one of the society leaders of Boston, has been forced to declare herself bankrupt, as she cannot find any honorable means of settling the claims against her estate. Her liabilities are about $100,000, and the creditors probably will receive 40 cents on the dollar. Her troubles are due to the fact that she indorsed notes for her son, the manager of the American Health Supply Company, and that shylocks charged him as much as 80 per cent. a year for extending them, under threats of putting a receiver in the mother's palatial home. Mrs. Dwyer will not suffer much, as her husband is wealthy. He was in a position to liquidate his wife's indebtedness, but as he could not ascertain the exact amount he preferred to have the courts settle it. All of this goes to show more of the tough facts which will confront the new woman when she comes into possession of her kingdom. There is not a particle of sentiment, emotion, or imagination in a business transaction.

Developments in the latest life insurance case seem to indicate that there is hidden in it a very thrilling murder story, of the sort likely to be a warning to the too credulous confederates in such enterprises. In fact, when two or more men conspire together to concoct and execute a scheme for swindling a life insurance company, the last thing that either or any one intends is that he himself shall give his own life as part of the game. But this latest development involves just that addition to the ordinary swindles. It is evident that a few cases of this sort are likely to be of great advantage to the insurance companies. One of the conditions of success in beating the company is that there shall be perfect good faith and confidence between the rogues, but if any one has reason to suspect that at a given moment his pals may sacrifice his life to the success of the scheme he is very apt to become suddenly cool, or even go over to the enemy. Thus the victim of Meyer and the alleged victim in the latest case may be of more use at last to the companies than to any one else.

That was a triumph of statesmanship on the part of of the New Jersey Legislature when it passed a bread law the other day. It made no provision for quality or price, but enacted that every loaf must weigh a pound. It is nothing more or less than placing the temptation before the baker to make heavy bread.

Why do city directory men always take pains to get the names of all the widows, and mention them as such, while they never publish a widower as a widower? Is it not as important that the single state of a widower should be known as it is that the loneliness of a widow should be announced? Let us hope that the directory men may come to see the justice of treating widows and widowers alike.

From a Central State's standpoint we may say: "They do these things better in Massachusetts." The fact is that Massachusetts courts have recently scored a triumph over even the Federal courts in bringing the sugar trust to terms and imposing a fine for dereliction. The American Cultivator referring to this matter says: "The people of Massachusetts may congratulate themselves that the old Commonwealth is, in one respect, 'a bigger man' than is the United States. It has brought the sugar trust to terms, which the Federal authorities have never yet been able to do. The State law of Massachusetts requiring all corporations doing business in the State to file their reports was violated by the sugar trust. When litigation was begun, the trust, like Capt. Scott's coon, saw that it was no use resisting and came down handsomely. Only a ridiculously small fine of $200 was imposed by the court, but the trust has filed its report, paid its fine and now stands square with the State of Massachusetts until the next filing day comes around. The moral effect of this victory is its most important part. It ought to stimulate the Federal authorities at Washington to better enforcement of the laws against trusts."

BEGINS A WAR ON PET NAMES.

Public Schoolteachers in San Francisco to Stamp Them Out.

There is a pretty flutter among the public school teachers of San Francisc. President Hyde of the Board of Education, signing a lot of certificates recently, was struck with the number of them bearing the diminutives Maggie, Daisy, Essie, Ettie and Birdie. The last seemed to him the worst of all. "Why, just think of it," said the educator to a reporter, "the teacher who signed herself Birdie is named Blanche. Her name isn't Birdie at all. Now, that isn't right or dignified. Then there were Essies, and Daisys, and Etties galore. I don't think it is quite the thing. I spoke a year ago to the superintendent about this, but it seems that the epidemic of pet names is spreading again. Why, just think; there is the principal of one school here whom every one calls Bessie. She is so ashamed of it now that she signs herself B. Blank. I won't give her name. It wouldn't be fair. Suppose," went on President Hyde, lifting up his hands in horror at the thought, "I signed myself Freddie—Freddie Hyde," he repeated slowly. "Imagine how that would sound! Freddie Hyde! Why, it is preposterous! And yet we see gray-haired women in the department signing themselves Gussie, Jennie, Jessie and Birdie." Out of all of which has come a rule prohibiting the use among the teachers of pet names in official designation. Investigation disclosed that one-third of the Christian names printed in the school directory are diminutives. Annies, Maggies, Netties, Nellies and Carries abound, many of them borne by married women long past their middle youth, and, officially, they must all go. Rules affecting personal tastes and opinions are always unpleasant, but the propriety of the suggestion that educators should cease to be "Birdies" and "Essies" few will question. The reaction set in here in the East some time ago, and the use of diminutives in signatures of professional and business women is much more often omitted than employed.—New York Times.

A Monopoly.

Shopping agencies of various kinds are one of the features of New York life; and now a scheme is proposed that, if successful, will do away with the tour of the shops so dear to the hearts of many women. A company has made an arrangement with the Broadway cable cars, and it is said will try to secure the same right on all the other lines, for the use of their front platforms as news and confectionery stands. On each car it will place a uniformed agent who will sell the things on hand, and will also take orders from the passengers for anything they may want from "collar buttons to a dress." The passenger has simply to tell the boy what he wants and when he will board the car again, and the commission will be executed. The company proposes to make arrangements with a number of large establishments in the city to fill all orders that it brings in at the lowest possible rates. Under such conditions, it will obviously be the duty of the economical woman to buy by proxy, even though she must thus relinquish her favorite occupation.

A Versatile Lawyer.

When Judge Parsons was a practicing lawyer he was once employed to plead two cases in court which were precisely alike, but in one he was engaged for the plaintiff, in the other for the defendant. It happened that both cases were tried the same day. He spoke for half an hour to the first jury; the case was given to the jurors, and they had retired. When he appeared before the second jury he made use of very different arguments from those employed by him before, of which the court took notice, reminding him that he seemed to have changed his tune and repeated to him what he said a few minutes before. Mr. Parsons fixed his keen eye upon the judge and replied: "May it please your honor, I might have been wrong half an hour ago, but now I know I am right." He proceeded, and when the juries returned it was found he had gained a verdict in both cases.—Lewiston Journal.

UNCLE SAM CALLS A HALT.

TWO QUEER OLD HERMITS.

They Are Brothers and They Live in Illinois.

Anderson County, Illinois, enjoys the proud distinction of being the home of two of the queerest old hermits living. They are William and George Coombs, brothers, aged respectively 62 and 84 years. They live in a rude hut, which was built by their father about seventy-five years ago. Until three years ago the roof of clapboards was secured simply by long poles laid across and tied. Now the boards are nailed on. The window at the side of the door was formerly filled with glass, but of late years it has been closed with a tightly nailed piece of sheet iron. When this hut was built Indians and all sorts of wild animals roamed the then limitless forest, and the lonely pioneer was frequently roused from his fitful slumbers by the fierce war-whoop of the savage or the wild shriek of the deadly panther. Now the vast forests are but a memory and well-tilled farms occupy the spot that once were the Indians' hunting grounds.

William and George Coombs were born in Kentucky and came to Clark County when the latter was a small boy. Rumor has it that in his early manhood William was jilted by a cruel maiden, and he then and there abjured the sex forever. His faithful brother George, whom he to this day terms "the baby," became his companion, and the two have ever since lived their life alone, solitary in the midst of teeming civilization.

Their hut is in the center of a 400-acre tract of land, which they own and rent out on shares. They will never sell their grain unless they get the price they think they should have or they have to have money to pay their taxes. They never keep any money by them. The produce they raise on the five-acre tract surrounding the hut and the eggs from their poultry supply them with the necessaries of life, all of which they purchase of a huckster, never going to any town unless peremptorily summoned. The only visit they have ever paid Marshall in many years was when they were summoned on a trial a few years ago. The old men yet preserve all their faculties. Sight and hearing are good. In their earlier days both were mighty hunters, and thousands of wild turkeys as well as numbers of deer and bear fell to their rifles. Both still pride themselves on their marksmanship, old as they are, and not without reason, for their aim is still deadly.—Utica Globe.

A Funeral Dance.

On one occasion, near Rice, Dakota, I witnessed an Indian funeral dance. The brave, a man of influence in the tribe, and who carried on his left hand the scar of a fearful wound, said to have been received at Fort Phil Kearney, was laid out stiff and stark in the tepee in which he died. The women, just as Christian women do, washed the corpse, and then dressed him in all his ornaments. A red blanket was wrapped about him, and a bow and quiverful of arrows were added to the equipment of death. Then the body was carried on his favorite pony, led by a woman, to the place of rest. On four poles with crotches, freshly driven into the ground, a platform of sticks was laid at a height of about ten feet. On this platform the body reposed, as if the warrior was asleep in his blanket, with his bow and quiver beside him. Then the living braves circled about the scaffold with a slow, sorrowful motion, uttering a song or plaint. They made three or four rounds; then, silently mounting their ponies, they returned to camp, leaving their dead comrade to the company of the birds of heaven. In the dry air of Dakota the body becomes rapidly desiccated, and one can be in the neighborhood of scores of these burial scaffolds without noticing anything offensive. It is also a singular fact that the carrion birds seldom look for food among the bodies thus exposed. The motive for disposing of remains in this way probably is to save them from the wolves, which would scratch up a grave. Bodies are sometimes high up in the branches of trees, and it used to be no unusual thing in the river bottoms of the Missouri to come across a departed warrior thus disposed of.

Reassuring.

Nervous people who are haunted by the fear of appendicitis every time they eat grapes or berries, trouble themselves unnecessarily, according to a prominent physician. The general impression that this singular ailment is caused by the presence of a seed or stone in the appendix is erroneous. A small bit of digested matter gets into the little sac, if the neck if it is open far enough to receive it. It may remain there for years and cause no trouble, and then again it may bring on appendicitis almost immediately. Where the patient is in good health, in four cases out of five the operation for removing the appendix is successful. Many people who have heard about appendicitis have given up the luxury of small fruit in fear of it, and some of the extremely sensitive ones have even been constantly worried lest some seed that they had swallowed in the past might give them this disease—which is among the rarest diseases any way. It is time to explode the seed story; it has caused too much discomfort already.

An Old Custom.

Long ago it was the custom in the South to give the lady whom one invited for a drive or outing, a small sum with which to buy flowers, fruit, or confectionery to enhance the pleasure of the event. This money, which probably varied with the fortunes of the gallant, was called "pin money." A writer tells of a young woman, now a grandmother, who encountered the custom many years ago at Saratoga, when that place was still the resort of good Southern families. She had been invited to drive with a stately old school Southern gentleman and his daughter, and after she had accepted the invitation, to her surprise, the father opened his handsome purse and gave her a silver dollar. Puzzled at so queer a proceeding, she called on an elderly woman who was a social authority, who explained to her that it was "pin money," and it was decided to invest it in a bunch of rose to carry in the hand while driving.

Church with a Tree for a Steeple.

One of the oldest churches in Washington has a steeple formed of a tree. The church was built under the shade of a tall poplar tree, and an ingenious member of the congregation suggested that the tree should become the steeple of the building. Accordingly, the tree was deprived of its head, and on the mutulated stump the bell was hung. This is, perhaps, the only instance on record of a church spire having been made from a tree.

TOMB OF TAMERLANE.

Final Resting Place of the Great Mongolian Conqueror.

In the city of Samarcand, Russian Turkestan, is the magnificent tomb of Timur or Tamerlane, the great Mongolian conqueror. Tamerlane was born in 1336, about forty miles from Samarcand. In 1360 he became chief of his tribe, and then began that wonderful conquest which ended in the subjugation of the whole of central and western Asia, from the Chinese wall to the Mediterranean, and from the steppes of Siberia to the mouth of the Ganges. He first attacked neighboring princes in detail, gaining victory after victory until he aspired to the conquest of the whole world. His cruelty was terrible, and before one battle, that of Delhi, he put to death 100,000 male captives who followed his army. In 1401 he stormed the city of Bagdad and piled the streets and public places of the town with 90,000 corpses. His conquests brought him into conflict with the Turkish empire, then ruled over by the powerful Sultan, Bajazet. The armies of the two powers met on the plains of Angora in 1402, and Bajazet was defeated and taken prisoner. After placing men of his own choice at the head of European Turkey, Asiatic Turkey and Egypt, Tamerlane began preparations for the invasion of China. In 1405 he set out at the head of 200,000 veteran troops to attack the Chinese, but died on the way. His remains were taken back to Samarcand, where they were interred in a magnificent mausoleum.

THE TOMB OF TAMERLANE.

A Plucky Indian Maid.

Louise Crouse is an Indian girl, 20 years old, who is a direct descendant of the Algonquins, who once ruled this great State. She is at the famous Normal School in Oswego, and is determined, it is said, to obtain a good education. She is penniless, her mother is dead, her father is a dipsomaniac, and there are no relatives or wealthy friends to aid her in her ambition. Nevertheless she has managed to pay her way so far, and to clothe herself as well, by the hardest labor of all kinds and at all times. She has done sewing, embroidery, scrubbing, washing, ironing, dressmaking and even gardening to get together the necessary money for her advancement. She is completing her course, but works as hard as ever in order to put by something with which to educate her younger sister. After completing her studies in the Normal School she hopes to enter some medical college and be graduated as a physician.—New York Mail and Express.

NOT SO EASY AS IT LOOKS.

The Endeavor to Get Married Is Chilled by Legal Requirements.

To get married seems an easy thing to the young man whose fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love. But when it comes to the actual ceremony there are a thousand and one terrors which surround and threaten to overcome him. Marriage in most States is easy; in others it is as difficult as obtaining a divorce.

A well-known Philadelphian was about to be married to a beautiful young woman who lived in the State of Delaware. He had no idea that the marriage laws of that State were of an appalling nature. He had secured his license and thought that was all that was necessary.

"Have you filed your bond, yet?" said some one to him the day before the wedding.

"What?" gasped he.

"Your bond," repeated the questioner. "You know every man who is married in this State has to file a bond for the protection of the State."

The bridegroom was rather dubious, but was finally persuaded that this was a fact.

"I'll see a lawyer about it in the morning," said he. So he went to a friend who was a legal light and said:

"See here. They tell me I have to give a bond to the State when I get married."

"Certainly. Haven't you done so?" in a surprised way.

"No; I never heard of such a thing before. What kind of a bond is it?"

"Oh, any real estate will do."

"But I haven't any real estate."

The lawyer looked at him a moment. Then he solemnly said:

"Haven't you any friends who own property?"

"None that I care to ask to bind it up that way. I can't ask my bride's relatives, you know."

His friend looked at him pityingly.

"You can't postpone the wedding, can you?"

"What?" fairly shrieked the unfortunate.

"Of course not, of course not," said the legal light soothingly But the poor bridegroom looked stricken.

"I'll tell you what I'll do, old man, I'll tend to the matter for you. Don't give yourself any more concern about it."

The young-man-about-to-be-married then grasped his hand. He could not speak for a moment, and then he poured forth his thanks. He picked up his hat in a relieved sort of way and walked to the door. Then he turned.

"By the way, I forgot to ask you how large is the amount of the bond required?"

"Fifty cents," said the lawyer.—New York Recorder.

THE contract has been signed for a four-mill tin-plate plant south of Elwood, near Frankton.

HARRY HARRIS, a Vandalia brakeman, fell under the cars at South Bend, and lost both legs.

OTTO BOND, a Farmland carpenter, fell thirty feet from a building and is probably fatally hurt.

A FALL from the second story of a building crushed the skull of Charles Sluss, at Bloomington.

AN eagle, measuring seven feet ten inches from tip to tip, was killed by H. S. Marks, Marion, recently.

MAXWELL, a small town near Greenfield, wants the Globe tin-plate plant. It will employ 250 hands.

JOHNSON county fruit growers prognosticate a total failure of the crop. Hasn't this prediction been heard before?

JAMES HUFFORD, a contractor, and George Koob, a carpenter, both dropped dead at Evansville. Heart disease was the cause.

MRS. HELEN MILLER, living north of Valparaiso, committed suicide by jumping into Bull's Eye Lake. Ill health was the cause.

OMNIBUS BARN of Holman & Reeves and livery stable of Middleton & Simeon, Marion, burned. Five horses and four sacks of mail burned.

FREDERICK BRIGGS, a young Greensburg man, jumped on a fright train for a free ride, but fell and had his foot crushed, necessitating amputation.

STRATHMORE, famous stallion owned by Fort Wayne parties, fell on the frozen ground some days ago sustaining such severe injuries that he had to be shot.

WHILE attending the funeral of Mrs. Frank Lanich, at Dublin, Mrs. Ora Fisher opened the cellar door by mistake, and fell to the bottom, sustaining fatal injuries

MARGUERITE TENNANT, of the Bixby-Huntly comedy company, while playing at Shelbyville, was struck in the eye by a wad fired from a revolver and will lose her sight.

CALVIN ROSS, Shelbyville, set a gun trap for meat thieves in his celler. His wife was the first to enter the cellar and received the load of buckshot in her lower limbs.

WHILE sitting in a chair immediately after eating a hearty meal, Mrs. T. S. Peck, of Jackson Township, Cass County, fell dead. Heart disease is supposed to have been the cause.

PARENTS of Ama Speakman, Marion, who was killed in a gas explosion last summer, have sued the Marion natural gas company for $10,000, claiming that rotten pipe was used.

HON. JOSEPH JACKSON, a prominent politician and ex-member of the Indiana Legislature, committed suicide at Laporte, by shooting himself in the head with a revolver. Despondency over defeat at the last election is the cause assigned.

A year ago a small colored lad of Franklin "shinned" up a pole and grabbed an electric light wire. He was picked up dead several feet away and his father now sues for damages, claiming that the wires were not far enough from the ground.

JOHN COLLIER, an employe of the oil well sucker-rod factory, four miles east of Farmland, while runing a cut-off saw was struck by a piece of timber hurled from the saw, causing internal injuries which resulted in death. He was 38 years old, and had only been working in the factory a few days. He leaves a wife and two children.

ELLSWORTH LUKENBILL, brother of Dr. O. C. Lukenbill, of Indianapolis, was accidentally shot while duck hunting near Gosport. He went hunting about noon, and not returning at night the town was alarmed. A search was made through the country, and Lukenbill's body was found alongside a wire fence, with a large hole in the abdomen. His gun was doubtless discharged while he was climbing the fence.

THE State Insurance Commissioner is trying to run down two swindlers who represented themselves as agents of the Farmers and Mechanics' Insurance Company, of Milwaukee, and did a rushing business among the credulous farmers in Lawrence and Dubois Counties by selling polices at fabulous premiums and pocketing the proceeds. There is no such insurance company in existence. The State Commissioner has written to the grand juries of the counties named that indictments may be returned.

A SURGICAL operation was performed recently on John Dehority, an employe of the North Anderson Box Company, at St. John's Hospital, Anderson. A strip of the skull two inches long was removed from the top of his head and a bullet that has been imbedded in his brain for ten years was secured. The case is considered most remarkable. At the time the gun shot wound was received it was supposed by Dehority that the leaden missile had been removed. The wound healed and gave him no trouble until within the past two weeks, during which time he has suffered two epileptic fits and much violent pain. The bullet was flattened and had become securely imbedded in the bone.

A passing buggy struck the handle of a cross-cut saw which George Anderson, Logansport, was carrying on his shoulder. He was thrown down and is now in a desperate condition with concussion of the brain.

PHYSICIANS in several towns in this State have recently been worked to the extent of $5 by a man who claimed to have a recipe for an adjustable splint. It was supposed to be made of a number of fine splints and between each layer a kind of plaster of paris solution. He got their $5 and set a day on which he was to explain the make-up of the solution but when the day came he didn't.

GREENBERRY RIGGS, Fairbanks, found an old Spanish coin while plowing recently. It is about the size of a dollar, bears the date of 1819 and the words "Cariolus IIII Dei Gratia."

GOVERNOR MATTHEWS has paroled Joseph Wade, who was convicted of complicity in the murder of John H. Brown in Indianapolis in 1880. The other accomplice was Brown's wife, who sustained unlawful relations with Wade during the term her husband served in the penitentiary for keeping a "fence." The guilty couple decided to make way with Brown after his return and one night, it was shown in testimoney, they assaulted Brown in his own house with a mallet and a stick of stove wood and crushed in his skull.

It Is Now a Modern City.

No European town has been more conspicuously improved in recent years than Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria. A series of splendid boulevards has been cut through the mass of old narrow streets and Turkish houses, one encircling the city, while others run across it in various directions; and a still more spacious avenue, 197 feet wide, and set with six rows of trees, leads from the center of the town to the railway station, while another, called the Boulevard Stambuloff, runs from the same point to the new park. This park is very large and is said to be well planted. A great public garden has also been formed in the middle of the town, with smaller gardens at various points, and a nursery, covering 100 acres, has been established in the suburbs, where plants will be grown for the public grounds and will also be sold to private purchasers.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Texas to the Front Again.

That the cigarette habit can be completely cured is demonstrated in the statement of Emerson M. Noble, of Houston, Texas, to the Sterling Remedy Co., of Chicago, manufacturers of No-to-bac, who writes that after using one box of No-to-bac, which he bought at the drug store, he had no desire for cigarettes, though having smoked them for eight years; that there is something indescribable in the effects of No-to-bac, and that he has nothing but good words to say for it.

PAPER CANNONS.

They Are Elastic and Light and Have Great Strength.

It was discovered some time ago that efficient heavy guns could be made out of a composition composed largely of leather. Now it has been discovered that a good paper can be used for the same purpose.

The body of the gun is made of paper pulp. The core is of metal and made very much like the cores of ordinary cannon. The exterior of the cannon is wound with wire. About five layers of copper, brass or steel wire are firmly wound on, thus binding the cannon. Outside of the covering of wire are various bands of brass. These bands are set with uprights, through which rods extend parallel with the gun. There are lock nuts on each side of the uprights and these hold the rods in place.

The process of making the gun is as follows: A special grade of paper pulp in which the fiber is long is selected and well agitated. The usual, hardening and toughening ingredients consisting of litharge, wax, tallow, white lead and blue, are introduced. The pulp is then run into molds and cast of the proper shape. The steel core is put in; wire is bound around the exterior; brass or steel bands are securely set about the whole and the parallel rods are applied. The rods being of steel possess a degree of spring and as they are fastened to the bands the result is a gun which will give way slightly at each discharge, yet cannot burst.

A person may make his muscles rigid and fall to the ground, in which case he is likely to receive a broken bone; but if the muscles are relaxed the bones will give way somewhat and will not break. The same principle is applied in the paper cannon. The pulp, although exceedingly durable, will give way enough to prevent a break. The layers of wire, the binding of steel bands and the parallel rods add strength. In war times it is easy to batter down a brick wall or a stone foundation, but a protection of bales of hay, bags of sand or similar substance is not affected, as the shot is simply imbedded in it. The chief points of the pulp gun are elasticity and lightness. Being lighter it follows that transportation will be easier. It is said that the leather pulp guns, which, if made of metal, would require a derrick to move, are readily transported on light wagons. Paper pulp is no heavier than leather pulp.

Women as Ranchers.

A bright eyed little woman who is a regular and welcome visitor to New York is Mrs. G. U. Ellis, of Montana, where she owns large property interests. In speaking of life on the plains and in the hills she says: "There seems an idea in the East that only men can and do run ranches in the West. People usually looks surprised when I tell them that I'm a ranchman, as if they expected me to wear jack boots, carry large guns, wear a felt hat and employ the other trade marks of the stage cowboy. At home I have my horse and dogs, with whom I seldom cover less than twenty miles a day. I have my employes, who are just as nice and polite out there as clerks are here. They are not altogether models, but they average all right. They go off on a wild spree about once a month, and then they generally paint the nearest town a deep rich red. They return in a day or two very miserable and wretched. But they attend strictly to business and are extremely honest and faithful. There are many women out West who are ranchers. Some, like myself, are widows; others are the daughters of old settlers, while a few have gone into it for the healthfulness of the life. They get along moderately well, about the same as men do under similar circumstances. It is a hearty existence. All you want is a horse and dog and the rest takes care of itself."

Strong Nerves

Depend upon pure, rich, red, nourishing, and strength-giving blood. The nerves derive their sustenance from the blood, and when they are weak it is because they do not receive the nourishment needed. The true cure for nervousness will not be found in opiate or sedative compounds. These only allay the symptoms.

"My wife suffered many years with various troubles—severe headaches, debility, nervousness, indigestion and dyspepsia. She has been treated by different doctors, and tried different remedies, but Hood's Sarsaparilla Has Done More for her than anything else. We consider Hood's Sarsaparilla a most indispensable medicine for family use, and for all disorders caused by torpid liver and impure blood—in fact, it is a wonderful health restorer to the whole system. Hood's Sarsaparilla has proved itself in my wife's case, and we can faithfully recommend its use in every family." JACOB ROMMEL, Morrison, Missouri.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Removes the cause by purifying and enriching the blood, giving to it just those qualities which are demanded for the proper support of the nervous system. Hundreds of women who once suffered from nervousness write that they have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla and nervousness has disappeared. This was because Hood's Sarsaparilla purified their blood.

Remember that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only true blood purifier.

DEATH VALLEY.

The Arid Desert Where Men Mine Borax.

Every housekeeper knows the white powder sold as borax, and that it is death to water bugs and roaches. Hardly a housekeeper knows that to mine that white powder is deadly dangerous to human beings. Borax comes from the most desolate section of the whole world. Not even the most arid part of the Desert of Sahara can compete with Death Valley, where are the great borax fields of this country. Death Valley is well named.

There is not one living thing in it save the men who mine the borax and the animals which draw it to the railroads. It is impossible for man or beast to cross the valley from one side to the other. There is not one drop of water in the whole desolate place, and the heat is so intense that not enough water can be carried to sustain life during the trip. The valley is nearly 200 feet below the level of the sea, and the summer heat in the shade never gets below 104 and often reaches 140. A man cannot go an hour without water, and if he does he goes insane and his skull cracks open. It is a place of the most awful stillness. The sun blazes down on a glittering white expanse of alkali, and not a bird dots the sky. There is only a brazen sky and the snow-white earth, the intolerable heat and skeletons here and there to show where death came from thirst.

BORAX FREIGHTERS OF THE DESERT.

A party of thirty people left Salt Lake City in 1850 for the new El Dorado of California. They were too anxious to follow the slowly moving teams across the Nevada plains. They thought to find a more direct route and struck down into Southern Nevada. Man had never been in that country before and there are still places where man has never been. It is the one absolutely unknown part of the United States. Years afterward the party was traced by the glistening bones along the route, and by the messages they left scratched on rocks and written in the sand. All told one sad story and sent one sad cry to heaven through the blistering air—"water!" That is how Death Valley got its name.

Carrying out the gruesome simile, the mountains that flank the valley are the Funeral Mountains. The two precipitous cliffs that flank the entrance are called Headstone Rock and Coffin Peak. There is a river in Death Valley. But it is only a river by courtesy of the geographers. It is called Furnace Creek, but it is only a sink in the sand. Up in the black mountains, where no man has ever been, there is water, and it finds its way down through the lava rocks to the edge of the valley. There it is lost in the sand.

But Death Valley is rich. In mineral deposits of all kinds there are few places in the country so wealthy, but the treasures of the soil are more effectually guarded than if they were in the big safes of New York banks. The climate of the valley is such that it is all but impossible to mine the stuff, and when once mined it is so difficult to transport it out of the valley that no profit is left. It costs more in money and human life to dig treasures out of the earth than the treasures are worth.

ONLY HOUSE IN DEATH VALLEY.

"Gunsight Lead" is one of the famous silver strikes of the State. It, too, has the pall of death thrown over it. When the lost party was traced to the edge of Death Valley ten years after its disappearance, the last camp was found. Everything was just as the party left it—the ashes of the fire, the wagons and the bleaching bones. Near the long-dead camp-fire was picked up a little bit of ore. It was pure silver. The finder had it made into a gunsight, and, though wonderfully rich, the lead was never worked.

Before borax was found in Death Valley it was brought only from Asia or compounded chemically. It cost 40 cents a pound wholesale. Since then the price has fallen to 8 cents a pound, and the annual product is millions upon millions of pounds. Borax is mined upon the edge of the valley and transported to a railroad by mule teams of twenty pairs of mules. From there it is taken to Oakland for refining.

Printing Methods in China.

Shanghai is China's chief port, and contains about 400,000 inhabitants, who are under native rule, and the English, American and French "settlements," with 250,000 Chinese and 5,000 foreigners, all of whom are under foreign rule.

In that city tremendous congregations gather in the mission churches, and there are to be found the largest Sunday schools in China. In Shanghai is also the largest mission press in the world. More than 1,000 Chinese converts are connected with the different missions.

In the mission press electrotyping and stereotyping are done and over 35,000,000 pages are issued annually. The total number of books and tracts issued last year was 995,496.

The Shun Pao is the best-paying and most widely circulated of the three native newspaper dailies of Shanghai. It is an eight-page sheet, printed on the thinnest of rice paper. It is so light that it does not weigh more than a man's handkerchief, and so thin that the paper can be printed on one side only.

The paper goes to press in big sheets, which are so folded that the blank side is turned inward when taken in hand by the subscriber, and so that there is neither cutting nor pasting. Owing to the thinness of the paper it has a greasy, yellow appearance, and it is printed so closely with Chinese type that not an inch seems to be wasted.

The headline or title of the paper consists of two Chinese characters, taking up a space not wider than one of the columns of our newspapers, and not more than an inch in length.

Its price is 10 cash, which, allowing for the difference in currency, makes it equivalent to half a cent of our money.

FREAKS OF FASHION.

How They Manifested Themselves in the Olden Times of Henry III.

At Christmas, 1464, Bernard of Rohrback, at Frankfort-on-the-Main, donned a brown tunic that was so richly embroidered with silver that one sleeve alone weighed eleven and a half pounds. The wedding dress of Maria de Medici had a train five ells in length, and trimmed with lilies of pure gold, in which Maria shone like the sun breaking through the clouds. At the christening of her son, afterward Louis XIII. of France, this queen wore a dress trimmed with 32,000 pearls and 3,000 diamonds. On the same occasion Marshal Bassompierre bought half a hundred-weight of pearls to trim his coat with. When Queen Elizabeth of England granted an audience to Marshal Biron, the French embassador, she wore a dress on which 100 persons had been at work for three weeks. A very curious custom prevailed among the young gallants of the period of Henry III. After making their purchases of silk stockings, they would ask their belles to inaugurate them by wearing these integuments themselves for a few days. Henry IV. bought masks into vogue, which were worn in traveling, walking, or visiting, in order to protect the skin from the effects of the air, the rain and the sunshine. In the seventeenth century—before the existence of fashion journals—German ladies used to have large dolls sent to them from Paris, dressed up in the full costume of the day, and they also sent their tailors to the French capital to study the latest fashions.

During the reign of Louis XIV. lace cuffs were worn which were almost an ell in length. We all remember to have heard of the giant pyramids of hair, ribbons, and flowers which last century dames balanced on their heads. That inflated protuberance, yclept tournure, or dress-improver, which has now happily disappeared, was all the go under Francis II., at which time the gentlemen sought to give themselves an air of dignity and respectability by the adoption of large false stomachs.

A Profitable Investment.

The history of gold mining in California is full of instances where abandoned claims have subsequently yielded a rich return and where shafts sunk as far as capital would permit have afterwards made rich fortunes for more fortunate capitalists.

The stories told about such experiences in the Comstock and in other famous mines are as household words in mining circles, and there are occasional anecdotes in connection with less historical enterprises. One story relates to the casual visit of John Jillson to Siskiyou County years ago in search of a recreant debtor who owed him $500.

Times were hard, and Jillson, when he found his man, accepted $200 "on account" and started home again.

"What is land worth here?" aske Jillson.

"Not much of anything," was the reply.

"But you fellows seem to like it," persisted Jillson.

"Only because we can't get away."

"What will you take for your claim?" asked Jillson.

"One hundred dollars cash."

"Done," said Jillson, going down into his pocket.

The price was paid, a deed given the sellers walked away, the buyer took off his coat and went to work. The next day he struck it rich and in a month cleaned up $13,000.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Polar City.

Numbers of explorers who have sought the Arctic regions in quest of the Pole, have told of a mysterious city mirrored against that northern sky—stately buildings in choice architecture, tall and imposing spires, but such as differ from anything we know of. Whether the foundation of this mirage is a reality and only unrecognizable because of transposition as to directions, whether it is a work of some mysterious remnant of our race that once occupied the Pole, or whether this is some fanciful feature of the frost, as the peculiar shrubbery we sometimes see on the window pane—whatever this is, it must be consigned to the perplexing enigmas of the unknown region. Who knows but that some spot, once the theater of busy and advanced human life, may have escaped the general cataclysmal wreck, and that this city may be the silent and as yet undiscovered witness of pre-polar time, standing alone in the dead desolation, in the rigid shroud of now polar death! If we must be barred from entering this undiscovered country, we may add to our equipment by a careful noting of its mirage, and then give to the bases of these phenomena a most thorough study.

He Hired a Barber.

Here is a drawing of a turtle who lived some years ago in Michigan. His fossilized remains were recently dug up on the farm of William Mather, a gentleman of unimpeachable character living near Big Rapids. It must have been chilly in Michigan years ago or the creature played on a prehistoric foot-ball team, for his crust was covered with an opulent thatch of hair.

Advice from a King.

Kaberego, the negro king of Unyoro, in Central Africa, is a man who rules his subjects with a rod of iron. Like all tyrants, he regulates their smallest actions, and a host of spies inform him of any disobedience to his commands.

Among other things, he has made a fixed tariff of prices for everything bought or sold in his country, and every deviation from it is severely punished. An instance of this is given by Vita Hassan in his book about Emin Pasha and the Equatorial Province.

About a month after Hassan's arrival in Unyoro he bought a fowl and paid thirty cowries for it, while the market price was only twenty-five. In that part of Africa it takes about 250 cowries to make $1. Soon afterward a dragoman of the king appeared and brought back five cowries, with the message:

"A fowl costs twenty-five cowries, while you have given thirty. The seller has done wrong, and the king will punish him; but he sends to you the advice to be careful henceforth in your purchases—never to give for anything more than it is worth, first of all it is in your own interest, and next to this in order not to disturb the market."

Deserved a Rest.

"Gentlemen," said an ex-army officer, who was a candidate for parliament. "I have fought against the Russians. I have often had no bed but the battlefield, and no canopy but the sky. I have marched over the frozen ground till every step has been marked with blood."

His story took effect, till a countrified looking voter shouted out:

"Did you say yer'd fought against the Rooshans?"

"Yes," replied the candidate.

"And that you slept on the ground with only the sky for a cover?"

"Certainly."

"And that your feet bled in marching over the ground?"

"That they did," cried the exultant candidate.

"Then I'm sure you've done enough for your country. Go home and rest. I'll vote for the other fellow."

Dogskin.

Those who are enthusiastic about their canine favorites may not be pleased to hear that dogskin boots and shoes are becoming quite the fashion, and that many of these skins come from the lost dogs that are killed when not claimed by their owners.

King Lear, Driven Forth

Into the cold and rain, had no Hostetter's Stomach Bitters to counteract their effect. But the modern traveler in inclement weather can baffle its hurtful influence with this genial protector. Chills and fever, rheumatism, neuralgia, colds are forestalled by this warming medicinal stimulant and safeguard. Take a wineglassful immediately before and after exposure. Use it, too, for dyspepsia, biliousness and constipation.

The Timothy Field.

Timothy grass makes slow growth after cutting, especially when cut late. The hot sun striking the ground bakes it and dries up the roots, which in timothy are mostly near the surface. A mulch of anything spread at this time is better than if given late in the fall, in winter or in the spring. There is no appreciable loss in spreading manure on timothy sod in summer. It is dried up by the sun, but in its dry state there is no fermentation and no ammonia to be given off. When fall rains come the manure is washed down into the soil where it is most needed.

THE method pursued by the Nickel Plate road by which its agents figure rates as low as the lowest seems to meet the requirements of the traveling public. No one should think of purchasing a ticket until they first inquire what the rate would be over the Nickel Plate road.

Change Of "Air."

The dwellers in "flat," or suites of apartments on the same floor, in our cities, have been wittily called "folding Bedouins," with reference both to their nomadic habits and the compressible nature of their furniture.

A man who belonged to this unfortunate class, and who had moved two or three times to escape what he called musical nuisances, reported to a friend that he had moved again.

"There were four pianos in the house," he said, "and they were going all the time."

"How many pianos are there in the house you have moved into?"

"Four."

"Then how are you any better off?"

"Oh, I get a change of air, at any rate—new tunes on every one of those pianos!"

Adjust Family Differences.

Bad temper is often merely bad digestion.

Many quarrels attributed to perverse dispositions are due to disordered livers.

Ripans Tabules adjust family differences, and would prevent them, which is better, if taken in time.

Ripans Tabules, taken after meals, morning and evening, for a while, regulate the system and sweeten the temper.

"CALENDAL," a grand opera founded on Frederic Mistral's poem, and composed by Henry Marechal, was produced recently with great success.

THE Knights Templar conclave will be held at Boston, Mass., during next August, and it will be of interest to Sir Knights and their friends to know that arrangements have already been successfully accomplished by the Nickel Plate road providing for the sale of excursion tickets over direct lines, going and returning, or by circuitous routes, i. e., going one line and returning another. By so doing many of the following notable resorts may be visited without additional expense: Chautauqua Lake, Niagara Falls, Thousand Islands, The Rapids of the St. Lawrence, Saratoga, Palisades of the Hudson and the Hoosac Tunnel. The above arrangements will, no doubt, make the low rate excursion tickets offered by the Nickel Plate road very popular.

Call It a Craze.

AN ALARMING STATEMENT CONCERNING WOMEN.

HOW BAD HABITS ARE FORMED.

The New York Tribune says: "The habit of taking 'headache powders' is increasing to an alarming extent among a great number of women throughout the country. These powders as their name indicates, are claimed by the manufacturers to be a positive and speedy cure for any form of headache. In many cases their chief ingredient is morphine, opium, cocaine or some other equally injurious drug having a tendency to deaden pain. The habit of taking them is easily formed, but almost impossible to shake off. Women usually begin taking them to relieve a raging headache and soon resort to the powder to alleviate any little pain or ache they may be subjected to, and finally like the morphine or opium fiend, get into the habit of taking them regularly, imagining that they are in pain if they happen to miss their regular dose."

In nine cases out of ten, the trouble is in the stomach and liver. Take a simple laxative and liver tonic and remove the offending matter which deranges the stomach and causes the headache. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are composed entirely of the purest, concentrated, vegetable extracts. One Pellet is a dose; sugar-coated, easily swallowed; once used, always in favor. They positively cure sick headache and remove the disposition to it.

MR. E. VARGASON, of Otter Lake, Lapeer Co., Mich., writes: "I not infrequently have an attack of the headache. It usually comes on in the forenoon. At my dinner I eat my regular meal, and take one or two of Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets immediately after, and in the course of an hour my headache is cured and no bad effects. I feel better every way for having taken them—not worse, as is usual after taking other kinds of pills. 'Pleasant Pellets' are worth more than their weight in gold, if for nothing else than to cure headache."

In our adv. two weeks ago we told of our very superior silver hand and power feed cutter to be offered at $10 worth $40

Last week we told of the process of galvanizing and its indispensable preservative qualities. Next week we will give you the experience of two representative business firms of Illinois, one of whom has sold $60 and the other 500 Aermotors. The week following we will quote a price on the best pumps made, chain, wind mill and irrigating lower than was ever before dreamed of; and the week following that we shall talk to you of steel galvanized tanks, with covers, at the unheard of price of 1½ cents per gallon. This is cheaper than wood. They do not shrink, leak, rot, rust or give taste to water.

The Aermotor Company trusts the public generously. While state legislatures are passing laws to secure reports for farm machinery at reasonable prices, IT IS A FACT THAT THE AERMOTOR COMPANY HAS FOR THE YEAR 1895 BEEN COMPELLED TO RAISE ITS PRICES OF REPAIRS BECAUSE SOME OF ITS CUSTOMERS HAVE BEEN ORDERING INDIVIDUAL PARTS TO MAKE UP COMPLETE MACHINES, SINCE IT IS THAT WAY THEY COULD GET A MACHINE CHEAPER THAN BY ORDERING IT ASSEMBLED. People are not compelled to buy repairs. The Aermotor Company would would get the machine machinery; they are compelled to buy repairs. The Aermotor Company would be in a fearful fix if it would not get the machine even in a fearful fix. It would be in a fearful fix if it would not get the machine for the protection of its reputation, the Aermotor Company has raised just enough to prevent the Aermotor Company, always at price and refused to sell it. It has now ESTABLISHED IN VARIOUS PARTS OF THE COUNTRY IN ORDER TO HAVE NOT ONLY ITS GOODS EASILY ACCESSIBLE, BUT TO HAVE ITS REPAIRS WITHIN EASY REACH. It expects soon to greatly increase this number of houses. This is of importance to those who know Accidents will happen, and, when he is buying an article he wants it to be had at reasonable rates. Our very low prices and high standards on everything connected with water supply and power production by wind, together with the accessibility of a full line of our goods and repairs, will be appreciated.

Sick headache, constipation and indigestion are quickly cured by De Will's Little Early Risers, the famous little pills.

The Proof Accumulates.

The evidence continues to come and all helps to prove our claims for Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer. W. C. Flick, ex-postmaster, New Garden, Columbiana Co., Ohio, says: "About two years ago I was all run down, had no strength to work, was listless, drowsy in day time and wakeful at night, and felt about as nervous and miserable as I could feel and live. Salem doctors applied a battery, examined me closely and pronounced it a serious case of nervous prostration, or which there was no help except to keep as quiet as possible. I think that they didn't expect me to live long. I spoke of trying a patent medicine, but the doctor said no patent medicine could help me. But as I steadily grew worse I had to try something, so got Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, which was highly recommended for nerve diseases. I felt a good effect from the first use of it, so continued to use it and continued to improve in health. Think I used six bottles and I believe I am perfectly cured." Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is a medicinal preparation which cannot fail to help any nerve disorder or "run down" condition of health. Sold by Davenport.

J. A. Richardson, of Jefferson City, Mo. Chief Enrolling force 38th general assembly of Missouri, writes: I wish to testify to the merits of One Minute Cough Cure. When other so-called cures failed, I obtained almost instant relief and a speedy cure by the use of One Minute Cough cure.

Cramp Colic and Cholera.

For seven years or more Mrs. W. D. Louder, of Quincy, Ky., was subject to attacks of cramp colic. Mr. S. R. Morse, a druggist of that place, recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which has effected a permanent cure, saving her much suffering besides the trouble and expense of sending for a doctor, which was often necessary. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

True to its Name.

Nearly twenty years ago one of the most eminent physicians in Indiana was noted for the wonderful success that he achieved in all diseases of the stomach. The remedy was so ready and perfect in its efficacy, that large as his practice was it was deemed proper to put this remedy in such shape that humanity at large could have the benefit of it. This remedy is Lyon's Seven Wonders, which is performing marvelous cures in indigestion, dyspepsia, catarrh of the stomach, and other serious ailments caused by functional disturbances of the stomach. The certificates of cures performed by Lyon's Seven Wonders bear the endorsement of the best people in the land, of those who are well known in the communities in which they live. Among these may be mentioned Gen. R. S. Foster, of Indianapolis; Hon. A. M. Sweeney, Ex-Clerk of the Supreme Court of Indiana and Judge Wangle of Tipton.

De Witt's Witch Hazel Salve cures scalds, burns, indolent sores and never fails to cure piles.

Cures Rheumatism.

A severe rheumatic pain in the left shoulder had troubled Mr. J. H Leper, a well known druggist of Des Moines, Iowa, for over six months. At times the pain was so severe that he could not lift anything. With all he could do he could not get rid of it until he applied Chamberlain's Pain Balm. "I only made three applications of it," he says, "And have since been free from all pain." He now recommends it to persons similarly afflicted. It is for sale by Robbins & McCord 10-13

T. F. Anthony, ex-postmaster of Promise City, Iowa, says: "I bought one bottle of 'Mystic Cure' for Rheumatism and two doses of it did me more good than all the medicine I ever took." Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn. 41tf

La Grippe is here again with all of its old time vigor. One Minute Cough Cure is a reliable remedy. It cures and cures quickly.

Relief in One Day.

South American Nervine relieves the worst cases of nervous prostrations nervousness and nervous dyspepsia in a single day. No such relief and blessing has ever come to the invalids of this country. Its powers to cure the stomach are wonderful in the extreme. It always cures; it cannot fail. It radically cures all weakness of the stomach and never disappoints. Its effects are marvelous and surprising.—It gladdens the hearts of the suffering and brings immediate relief. It is a luxury to take and always safe. Trial bottles 15 cents. Take Care of the Lungs:

"Perhaps you would not think so, but a very large proportion of diseases in New York, comes from carlessness about catching cold," says Dr. Cyrus Edson. "It is such a simple thing and so common that very few people, unless it is a case of pneumonia, pay any attention to a cold. New York is one of the healthiest places on the Atlantic Coast and yet there are a great many cases of catarrh and consumption which have their origin in this neglect of the simplest precaution of every day life. The most sensible advice is, when you have one get rid of it as soon as possible. By all means do not neglect it." Dr. Edson does not tell you how to cure a cold but we will. Take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It will relieve the lungs, aid expectoration open the secretions and soon effect a permanent cure. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 1013

Dr. Buchtel and Dr. Fisher performed a second operation on Mrs. J. N. Wilson yesterday. She is feeling a little better at this writing.

Mrs. W. H. McIntosh is the oldest person born in Auburn, now living here She was born on the lot now occupied by A. J. Ralston.

Frank Dills' imported dog got in the way of the fire team as it started out and was kicked by them and fell under the wheels and crushed.

Ben Cochran has bee back here a few days and is working with his brother, E. T. Cochran. He has been in Ohio for about three years, his home being at Salem in that state.

Miss Hattie Dills, daughter of J. W Dills, of Concord, comes up from Fort Wayne this evening and will remain over night with Mrs. May Dills. She is a student at Westminster Seminary.

Henry Jenkins one of our Concord friends called to day. He is one of the old pioneers and has lived at or near his present home since coming to the state, which will be fifty years the 17th of next July.

E. R. Shoemaker was able to get to town-day after a long illness. This has been his second serious pull with the same disease. It is what they sometimes call "gall stones" a very painful complaint and very difficult to manage.

Our people are making an effort to get that gas and oil expert. Mr. Douglas of Richmond, to come here and make a test of our territory. It would pay the outlay, just to satisfy us as to his ability to do what he claims he can. We publish his first letter to-day.

As Wm. Moudy was unloading logs at the band saw mill yesterday the whistle blew for noon which frightened his team and they ran away. The yard is full of logs and they did not go far until they came in contact with one of them and broke the tongue from the wagon. They ran west near the foundry where they landed up against some piling, one horse falling down and rolling over.

GOOD WILL TO THE PASTOR.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the M. E. church Sunday:

AUBURN, IND March 24, 1895.

TO REV. A. S. WOOTON AND WIFE:

We, the members and attendants of the First M. E. church of Auburn, in assembly on this the last Sabbath of the conference year, would express our regret and sorrow at your intended removal; though we feel our loss too deeply to attempt an adequate expression in words During the four years you have labored with us as pastor of this charge we have learned to respect, to honor and love you as a friend worthy of our every confidence. You have been kind and courteous to all, exercising in a very exceptional degree, the virtue of christian charity and good will to every one. We would have you know we had not failed to observe, with profound sympathy and admiration, your self-sacrificing devotion to duty in the hours of deepest sorrow. Your unswerving loyalty to God and duty have won all the confidence and appreciation of which we are capable. Your sermons have always been in hearty touch with every good work. They have been instructive as to current questions and events, and bright with aptness of word and thought Chiefly, however, have they been prized because always burdened with spiritual food for the hungry. Not readily shall we forget the manly voice and bearing and the honest hand-clasp of him who by word, or look, or prayer or tear, has given abundant evidence of frequent and intimate communions with our Master, Christ. In Prayer and class meetings you have ever been an inspiration, a counsellor, and a guide. You have materially helped us by your liberal contributions, exercising your faith by being always in harmony with God's command to "Bring the tithes into the store house" and prove his promises. We bespeak for you in your new field of labor the prayers and the co-operation of every true Methodist. May God's richest and fullest blessings attend you. May He "guide and uphold you by His counsel," and continue to inspire you to that degree of spiritual life and efficiency of service which has characterized your labor with us. May you in your new home receive all the love, the kindness and the warmth of welcome you so largely merit.

To Mrs. Wooton we would say that, though our acquaintance has been but short we soon learned to prize her able and zealous application to all the varied and arduous duties attending her new sphere. We have found her a valuable and ready help in all the departments of worship, Her christian experience, her prayers, her work in Sabbath school and in League, all voiced a long and living service of the Master.

No one could pray or speak, as either of you have done, who did not breath the atmosphere of Christ own immediate presence.

Since we've deserved the name of friends,
And thine effect so lives in us,
A part of ours may live in thee,
And move thee on to nobler ends.

Signed on behalf of the congregation.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

PEGGY IN HOO.

Curt Armstrong gets into Another Scrape and is Now Boarding at the Hotel de Stroh.

Saturday evening Curt Armstrong, more frequently called "Peggy," got into a quarrel in Sommers' saloon with Jim Clouse, who works at Trout's livery barn and then they naturally drifted into a fight. Peggy has for some time had a weakness for brawls of this kind and when the brawls panned out to suit him, he also had a weakness for slashing his opponent with a knife or something of the sort. This time it was a razor which he appears to have had concealed in his pocket for the first handy occasion. After they were separated, Armstrong was taken before 'Squire Walborn and bound over to court. It was characteristic of him that he demanded the best lawyer for his defense, at public expense. He wanted Colerick, of Fort Wayne, and some man from Kokomo. As we have better attorneys here, he may yet conclude to accept a common DeKalb county lawyer. But the chances are that Peggy goes over the road this time, as he has tried this sort of thing several times. We presume his case will come up ot next term.

THE BLIND POET.

Harvey A. Fuller, the blind poet and lecturer, delivered a lecture, in place of the regular forenoon service at the Presbyterian church Sunday. His subject was, "Trials by the Way." It was a very able and eloquent lecture, and delivered with an earnestness that impressed every one in the audience. It very naturally treated this subject from a point of view that kept one constantly reminded of the speaker's own unfortunate experience That he has lost his eyesight, and has yet mastered many of the consequent difficulties that arose in his pathway, must have come up in the minds of all his hearers, although no word of allusion was made in regard to it. But one after another of those who have made portions of the world's history, appeared in the lecture, each with a feeling allusion to the trials he had to encounter, and finally with the triumphant statement of his later triumphs—triumphs all the more remarkable and valuable, for the difficulties under which they were won. Mr. Fuller has a hopeful disposition a most blessed thing for a man in his situation to have. He made his audience feel this, and if we leave out the great power and eloquence of the lecture itself, it is still of sufficient value for the lesson of patience and hopefulness it inculcates. Let every weak mortal, who fancies his own lot a hard one, go and hear this lecture by a man who has a real misfortune, and he cannot fail to be benefited in every way, and take on a new and brighter view of life.

JOKE ON THE LOVERS.

Miss—— while waiting for her best fellow, Mr. —— Wednesday evening became quite restless and nervous, evidently fearing he had forgotten his appointment. But a lady friend, sympathizingly came to her relief by putting on a mackintosh and a man's hat so as to look as near like the young man as possible, went over and called to see if she was ready, to go to church. She was ready, and off they started. She soon saw her mistake for the young man himself, came in sight just as the two stepped off the porch. The young man was greatly surprised to see his girl walking off with another gentleman. It is possible that Bishop & Lackey could make a sale of a mackintosh by seeing him, as the young lady thinks they are very dressy. A warning to all young ladies not to get too hasty, when the escort is late.

A CURIOSITY.

John Aber while making some changes in the interior of his dwelling on south Main street found a button which may have a history. He showed it to Mr. McIntosh who for many years was owner of the residence, supposing he might have lost it but it is neither a U. S. nor G. A. R. button but from the insignia on its might have belonged to Indiana State Militia or it shows the arms of the state to wit. sunrise, buffalo in foreground and settler cutting tree. The query is, whose was it and how came it there?

Much for Little.

We cannot refrain from further mention of that most beautiful of all monthly publications, Sarony's Living Pictures. It is so highly meritorious and so fitly calculated to afford to its possessor the greatest amount of entertainment for the smallest outlay, that we are doing our readers a kindness in again calling their attention to it. Compared with its real worth, its cost, 25 cents, is but a trifle.

Heart Disease 30 Yrs!

Short Breath, Palpitation.

Mr. G. W. McKinsey, postmaster of Kokomo, Ind., and a brave ex-soldier, says: "I had been severely troubled with heart disease ever since leaving the army at the close of the late war. I was troubled with palpitation and shortness of breath. I could not sleep on my left side, and had pain around my heart. I became so ill that I was much alarmed, and fortunately my attention was called to

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure

I decided to try it. The first bottle made a decided improvement in my condition, and five bottles have completely cured me."

and all other men who have to look neat while at work, should know about "CELLULOID" COLLARS AND CUFFS. They look exactly like linen, wear well and being waterproof do not wilt down with heat and moisture. They do not soil easily and can be cleaned in a moment by simply wiping off with a wet sponge or cloth. Do not confuse these in your mind with composition goods. Every piece of the genuine is stamped like this:

TRADE CELLULOID MARK.

Ask for these and refuse anything else if you wish satisfaction. Remember that goods so marked are the only waterproof goods made by coating a linen collar with waterproof "Celluloid," thus giving strength and durability. If your dealer should not have the "Celluloid" send amount direct to us and we will mail you sample post-paid. Collars 25c. each. Cuffs, 50c. pair. State size and whether stand-up or turned-down collar is wanted.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

VOLUME XXV. AUBURN, DE KALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY. APRIL 4. 1895. NUMBER 14

SAY : :

HOW MUCH DO YOU OWE?

Who holds your mortgage? How much interest are you paying? Do you owe a building loan association anything? If you do, how much interest are you paying them? Unless you are better posted than the majority of people who have such loans, you cannot tell. You think you are paying 6 per cent. Do you know (of course not) that you are paying at least 12 per cent. If you think not, just figure it out yourself. Now then, are you not paying 6 per cent interest and 6 per cent premium? Certainly. Well now don't you know that premium and interest are the same thing—its all interest. Can you afford to pay 12 per cent interest to a loan association when even your banks only charge 8 per cent and you think they are charging too much, and when do you expect to have your loan canceled or paid off in full? You have been told 72 or 78 months. Now then, we undertake to say that it will take you 100 months, if you will call on us we will show you so you will be satisfied that we are right. Now then, we are prepared to loan you money on monthly installment plan for 8 per cent, we charge you no membership fee and you do not have to make three or more payments in advance so that if on account of insufficient security or bad title your loan is rejected you will not lose one cent. You pay nothing unless your loan is granted. We are making farm loans at from 3 to 5 per cent with privilege of partial payments.

ANOTHER THING!

There is scarcely a day but what there is some traveling agent for some building loan association in Auburn soliciting business, selling stock upon which they charge you a membership fee of from 50 cents to $1.00 per share, which amount goes to the agent and you never get back this money thrown away. If you will call on us we will take your application for all the stock you want in the BEST (we can prove it) building loan association in the state the INDIANA MUTUAL OF INDIANAPOLIS, and charge you No MEMBERSHIP FEE AT ALL. This is certainly fair. If you have any investment stock in any association just write them a letter and ask them the withdrawal value of same, their reply will probably open your eyes. What would you say if you would deposit $8.00 per month in your bank for one year and wanted to withdraw the same and they would offer to pay you only about $80? The bank would only have to do this in one case to be compelled to retire from business. Now you pay ten dollars membership fee and 8 dollars for 12 months making 108 dollars, you lose the 10 dollars membership fee and 10 cents per share each month for expenses, making 12 dollars, or a total of 22 dollars loss upon which you would receive 6 per cent interest for average time on 96 dollars, making 2 dollars and 88 cts from 22 dollars would leave you a loser of 19 dollars and 12 cents. In our association your stock is worth all you have paid in, with its interest added, so that upon withdrawal you do not get less than you paid. We want the people of Auburn to become familiar with this matter, and would like to have any that are interested to call and talk with us, we can give you some pointers.

We are still in the Real Estate, Insurance and R. R. Ticket business.

MARCH!!

IT CAME IN LIKE A LION AND WENT OUT LIKE A LION.

The past month has beaten the record in several ways. It was about the coldest and at the same time the dryest March that the "oldest inhabitant" can remember. Once close to zero, and only Sunday morning there was a half inch of ice on water left out doors. Cisterns all went dry and the streets have been dusty several days. And yet the frost is not all out of the ground. Yet it has been a good month for our many teamsters and those who had to use the road for any purpose. Besides most of the days were fair and some farm work could be done In the west it went out with heavy snow storms. Good by, old March. Let us see what April will bring forth.

MARTHA SHAFFER.

Martha Sheffer was born in Bedford Co., Pa., March 10 1836 and died in Auburn, March 26 1895 at the age of 59 yrs She was married to C. C. Sheffer at Hayesville, Ashland Co., Ohio, in 1854, and to them were born seven children, four of whom servives and were present at the funeral. She was a member of the Baptist church. As a wife and mother her life was a worthy example for she always felt her first duty was to her family. The services were held at the residence March 29, at 2 p. m., Revs. Hart. and Colvin officiating assisted by Rev. Mr. Shirley, of Albion. She was laid to rest in the Woodlawn Cemetery.

NORTH IND. TEACHERS' ASSOCIAT'N.

The Northern Indiada Teachers' Association will meet at South Bend next Thursday, Friday and Saturday, April 4, 5 and 6. The meeting will be in the Presbyterian church, Dr. Johnson's, and bids fair to be one of the best the association has held. A lovely souvenir will be presented to each teacher in attendance as a momento of the occassion. It is a neat little pamphlet with half-tone pictures of the church, all the school buildings, the University of Notre Dame and St. Mary's Academy, portraits of teachers and a fine map of the city, to which is added notes on the business, etc. of the city. It is the work of the Tribune Company and a fine specimen of the printer's art.

Instantly Killed

Frank McClary, of Waterloo, Falls from a Building

AND DISLOCATING HIS NECK.

Thursday's Daily:

A terrible accident happened at Waterloo this morning, resulting in the instant death of Frank McClary a well known citizen of that place. The message came over the telephone to F N. Beidler at Schaab Brothers' store, It appears that McClary and Samuel R. Rickel were putting up a barn on the land owned by G. T. Abby just east of town. In some way not explained, McClary fell from the roof and struck in such a way that his neck was instantly broken. Of course he was dead when they reached him. Mr. McClary had been a citizen there for many years with the exception of a few years spent in the west. He was a carpenter and an industrious and respected citizen.

AUBURN MAN WANTED.

Officers from Ft. Wayne Take Their Choice of Our Citizens.

Thursday's Daily:

Two Ft. Wayne Officers, Deputy Sheriff Harrod and Capt. Borgman came up here yesterday and called on our city Marshal, Alvin Baker and told him they wanted a man who worked at the Kiblinger factory, named Cal. Refner. Mr. Baker went with them and got Refner, and the Ft. Wayne men took him home with them They claim he is a member of a tough set, known as the "Dolin Gang" that has been causing a good deal of trouble by their thieving etc, in and about Churubusco and Wallen. He is a brother-in-law of Wm. Anderson who is under arrest for being with the same gang. It is said that Refner admitted he knew all about the Dolin crowd, but had not helped in any of their various crimes. He has a wife and several children here and is a brother to Emmet Refner. Of course he may or may not be the one sought for as a member of the gang, but just now it looks as if he would have a hard chance to clear himself.

WORLD'S FAIR AS IT IS.

THE EYE OF MAN NEVER SAW SUCH A RUIN, NOR IMAGINATION CONCEIVED IT.

Acres and Miles of Wreck, from Huge Arches of Iron to Crushed Mounds of Brick, Wood and Staff.

Friday the COURIER senior was in Chicago and having completed his business with four hours to spare, took the elevated road at the Congress street terminal, and for a blessed nickel rode the ten miles to its other terminus at the World's Fair ground. Before reaching the grounds, glimpses of the few remaining buildings would every little while flash out upon us, and then small stretches of ruin could be seen between. Coming down the stairway at the last stop, the visitor faces, a mile or two of the most utter devastation, the most abject and complete wreck and ruin, that the most vivid imagination fails to realize till the eye sees it. The entire enclosing fences are gone, and there is no obstruction to the view. The most of the buildings are down and one takes in the whole scene of desolation at a glance. Looming up high in air to front and right, are the immense iron arches of the frame work of Machinery Hall. Everything else is down, but these even in ruins are grandly beautiful. It is a shame to remove them, for they would attract more visitors than the entire park will, when it is refitted and beautified as it eventually will be. We go straight ahead to the east—towards the lake, over piles and piles of rubbish, twisted irons, broken timbers and crushed "staff." (Staff is the peculiar, white plaster that was used to cover all the buildings, and from which all the figures of angels, of lions, horses, elks, buffaloes etc, were made, as well as the ornamental parts of the columns and fountains. In fact, "staff" was the main material after the iron frames were put up. It is a French invention.) The site of the "terminal station" is on our right and the above named big iron arches next east of it So, going eastward, the ruins of the lovely administration building lie on our left, and to the left, or north of that, the electricity building. Both were destroyed by fire, and the huge iron frames are rust red and bent and twisted, and so badly interlocked that one marvels how they will ever be got apart so as to be removed. But workmen and teams are pulling and pounding, with clang and bang, and yells to their mules, on our right, and the magnificient ruins of the Machinery Hall, will in a month or so be a thing of the past. We leave the now empty and torn sites of the great fountains on our left and go along the south side of the "grand basin" still going eastward and reach the bridge that spans the south branch of this basin. Looking south here, we see still the "obelisk" that stood at the end of this south basin, and close to the connecting "Colonnade" that an east and west between the Machinery Hall and the great agricultural building and its annex of agricultural implements extending east to another basin and towards the lake. Over in the water, still further south, lay the old-time "Whaling ship," the old "Progress" that was brought here from the ocean. She looks just as she did two years ago, and the long plank walk still extends from the shore up to her decks. Her days of usefulness are numbered, for whaling is now a "lost art." Gas, kerosene and electricity have crowded out the whale oil lamp. While taking in all these views, we stood leaning over the rail of the bridge, when a friendly voice remarked, "What a terrible ruin! What a scene of desolation!" Turning to the speaker, the similarity of sentiment and situation, made us at once friends, and we spent the rest of the afternoon together. His name is E. S. Hall, and he is a student in our great school at Valparaiso, though his home is Loami, Ill. The rest of this article is our joint observation. Over across the south basins where once lay the "Caravels" of Columbus, still stands the old convent of "Rabida" made famous by being his shelter for some time before he started on his voyage. It is in perfect condition as so fully described at the time of the fair in the WEEKLY COURIER. It will surprise many to learn that the vast area occupied by the agricultural and implement halls stood on piles over the water of the south basin. And now, only the piling stands, and hundreds of their half burned stumps projecting from the water, show how frail the immense structure was.

In the grand basin we see the work of the fire along the west end, and the north side next to the big Manufacturers' building, the boards that covered the border piling being burned to the water's edge. Of course the peristyle next the lake is gone. It was the first that was burned, together with the Music Hall and Casino which it connected. But the "Goddess" still stands out in the water and seems more beautiful than ever. The true loveliness of this work of art is now all the plainer for the wreck and ruin around it, and one never tires of admiring its artistic proportions. About the grand basin, but two of the "rostral columns" so much admired are left. Two of the big cattle, one elk on the bridge we stood on, and a buffalo and two big horses on the north side, are all the statuary left. And one of the poor old oxen has had the "staff" knocked off a part of his tail leaving the rusty iron "core" like a grinning skeleton, to remind one of his departed glory. It took a good deal of the romance out of its beauties. We went around near the lake, going thence north on a newly made boulevard or wide driveway of stone and cement just built across the entrance to the lake and thence north to the end of the park, with a sloping bank made of blocks of granite that goes clear down to the water. This is a permanent improvement. And many similar drives are being made farther north in the grounds with lovely plats for grass and flowers between. The lovely Fisheries building is all gone. The greater part of the Manufacturers' building is removed except a few acres of iron. Parties are taking down the U. S. government building which has less of iron and more of timber than most others. Here we both found some nice specimens of the ornamental staff work that had been broken up, when Hall produced a daily paper which we divided and each proceeded to wrap up a piece to take home as a souvenir. Just then a foreman came up and was going to object to this high handed proceeding, but was mollified when we told him we would not take all there was on the ground, but would leave enough for him. This so tickled him, that fearing he would offer us a few square miles of the stuff, we hurried away. The German building will be preserved and workmen are putting in new front steps. It is made of brick with solid stone walls and has been given the park board. It is still lovely. All future visitors will rejoice that it is saved. All smaller buildings, the English and all other nationalities are gone, and all the state buildings except the "Iowa" on the lake shore, which is a permanent building and never belonged to Iowa. It is the "casino" where refreshments and rest could be had years before the fair, and belongs to the Board. Just north of this still stands the huge iron part of the frame work of the "Mackaye Spectatorium," the unfortunate venture that ruined its stockholders and had much to do with the early death of the unfortunate projector, the artist-actor Steele Mackaye. The big battle ship "Illinois," is beginning to peel off its covering of staff, and the big wooden guns show age. But the bright, rapid fire Hotchkiss real guns are gone. The life saving office is perfect and used by the company that is clearing the ground. It will likely remain. One little "chocolate menier" stand is left just as it was when they quit dealing out that refreshing beverage. We went around north of the great "Fine Art Hall," which is a permanent structure and occupied by an immense museum. State buildings are all gone and we only found the site of the Indiana building by hunting for the branching road. The Women's building, the Transportation, the Horticultural and all the rest cannot be found. On the "wooded island" the the airy little Japanese buildings, the "Ho-o-den" are left and will be kept. But we couldn't find the "Midway" and had to be told where it was. Now, two wide driveways leave the fair ground, one south and one north, and after passing under the bridges of the "Central" roads, curve nearer together, then go parallel, west to Washington Park. They are raised about three feet and the sunken space between them, and the level ground each side, is being made rich enough for flowers and grass and will be lovely.

APRIL 2 GIVES US A GOOD SNOW STORM, SAME LIKE MARCH.

THE DAILY of Monday spoke of March coming in like a lion and going out in the same fashion, for there were heavy snowstorms all over the northwest. But this morning April 2 we had to get out and "shovel snow" or "make tracks" for the "beautiful" lay on the ground nearly four inches deep. It was a valuable snow, however, and everyone was glad to see it, for it came to the relief of the wheat that was being injured by the raw, dry winds of last week. So far it was better than a rain, and for filling our cisterns it was just as good, for it quietly melted off to-day, and now is all gone.

THE CAT'S LONG JOURNEY,

A Minneapolis man, not having the time and money to spare to take a trip around the world, has sent his maltese tabby on the journey. The tag attached to the cat's neck bears a neat inscription setting fourth the character of the cat's errand, commending to the kind consideration of train conductors and steamboat captains along the route. Provided with this unique free pass, pussy traveled to Chicago, and thence Detroit, Buffalo and Boston. There she was comfortably quartered in the bagage room of an express train and reached New York in safety, having been just a week on the road from Minneapolis. She bags lot of additional tags round her neck, placed there by various friends whom she had met on route wishing her all manner of good luck. From New York she sailed on the Cunarder Servia for Liverpool.

Thomas Bros. are having their bakery repapered and the wood work repainted. It makes the room look much better.

FIVE KILLED.

Fearful Boiler Explosion at Woburn, Mass.

One of the boilers in the Conn tannery in Woburn, Mass., exploded with terrific force, killing five men and injuring five others. When the smoke and dust cleared away a scene of wreck and ruin was revealed. Men hurried from all parts of the town and the work of removing those buried under the ruins was commenced immediately. The piteous cries of the injured pinned under the debris urged the rescuers on to rapid work and in a short time the bodies of four men had been removed and five of the injured had been taken out. It was then found that one of the two boilers had been blown to pieces, completely wrecking the boiler house and demolishing several sheds near by. The head of the boiler fell 300 yards from the tannery and the boiler tubes were scattered in every direction.

The falling chimney and smokestack principally wrecked the tannery building itself, and the structure will have to be rebuilt.

The fire department was called out promptly and the work of removing the wreckage and taking out the dead and injured was carried on under the direction of the fire chief. The tannery is a three story brick building and is fully insured. The boilers, which are 150 horse power were inspected only a few days ago and declared to be all right. It is believed that the explosion was caused by the exhaustion of water in the boiler.

A Pan-Handle Accident.

The first section of No. 83, westbound freight train, on the Pan-Handle, in making a stop to take siding for the eastbound limited, about one mile east of Newcomerstown, Ohio, was wrecked by the train breaking in two and running together, wrecking three cars. Four young men of respectable parents, of Booth, Ohio, named Wilson Berkshire, John Wilson, Oscar Hursey and William Mercer, were stealing a ride to Newcomerstown. Berkshire had both legs cut off below the knees. There are little hopes of his recovery. Wilson was cut about the face and injured internally. He may recover. Mercer's right arm was broken in two places. Hursey was slightly injured in the right shoulder. Traffic was blocked for three and a half hours.

The Iron Chancellor.

The people of Germany are indulging in a grand celebration in honor of the birthday anniversary of Bismarck, the father of the empire. The iron chancellor has attained his eightieth year. Fetes are to be continued throughout several days. The rugged old warrior seems to enjoy the distinguished honors paid to him, as well he may. He was certainly the moving spirit in the events which made Germany a powerful nation, and is entitled to the gratitude of his people.

Chicago Inter Ocean.

It is announced that James S. Clarkson of Des Moines, Iowa, ex-Chairman of the Republican National Committee, is soon to take control of the Chicago Inter Ocean. The present publisher of the paper, Wm. Penn Nixon, when seen, refused to confirm or deny the report. A gentleman who is in position to know says that the deal has been closed; that the purchase price approximates $900,000, and that Mr. Clarkson will make the paper the Middle States organ of the silver wing of the Republican party.

Lottery Sharks Barred.

Postmaster Carlisle of St. Louis, has received orders from the postoffice department to not deliver letters to the St. Louis Mutual Bond Investment Company, the Guarantee Investment Company, and the Mutual Benefit Society. Those letters will be stamped "fraudulent," and returned to the writers. The charge against them is that they are engaged in conducting a lottery or similar venture, for the distribution of money through the mails by lot or chance.

Rudder of the Chicora.

A dispatch from Whiting, Ind., says that the rudder of the ill-fated steamer Chicora was found on the beach one mile east of that place. The finding of wreckage strewn along the beach at points between Whiting and St. Joseph substantiate the report that the steamer was seen off St. Joseph the fatat night, and also materially disturbs all theories regarding its location during its last struggles.

How Often, Oh How Often!

A seven-year-old son of David Adams, living three miles from Rome, Ohio, was accidentally shot by an elder brother while the latter was examing an old revolver which was supposed to be unloaded. The ball, which was of a 32-caliber, entered the the abdomen, and the attending physicians have been unable to locate it. The boy is in a critical condition, and his recovery is extremely doubtful.

Civil Service Spreads.

The Civil Service Commission has decided that the employes in the Census Office are within the classified service. The question was a disputed one for some time, but the commission holds that, as the census exists no longer as a bureau but merely as a division of the Interior Department, the 90 clerks now engaged on the force are entitled to the benefits of the civil service law.

Peace in Peru.

Advices received at Buenos Ayres from Lima are to the effect that peace has been restored in Peru.

Old Soldiers to Meet.

The twenty-first annual national soldiers' reunion will be held at Caldwell, O., June 14 and 15. This is the reunion of the same old soldiers with whom Sherman, Howard, Kilpatrick, Garfield and Hayes used to affiliate once a year.

Killed His Wife and Himself.

His mind upset by continued unsuccessful financial ventures, Henry Thorne, owner of a stock farm near Fort Recovery, Ohio, shot and killed his wife and then hanged himself in his barn.

AN ARMISTICE

Is Declared Between China and Japan.

Washington special: The news that an unconditional armistice had been declared by the Emperor of Japan was confirmed at the Japanese legation, where it was stated that a cablegram to this effect had been received from the home government. China made the offer of an armistice and the peace plenipotentiary of Japan was empowered by the Emperior to accept it without condition. This was done in view of the "unexpected event" that happened, viz: the attempted assassination of Li Hung Chang. "The armistice," Minister Kurino of the Japanese legation said, "will be effective until peace negotiations are concluded. After the meeting of the peace ambassadors had been decided on, China requested a declaration of armistice, but this request had not been acted upon favorably by Japan. His government," Minister Kurino said, "had not been inclined to stop warlike operations except on certain conditions. These conditions are not known but it is suggested that probably the occupation of Taku might have been one, Japan wishing something as a guarantee of the willingness and the earnestness of the Chinese for an amicable settlement of the war. China evidently could not arrive at a conclusion to agree to the stipulation demanded by Japan, and the attempt on the life of the Chinese peace ambassador solved the problem for the time being, and hostilities will be suspended. There will be no withdrawal of Japanese troops from Chinese territory however."

LOSS $200,000.

One Hundred Families Rendered Homeless

Fire broke out in the blacksmith shop occupied by John Masters in the old building owned by R. J. Mickler, on Charlotte street, two doors north of Bunting's furniture establishment, St Augustine, Fla., and before it was controlled destroyed a large amount of property.

Forty-six residences and stores and many other buildings were destroyed, rendering in the space of four hours about one hundred families homeless, and leaving many boarders to seek shelter elsewhere, many of them with only the clothing which they had on.

The losses will aggregate $200,000. A. N. Stewart was overcome by smoke while moving furniture; Adam Sanks, Lawyer McWilliams and S. W. Chickelow were all slightly injured.

All the palmetto trees along the sea wall, from the fort to Lana, were destroyed, as were the heaps of household effects placed there for safety.

Col. Edmund Bainbridge, commanding the United States troops, ordered Lieut. Ohern and the fire brigade to render assistance, and followed this order by personally bringing all the troops to the scene with hose, ladders, and fire buckets. The soldiers worked manfully to extinguish the fire and save property.

Many families are camping on the fort green with what of their effects they saved. Several families also occupy the old slave market. There is perfect order. The guests of both the Magnolia, Florida House and Lorillard villa packed their effects ready to leave, but the danger was averted. These hotels were at one time threatened.

CHINESE SMUGGLARS.

Land the Celestials by Means of Forged Certificates.

H. L. Foss, clerk on the Oceanic steamship dock; James Sullivan, ex-deputy county clerk; Max Katzaur, of Oregon; F. D. Ciprice, well known smuggler, and L. Greenwald, of the Emerald smuggling ring, have been arrested in San Francisco, for conspiracy in attempting to land Chinese in the United States by means of forged certificates. The gang were caught redhanded, a number of forged certificates being found upon them. The officials state that this is the biggest gang of counterfeiters in California since the Boyd-Ciprice gang. When discovered the men made a desperate resistance, but were eventually secured.

The counterfeiters were caught in a room which had been a rendezvous, and in which many of their operations took place. The officers had to break in the door, and when they secured admission they found one man tearing up documents, while another was throwing a package out of the window where they were caught by a detective. Photographs for the certificates were also seized, as were seals, rubber stamps, and other paraphernalia used in the counterfeiting. All the members of the gang were placed in the county jail.

THE G. A. R.

Old Heroes Once More in Grand Review.

The Indiana G. A. R. Convention was held at Muncie, and was largely attended. The great parade of the department encampment was a brilliant spectacle. There were fully 10,000 visitors in the city, including the veterans, and the demonstration was a most gratifying success. The decorations, which are most beautiful and elaborate, furnished inspiration to the old soldiers, who proudly marched in serried ranks to the music of martial bands, while thousands of people who lined the streets and crowded the sidewalks, occupying every available foot of space for many squares, cheered the old veterans as they passed along.

A pleasing feature of the parade and one in which a beautiful lesson of patriotism was taught, was presented at the court house square. Massed in the court house yard, the elevation of which gave them a splendid view, were twenty-five hundred school children, each holding in their hands a flag. As the column marched around the square twenty-five hundred flags were waved in the air and as many voices cheered the old soldiers as they passed. It was a beautiful and touching scene, and was enjoyed by the veterans as well as the pupils from the schools.

SPAIN ALARMED.

Ten Thousand Troops to Be Dispatched to Cuba Immediately.

Madrid special: The latest dispatches from Havana have alarmed the government as they indicate that the insurrection is spreading rapidly and is already beyond control of the local commanders. The decision was made therefore to send Martinez De Campos to Cuba with strong reinforcements.

It is reported that 9,700 additional troops will embark with him. He will start probably on April 2. The torpedo gun-boats Filipinas and Matin Alonzo Pinzon, and the cruiser Castilla have received orders to proceed with all possible speed to Cuban waters.

The publication of this news, which completely contradicts the former sanguine dispatches from official source, has caused keen excitement here. It is announced that Prince Rivera has been appointed Captain General of Cuba to succeed Gen. Callejas.

DOSES OF LEAD

Given to Train Bandits While Attempting to Rob a Train.

Nashville (Tenn.) special: A passenger train on the Cincinnati Southern railroad, south bound, was held up by five robbers at Albine, a small station fifteen miles south of Somerset, Ky. One of the robbers held the horses while the other four covered the engineer with guns. The company had received warning of the intended hold up and had detectives on the train. The detectives and trainmen opened fire on the robbers, killing two instantly and mortally wounding a third one, the other two then escaped with their horses. The wounded robber was taken to Oakdale, his life fast ebbing away. He was unconscious. The robbers were not known, but it is supposed they were native mountaineers, green at the business. E. M. Haggard, of this city, was a passenger on the train and says the the excitement among the passengers was intense while the shooting was in progress.

Grant's Tomb.

New York special: Work on Grant's tomb has been resumed, and will be continued until the monument is completed which will be in March, 1896. General Porter said to-day: "There has been a great deal of care bestowed upon the construction of the tomb. The granite is faultless. It is quarried in North Jay, Me., and all the large stones are finished at the quarry and sent to New York in boxes. The smallest imperfection is enough to cause the rejection of a stone. When the stones are laid you could not get the point of a knife between them. They fit exactly, and the contractors, as well as the architect, are inexorable in their demand that the work shall be above criticism."

Terrible Street Car Accident.

A trolley car at Jeansville, Pa., ran away and dashed down the mountain, instantly killing three passengers, fatally injuring two more, while others were badly hurt. The motorman lost control of his car, and the passengers who were killed and injured had leaped to save their lives. Motorman Albert Seitz was in charge. There were nearly a score of passengers in the car. It had not gone far when the passengers noticed that they were whizzed along at fearful speed. In a moment all seemed to realize that they were aboard a runaway car. Moterman Seitz had lost control of it, and away it dashed down the mountain. Then somebody rushed for the rear door. Instantly every other passenger followed. There were shrieks and cries, and the fatal crash then came.

Village Almost Destroyed.

Hornellsville (N. Y.) special: Nearly the entire village of Canaseraga was wiped out by fire. It started near the Cottage hotel, and under a brisk breeze spread rapidly to neighboring buildings. The entire population was called out to fight the flames, but they were uncontrollable. Word was sent to this city at 1:45 a. m., and at 3:30 a special train with two companies and an engine was dispatched. The entire business portion of the village is in ruins. No loss of life is reported, but there were a number injured. Half the population is homeless, and thirty houses are in ruins. The loss is about $100,000.

A Battle Expected.

Havana special: The Government has received official advices to the effect that the rebel chief, General Antonio Maceo, has left Costa Rica on a Ward Line steamship. These advices indicate that he has not yet landed anywhere in Cuba. Troops are being mobilized and different divisions are being dispatched through the East. It is expected that an advance will be made upon the rebels without any delays. News of battle may be expected to follow soon. Eventually, according to the plan of the authorities, 32,000 Spanish troops will be sent against the rebels.

Voorhees Will Fight It.

Senater Voorhees' attention was called to the story in circulation that he has been employed to conduct a legal fight against the Nicholson act which recently became a law in Indiana, and he was asked if there was any truth in the rumor. "I have not been employed to make a legal fight against the Nicholson act," replied Senator Voorhees, "but I expect to fight it before the people of Indiana on principles of freedom, right, and good judgment."

A Vast Holocaust.

The London Times published a second statement of the report on the Armenian atrocities. The report confirms the story of a probably exaggerated massacre of from 4,000 to 5,000 Armenian who had taken refuge in a hallow of an extinct volcano in the Andoke Mountains. After a couple had been killed, the correspondent says, their bodies were heaped together with wood between them. Kerosene was then poured on them and then the bodies burned.

Railroad Wreck.

The south-bond Cleveland, Lorain and Wheeling passenger train crashed into the rear end of a local freight south of Massillon, Ohio. Conductor C. M. Hirst of Loraine, who was standing on the caboose platform, was caught in the wreckage and seriously injured. His arm will have to be amputated and he was hurt internally. The freight had been side-tracked for the passenger to pass, but the switch was left open.

Horrible.

The residence of Phoenis Christensen, a carpenter, was consumed by fire at Minot, N. D. Five children, ranging in age from three to fifteen years, perished in the flames. The five children burned were sleeping upstairs. The mother and father, with four children, escaped. One of the children was badly burned, but will recover. The fire is supposed to have caught from a stove in the kitchen.

A Residence Burned.

The Hon. T. W. Palmer's fine residence on Woodward avenue, Detroit, caught fire from a bad chimney and the south wing was destroyed. The house contained much valuable curios and brie-a-brac gathered from all parts of the world by Mr. Palmer, and works of art. Much of that stored in this part of the residence was saved, and the loss is only $10,000.

Forest Fires.

Forest fires are doing much damage to farms and farm property in Brown County, Indiana, and great excitement prevails. Many citizens have gone to assist such as were in distress. Jesse Harden, who lives two miles south of that town, had his house, together with the entire contents, burned. It was not injurned.

Fell Dead at the Altar.

While a religious revival was in progress at Stone M. E. Church, near Weston, W. Va., Eli Smith, a well-known farmer, "got religion" and while in a frenzy of excitement fell dead in front of the altar. The cause was pronounced to be heart disease.

One Killed, One Saved.

Robert McGee, a miner employed in Harper's mine, near Zanesville, Ohio, was instantly killed by a fall of slate from the roof of the mine. He was working with a man named Church, who stepped back to fill a lamp as the slate fell and escaped.

UNCLE SAM IS FIRM.

NO EUROPEAN ENCROACHMENT ON THIS CONTINENT.

The United States Government Will See that Justice Is Done in Latin-America—Many Republics May Unite to Oppose Europe.

Russia Our Ally.

Washington correspondence:

Of the numerous foreign complications in which the United States finds herself embroiled those with Great Britain over Nicaragua and Venezuela are by far the most serious. Few think that at present there is any danger of a war between us and Great Britain, but there are not wanting statesmen of considerable knowledge and acumen who predict that in a few years war will come. The present attitude of Great Britain in bullying the independent republics of South and Central America must be checked soon or else the all-grabbing European monarchy will be making Asia or Africa out of this continent.

This government will go to war before permitting Great Britain to occupy any portion of Nicaragua, thereby curtailing the autonomous powers of the republic. If England is allowed now to encroach upon any independent Latin-American nation, a precedent will have been established for future encroachments elsewhere and the force of the Monroe doctrine, which has been the safeguard of Latin-America for more than seventy years, will be undermined.

In this connection it may be noted that the rebel admiral, Da Gama, was supported by the combined monarchies of Europe in his attempt to overthrow the Brazilian republic and it is with just pride that we can point the fact that it was the shot fired by Admiral Benham in Rio Janeiro harbor that broke the back of the rebellion and served notice on European monarchies that they must keep their hands off this continent. In gratitude for that act the Fourth of July, our national holiday, has been declared a national holiday by Brazil and a monument to President Monroe, the author of the doctrine that bears his name, is now being erected in the Brazilian capital.

Yet not all of Europe's monarchies are hostile to our republican institutions and to-day, just as during our civil war, we have a steadfast friend in the great Russian empire. It is now known that a couple of weeks ago France and Germany, under the influence of England, were going to join in a debt-collecting expedition to South America. Guatemala, Nicaragua and Venezuela have defaulted in the payment of interest on bonds to German, French and English creditors. England sought to form a combination of the creditors to compel the debtors to pay. The plan was to make a demonstration of force, and place agents of the creditors in control of the revenues of the debtor countries until such time as the obligations were satisfied. This was the policy that England adopted in Egypt. The result is practical British absorption of that ancient country, as the sovereignty of the Sultan or Khedive is now scarcely a formality. Our ambassador to Paris was instructed to remonstrate with France that such an act on her part would be considered unfriendly to the United States. France felt disposed to yield to our remonstrance; but soon a stronger pressure was brought to bear. Our ambassador at the court of St. Petersburg urged the government of the Czar to use its influence with France to abstain. Russia, ever the friend and ally of the United States, promptly informed France that any action by that country unfriendly to the United States would be deemed an unfriendly act to Russia. As an alliance with Russia is the hope and ambition of French statesmen, the French government promptly took the cue and served notice on Great Britain that she would not join in the debt-collecting expedition.

In the Venezuelan boundary dispute with Great Britain and in which the United States has a deep interest, there are no new developments, save a disposition of Great Britain under certain conditions to submit the difficulty to arbitration. A continuation of American firmness in this matter will force Great Britain to consent to arbitration without any conditions—an act of justice which England has been refusing for over half a century.

These later instances of European intervention in American affairs have already caused a powerful sentiment in Central and South America for a Latin-American union, and many prominent statesmen in Latin-America are anxious that the United States enter the union and thus make it a continental league. Such a union would more than anything else, except a good thrashing, teach Great Britain to confine her traditional policy as bully, blood-spiller and land-grabber to Asia or Africa.

Meantime another complication has arisen in the east between France and the United States, due to the action of France in having tried an American citizen and an ex-consul to Tamatave, Madagascar, by court martial and sentencing him to twenty years' imprisonment on the ground that he was in correspondence with the Hovas, the ruling class in Madagascar, with whom France is at war. No official correspondence from Madagascar has yet reached the State Department and no action will be taken until the government is in possession of all the facts in the case. Should France be in the wrong, as now seems likely, a protest will be made in the matter. At present a United States gunboat is on her way to Madagascar.

In the Allianca affair no official reply has yet been received from the Spanish Government and ample time will be accorded that country, owing to her unsettled political conditions, before this government will press for action. Should an apology be delayed unnecessarily long, however, a further demand for reparation will be made.

FARMERS WANT RAIN.

An Alarming Drouth in All Northwestern States—No Relief in Sight.

Were it not for the snow, a residue of which has lingered where it was accumulated by the plentiful storms of winter, severe drought would now be confronting our Western husbandmen at the very outset of the season of agricultural activity. Since the snowfall of February there has been no precipitation of moisture in the entire region from the eastern slope of the Mississippi Valley to the base of the Rocky Mountains. The melting of the snow, which the foresight of winter provided in such abundance, has supplied a gradual source of moisture to the earth, which has made possible the development of early spring vegetation.

Now the snow is gone, except in some sections of the Northwest, and still the longed-for rain does not appear. Many communities in Illinois are lamenting and predicting disaster unless relief comes in the shape of rain. Cisterns and wells are dried up, and streams usually overflowing with the spring floods, run within their banks far below the usual level. The unsoftened ground offers no prospect of the speedy sprouting of the seeds on whose development depends the yield of the autumn crops. The situation among the tillers of the soil in Illinois and adjacent States is not particularly alarming, but is sufficient to cause apprehensions if the dry spell is prolonged. In small urban centers, where the water supply is derived from neighboring natural reservoirs, the danger of uncontrollable fires is not only menacing, but in some cases has actually been experienced.

A Chicago correspondent says: The comparatively great heat of the past few days, although probably only temporary, tends to intensify the anxiety of farmers and others who have an interest in the water supply. Thursday was a very warm day, uncomfortably so in some places for the time of year. In Chicago the air was mild and inviting, the temperature reaching a maximum point of 73 degrees, and standing at 64 degrees at the hour of the evening observation, both figures about 35 degrees above the normal for the third decade of the month of March. Springfield just touched fourscore, St. Louis reached 82, Kansas City came two ahead with 84, and in Dodge City and Wichita, Kas., the inhabitants fanned themselves and kept off the flies, with the mercury at 88 and 90 degrees respectively. Throughout the central region as far south as the southern line of Kansas the temperature ranged from 20 to 35 degrees above the normal.

SOME CROP FIGURES.

Report of the Statistician for the Department of Agriculture.

According to a report of the Statistician for the Department of Agriculture the corn crop of 1894 was the smallest reported in twenty years, and not since 1874 has the aggregate yield been so meager. From an area of 76,000,000 acres planted only 62,500,000 acres were harvested, the remainder having been cut for fodder or abandoned in consequence of drought and devastating winds. March 1, 1895, the merchantable corn crop of Illinois on hand aggregated 152,209,800 bushels, valued at $54,795,528, while the unmerchantable footed up 16,912,200 bushels, with a valuation of $4,397,172. Notwithstanding the short crop farmers have not marketed their corn freely, believing it will command a higher price during the summer. Since Jan. 1 the weather has been severe, and stock required more feed than during the corresponding months of the three previous years.

Wheat in farmers' hands at the same time was estimated at 75,000,000 bushels, or 39,000,000 bushels less than last year at the same time. This exhaustion of farm reserve is found in a large measure to be due to the fact that great quantities have been fed to hogs and other stock. Returns from North and South Dakota indicate unprecedented exhaustion of last year's crop, correspondents in many counties reporting not enough on hand for spring seed and necessary food supply. From Nebraska comes a demand from 30,000 families for an average of 1.31 bushels a family for seeding purposes this spring. March 1, 1895, the stock on hand in Illinois aggregated 5,663,040 bushels. In nearly every county throughout Central and Southern Illinois some wheat has been feed to stock, yet the results were not sufficiently satisfactory to make it a general practice even among those who had wheat. The greater portion, if not all, of what is now on hand will be consumed within the State.

During 1894 the total production of wheat in North America was 515,488,000 bushels, an increase of 69,000,000 bushels over that of 1893. South America produced 104,000,000 bushels in the same year, the increasing product being due to the large extension of the wheat area in Argentina and Uruguay. Europe produced nearly 70,000,000 bushels more wheat in 1894 than it did the preceding year. Asia showed a decrease of 13,000,000 bushels, and in Africa and Australia the crop of 1894 was the largest in four years. For the last four years the world's crop of wheat has been as follows: 1894, estimated at 2,590,000,000 bushels against 2,427,000,000 in 1893, 2,414,000,000 in 1892, and 2,370,000,000 in 1891.

INSULTED THE KAISER.

The Reichstag's Action in Refusing to Honor Bismarck's Birthday.

The action of the majority in the German Reichstag in refusing to concur with the government in sending congratulations to Bismarck on the occasion of his 80th birthday, created a commotion in the fatherland that has not been equaled in many years. Inasmuch as the Emperor, together with the governments of the different States, united in honoring Bismarck, the action of the Reichstag, beside being unpopular, is a direct slap in the face to the Kaiser and to those who with him celebrated the birthday anniversary of the aged statesman of Friedrichsruhe. Whatever may have been the political animosities that Bismarck's attitude on public questions evoked in the past, it surely should not have been difficult to forget them in the presence of the day that eighty years ago witnessed the birth of one of the most commanding figures in modern history and the unifier of the German nation. In view of the Reichstag's adverse vote, the president of that body, Herr von Levetzow, immediately resigned and the Emperor telegraphed to Bismarck his regrets over the unpatriotic action of the popular chamber.

The Comic Side of The News

Li Hung Chang is certainly entitled to a life membership in the Hard Luck Club.

Gold has disappeared mysteriously from the United States mint at Carson, Nev. Come, John Bull, we'll have to draw the line somewhere.

WIPED OUT BY FIRES.

FLAMES CAUSE OVER $1,000,000 DAMAGE.

Milwaukee's West Side Business District Scourged—Half a Dozen Mercantile Firms and the Plankinton Estate Losers—Loss in Chicago.

The Cream City Ablaze.

Lower Grand avenue, the heart of the west side, of Milwaukee, was the scene early Wednesday morning of one of the most serious conflagrations in the history of the city. The fire is the most disastrous since the Third Ward conflagration of Oct. 28, 1892, and the pecuniary loss will exceed $1,000,000. It furnished a magnificent spectacle for the thousands that filled the avenue and watched it from surrounding buildings. There were, however, luckily, no fatalities.

The buildings owned by the Plankinton estate were the large brick structure covering half a block, occupied by Landaur & Co., wholesale dry goods dealers, and the Tanner Company, furniture, adjoining Landaur & Co. to the east, the building in the rear of Landaur & Co., occupied by the Reliance Storage Company, and the library building at the northwest corner of 4th street and Grand avenue. The estate will suffer a loss of about $250,000 on the buildings occupied by Landaur & Co., Tanner & Co., and the Reliance Storage Co., which were practically new. They were totally destroyed. The insurance on them is estimated at 80 per cent., which would make the loss the insurance companies are to bear approximately $200,000 on that structure alone

Max Landaur, of Landaur & Co., said the stock carried at present by his firm was valued at $400,000, and he usually carried about 80 per cent. insurance, which would make the actual loss of the firm $320,000.

The Tanner Company's loss was said to be about $100,000, though no member of the company could be found to give any accurate estimate. It was thought the furniture stock was insured for about 75 per cent. of the value.

Big Clothiers Burned Out.

The Davidson estate was the owner of the building at 313 and 315 Grand avenue, located between part of the Plankinton building that was occupied by the Tanner Company and the Mathews building, in which the retail house of Morgan & Co. is located. The only occupants of the store-rooms in this building were Barling & Wambold, retail clothiers, but there were a few offices in the upper part of the two stories. The structure was one of frame, with a veneer of brick, so the fire underwriters say, and was worth $20,000 at the outside. The insurance was said to foot up to about $15,000.

Barling & Wambold had just received a large consignment of spring goods, and the entire stock as well as the building was lost. With the new goods the stock was worth $90,000 or more, so one connected with the firm in a responsible capacity said. The insurance was about $70,000. Roebel & Reinhart, art goods and picture frames, were partially burned out and the stock wholly ruined by heat and water; insurance, $60,000. Young Men's Christian Association Building on 4th street was burned; loss, $75,000. There are many minor losses, including small stores and flats.

THE BELL IN FLAMES.

Big Clothing House in Chicago Suffers Its Second Fire.

Fire which imperiled many lives and caused a loss of $176,000 broke out in the basement of the Bell clothing store, State and Quincy streets, Chicago, at 2:30 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. The Bell building's contents were nearly all destroyed. Total insurance is $106,000. The fire started near the furnace and shot up the rear stairways with great rapidity, spreading to each of the five floors. A panic ensued among the 100 employes. Many on the upper floors rushed to the windows and screamed for help. Charles H. Smith, a salesman on the second floor, climbed out of a window on the State street side, and in trying to catch hold of a projection to support himself lost his balance and fell to the sidewalk, badly crushing both feet. Richard Burns, a 17-year-old elevator boy, displayed great presence of mind. When the alarm was given he ran his elevator to the fourth floor and led Miss Martell, one of the bookkeepers, to the car and brought her safely to the ground, where she fainted. Miss Jennie Levy, the cashier on the first floor, had her desk on a sort of platform from which a stair led to the second floor. She ran up the stair and through Manager Curtin's office, crying "The store is on fire," and reached the elevator in time to catch it on its last trip down. Then the traps in the shaft, operated by electricity, fell, and the elevator could be run no longer.

A confidential employe of the Bell Clothing Company said the value of the stock in the building was $200,000, and from what he could learn the damage was in the neighborhood of $150,000. He could give no accurate figures concerning insurance, but said he thought the concern carried $75,000 to $90,000. The shoe stock, he said, was not more than half covered.

Jacob H. Cohn, the head of the firm, left for New York Monday afternoon to finish buying the spring stock. He was informed by teegraph of the fire and returned to Chicago at once. A serious fire occurred in the same building Aug. 28 last. The loss on the stock at that fire was $93,000. The loss on the building was $5,000.

Why Some Women Do Not Marry.

One such woman was used to attack a new science or language every year, and, failing, from her lack of teacher or companion, would pile the textbooks in heaps until walls of dusty volumes shut in every room of the house. She fell at last into a state of semi-idiocy, and wandered like a ghost around the village, jabbering scraps of foreign tongues which she did not understand.

It is a hereditary habit in certain families for the women who have a grief to shut themselves into a single room, and remain there for ten, twenty, thirty years. Nor are the morbid fancies of these women always gloomy and sad. They live sometimes in an enchanted land of their own.

One whom I know, a woman of sensuous temperament and motherly instincts, refused to marry a man whom she loved because he had gone to live in another town, and she would be forced to leave the old house and half-acre which were the center of the world to her. The courtship went on for forty years, but she was true to the house!

Another drove her lover away on the day of the wedding because she could not bring herself to change the name of Wonson for any other. He was rich and she was poor; he remained faithful and ready as long as she lived. She died at 70, a maiden Wonson still. Could pride of blood go further?—Century.

Never, never will little Henry's father forget that day—a lovely April day, half storm, half sunshine, toward evening wholly sunshine. And that mad bird, that loud-voiced mavis, singing incessantly in the sycamore tree—he covered his ears to deaden the sound. All the sound he cared to hear—and his very soul seemed concentrated in listening—was the moving of feet in that room up stairs, where the terrible battle for life was going on, and during which he seemed himself to be dying a hundred deaths.

He did nothing, absolutely nothing, hour after hour; what was there for him to do? Once, catching sight of the pile of letters—those happy letters, which nobody had thought of posting—he rose mechanically, in order to put them away somewhere, and in looking about found his wife's work-basket, just as she had left it, the needle still sticking into the unfinished fr[illegible]. Would it ever be finished? With a gas[illegible] and a wild stare round, as if to call to her—to appeal to her—she, who had never before forsaken him thus, been missing when he wanted her, or silent when he called—he seized and kissed it. Then he put everything in its place again, including her garden shawl, which he folded up with his helpless hands as tenderly as if it had been a living thing, and sat down again in the same chair, with his head dropped on his hands.

Presently he had to arouse himself, and speak a few common-place words to Sir John, who came to fetch Lady Symington home to dinner; people must dine, and the dear old lady looked exhausted. She went up to Roderick and kissed him—bade him hope still—while there was life there was hope; but nevertheless urged upon him that last solemn prayer, which often seems to bring back the very blessing it resigns—"Thy will be done."

"I can't say it—I can't!" he answered—the young man to whom anguish—such anguish as this—was utterly unknown. But after she had left, promising to come again before midnight, he fell down on his knees, and in an agony such as he had not believed any man could pass through and live, he said it.

After that he seemed to grow quieter, and ready to accept everything.

By and by the Doctor came down to him for a minute, with an anxious face but a cheery voice.

"Take heart, my dear fellow. As I said, while there's life there's hope. Do not go near her. By and by I'll fetch you, should there come a change."

"A change? For the better?"

"Yes. Or what they call a lightening before death."

Death and her! The two ideas seemed impossible—irreconcilable. Shuddering, Roderick turned away from the old man, who did not mean to be cruel, who even put his hand kindly on the young fellow's shoulder and again bade him "keep up," that all was being done that could be done; that he had seen many a worse case; and so on, and so on. But Roderick heard it all as one in a dream, and directly afterward, hearing the sound of a carriage, and believing it was only Black—who always meant well, but the sight of whom would almost madden him just then, he bolted out of the long window, and went and hid himself in the darkest depths of the glen.

When he ventured back into the house the fire had died out—only a solitary candle was left burning on the table. He stole upstairs and listened at his wife's door. All was quiet. There was not even the sound of the doctor's quick, resolute voice; he must have gone away.

Then all hope died out of Roderick's heart. Groping his way back to the parlor, he sat down in his old seat, waiting in a sort of stupefaction for the final blow, and repeating to himself over and over again a line which seemed persistently to "beat time to nothing" in his overstrained brain—Othello's piteous moan.

"My wife! What wife? I have no wife!" Perhaps even now he, too, had no wife. All the sweet days were over, her brief happiness was ended, her young life done. And he?

Such a loss is a common story. Many a young man had lived though it—living long after it—perhaps won another wife, and had many other children, and been very happy, apparently; but I question if he was ever quite the man he was before, and I think he would hardly be a true man if some little bit of his heart was not forever buried in his dead wife's grave.

The candle burned itself out, and the moonlight, creeping in between the undrawn curtain, was beginning to fill the room with a pale, ghostly light, when Roderick heard the door open, and some one enter very gently and hesitatingly.

"Well?" he said, not lifting his head, not doubting it was the summons of doom.

No answer; but the intruder came close to him—touched him.

"Who's that?" he said, almost fiercely; "who's that?"

"It's me, Rody; it's your mother."

"Oh, mother, mother!"

For one moment her arms were round his neck and his head on her shoulder. Then he thrust her violently away.

"I don't want my mother; I want my wife. What of my wife? Is she alive?"

"Yes. And she will live. And I thought I'd be the first to come and tell you. Do you hear, Rody? She's safe—quite safe. Both doctors say so. Thank God! thank God! Oh, Rody, my son, my son!"

Once more she opened to him those fond mother-arms which no man can resist—no man ought to resist—and let him sob his heart out there, patting him, kissing him, treating him almost as if he had been a little child, and sobbing herself the while with undisguised, uncontrollable emotion.

"How did you come, mother? Since when have you been here?"

"Ever so long, my dear."

"I was never old."

"No; I went straight up to her. It did not matter; she knew nobody. The doctor is a friend of mine; he let me be with her. He knew I understood. I nearly died myself when you were born. Oh, Rody, what you must have suffered this day! Let me look at you, my boy—my dearest boy!"

It was a sorrowful gaze for both mother and son. Gradually Roderick's manner hardened, and he loosed himself from her clinging hands.

"Never mind me; it is my wife we must think about. I beg your pardon, mother, but I must go and see her—my wife whom you hate, whom you were so cruel to. But I love her. She is more to me than anything or anybody in this world. I don't know why you come here. I never asked you to come. Still, I thank you for coming. But there is not the least occasion for you to stay."

He rose up, with his cold, proud manner, so like his father's. His mother, half frightened, as if she thought he hardly knew what he was about—perhaps he did not, poor fellow!—stood before him silently wringing her hands.

"I repeat there is no need for you to trouble yourself about us in any way. If my wife lives, and you say she will live, she and I are quite sufficient to one another. Will you sit down? Can I get you anything? Or shall I order a carriage, that you may go home at once?"

"Oh, Rody, Rody! Me—your mother!"

She burst into tears, such tears as it is terrible to see an old woman shed.

And Mrs. Jardine was an old woman now. The struggle between her heart—and it was a good honest heart, after all—and her fierce indomitable will had told upon her severely. Could her son have seen her face he might have traced there the wrinkles of many added years. As it was, he felt that the hand which grasped him shook as with palsy.

"Rody, I wish you to say one word."

Could a son expect his mother to beg his pardon? Would he not have been an unworthy son to have let her do any such thing? Was it not far better for him, under any circumstances—to have done just what he did?

He dropped on his knees beside her, and laid his head in her lap, exactly as when he was her little boy.

"Mother, mother, forgive me! Let us forgive one another."

"Oh, yes, yes! Come back to me, my son, my only son!"

There was no other apology or explanation than this, neither now or at any future time between them. Both avoided it, and so best. It is always safer not to touch a half-healed wound. Besides, we are none of us perfect, God knows; and some of us see our faults all the plainer when no one points them out, but they are left entirely between ourselves and Him.

"And now," said Roderick, anxiously, "tell me about my wife."

"Poor lamb! poor lamb! I have been with her these two hours. She thought it was her own mother, for she spoke a few words in French and called me 'mamma.' Tell her, Rody, that——"

Mrs. Jardine turned away, and again burst into honest, irrepressible tears.

"But still, mother, how did you come? How did you hear?"

She could not speak, but she put into his hand a little note, dated two days before, written in pencil, and in a hand very feeble, very shaky, but neat and clear.

"Dear Mr. Black: If you should hear I am likely to die, will you go at once to Richerden and fetch Mrs. Jardine? You know her. No one will comfort my husband like his mother. Yours truly,

"SILENCE JARDINE."

"And now," said Mrs. Jardine, smiling through her tears, the brightest, sweetest smile, Roderick thought, that he had ever seen on her face, "go to your wife, and let me go to my grandson. My son will not now want his mother to comfort him, thank the Lord!"

CONCLUSION.

A warm, honest heart and a generous nature will cover a multitude of sins—or let us say errors—especially in a grandmamma. Over that baby's cradle the hearts of the two women, young Mrs. Jardine and old Mrs. Jardine, soon came to meet in the most wonderful way; as they met, too, over another thing, or rather person—often an endless "bone of contention" between mother-in-law and daughter-in-law when they happen to be weak, selfish or jealous women, which these were not—the man whom each loved best of all the world.

Roderick's wife and mother, however opposite their characters, had certain points in common, out of which grew an unmistakable sympathy, namely, strength of will and thoroughness of purpose, great sincerity and affectionateness, the power of self-devotion and an entire absence of that petty egotism which is always on the watch to guard its own rights, and has no vision for anybody's rights except its own. Besides, meeting her son afresh, as it were, with that great gulf of sorrow between, which had sorely changed both him and her, and finding him now a man—a husband and a father—in many ways very different from the "boy" she had been accustomed to think him, Mrs. Jardine had the sense to accept the position and make the best of it.

For her son's wife—the "poor lamb," as she had called her, and whom, as Roderick afterward found out, her good sense, firmness and devoted care, coming in at the last ebb of hope, had greatly contributed to save from death—Mrs. Jardine took to loving her, as strong natures are prone to love those whom they have saved and who depend upon them, as for many days Silence had to depend upon her practical mother-in-law, in that total, sweet helplessness which was the very best thing to win the old woman's heart.

She was an old woman now—no doubt about it—and years ripen and sweeten many women to an almost incredible degree. Besides, as Silence often whispered to her husband when little things jarred upon him and irritated him, she was his mother, and she loved him, in her own odd way, perhaps, but with a love of which there could be no doubt and no denial. Still, even love can work no miracles, nor blend together opposing natures, characters and lives into sudden and everlasting harmony; and when, having nursed her "child," as she called Silence, into comparative health, and given her grandchild his grandfather's name, Mrs. Jardine proposed to go home, earnestly begging her son to leave Blackhall and come and settle in Richerden, Roderick gently but steadily declined. He did not say no, even to his own wife, but he felt it would be far better that they two should continue to live at Blackhall and his mother and sisters at Richerden.

All, and especially Bella, were quite "well and happy," Mrs. Jardine said. How much she knew of the events of last Christmas, or the differences between Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Thomson, did not transpire. At all events, she never talked about these troubles; it was not "respectable."

But despite their diverse way of viewing things, there was a straightforwardness and right-heartedness about Roderick's mother which, when her son saw it through fresh, clear eyes, and especially through his wife's eyes, sufficed to blind him wholesomely to her faults. No fear of any more "difficulties" to the end of their days. And when, the last Sunday she was with him, he went, a little against his will, but just to please her, to the ugly Presbyterian Church six miles off, and, sitting between his wife and his mother, listened to the singing, rather nasal and drawling, but not unsweet, of the 23d Psalm,

"My table Thou hast furnished
In presence of my foes;
My head with oil Thou dost anoint,
And my cup overflows," his heart melted, for he felt his cup did indeed "overflow"

His "table," too, was likely to be "furnished"—better than he had once had any hope of. When his mother spoke of business matters, and insisted on his giving up his work at the mill, and living as a "gentleman," he had refused point-blank, declaring his determination to carve out his own fortune, and make his own independent way in the world. But when, on the day of baby's christening, he found that Mrs. Jardine, who never did things by halves, and was as generous in her loves as ungenerous in her dislikes, had settled upon baby's mother—not father—a sum of several thousand pounds, sufficient to remove all fear of the future from the parents' hearts, Roderick was deeply moved.

"She is a good woman—my mother! My father was right to respect her and love her, as he did to the very last. God bless them! I have need to be proud of both my parents."

"Yes," said Silence, gently, as she stooped and kissed her son, who lay fast asleep on her lap. But her own life taught her to understand other lives; what were, and what they might have been.

And her life is all before her still, for she is yet comparatively a young woman, though her boys—and she has not one, but several—begin to measure heights with her, and to reckon how soon they will be "up to mother's shoulder." "Father" is a standard which none of them hope to arrive at, either physically, mentally, or morally. To be so tall, so clever, or so good as he—none of these lads could ever imagine such a thing. They do not merely love him, they adore him. And they are right, or at least two people, their mother and their grandmother, believe so.

Roderick Jardine lives still at Blackhall, keeping up the old family home in comfort, but yet in great simplicity, as is wisest, with his increasing family. Besides, his early experiences have given him a horror of luxury, of that wealth which is mere wealth and nothing more. The Jardines of Blackhall hold themselves to be truly "rich" people, because they always have a little more than they spend; they use their money without abusing it, and therefore enjoy it to the uttermost, and cause others besides themselves to enjoy it, too. But their sons are all brought up to abhor extravagance, waste, or self-indulgence, aware that each will have to make his own way in the world, as is best for every man, and woman, too, perhaps. Sometimes Roderick says if he had many girls he would bring them up, like the boys, to earn their own living—as their mother once did—so that they might taste the sweetness of independent bread, and never be tempted for aught but love. But he has only one girl, his little "Tacita"—her right name is Silence, but he will not have her called so—one of "papa's odd ways," as he grows older.

He may never be, strictly speaking, a "great" man, but everybody recognizes him as a cultivated man of very considerable talent—"known in the gates," as his wife delightedly sees, every year more and more. But it is more by his pen than his personality, for he seldom goes from home, except once a year to Richerden to see his mother and the family. A not too attractive family, but he is very kind to them, even to Mrs. Alexander Thomson and her numerous brood of sickly, ill-tempered children, whom she brings with her sometimes to get a breath of wholesome life, within and without, in the happy atmosphere of Blackhall.

"Young Mrs. Jardine," as she continues to be called, for old Mrs. Jardine may live to be ninety, still looks so young, so fair! her peaceful, contented heart shining through her "heavenly" eyes. The world has never heard of her, never will hear, except through her husband and her sons. She does not "shine in society," though she is well able to keep up the dignity of the family wherever she goes. But of her own dignity, her own praise, she thinks very little, having, indeed, far too many other and more important things to think about. As wife, as mother, as mistress, her burdens are often pretty heavy, but never more than she can bear. And he helps her, as she helps him—the husband of her youth, who will, please God, be the faithfullest, fondest lover of her old age.

That time is still a good way off, and they may yet have much to bear together. They will bear it, because it is borne together. And I think, if any one were to ask Roderick Jardine what has been—in plain English—the backbone of his life, his preservation from evil, his incentive to all good, he would say it was that strong first love and venturous early marriage; because he had sense to see and to take hold of the blessing that heaven dropped in his path—that treasure "above rubies" which most men desire, and so few win, or deserve to win. But Roderick did. He says sometimes that he should like to have carved on his tombstone, as the root of all his happiness, all his success, that line written by one great and good man of another—perhaps the noblest man of this century,

"Who loved one woman, and who clave to her."

"But," he adds, "it was because my wife was Silence Jardine."

(The End.)

Democratic Cluseret.

Cluseret, who afterward became the notorious leader of the Paris Commune, was an honored officer of the Union army during the civil war, and at one time held a commission as Colonel on General McClellan's staff, and was consequently the superior officer of the late Count of Paris, who was then serving on McClellan's staff, together with his brother, the Duc de Chartres, accompanied by their uncle, the Prince de Joinville. Cluseret, though circumstances brought him much in company with the young princes, never called them "monseigneur" or "my lord," but plain "monsieur" or "mister." This proved offensive to the young Duc de Chartres, who one day took up the cudgels in what he regarded as his brother's defense. "Colonel Cluseret," he asked, "why do you not call my brother 'my lord?'" "Well, for one reason," answered Cluseret, "because he isn't my lord." "But you call him 'monsieur,' and you know that really 'monsieur' and 'monseigneur' are the same word." "Oh, very well, then," said Cluseret; "perhaps you will call me 'monseigneur?' It won't offend me at all, and since they're the same, I will call you monsieur.'"

Time Spent with the Barber.

"Speaking of barbers," remarked the club kicker, although, to tell the truth, nobody had mentioned barbers, "I have just finished a fifty minutes' siege in one of those infernal tonsorial establishments. Fifty minutes! Just think of it. What a lot of things a man might do during the time he spends waiting his turn in a barber shop before he even has a chance to get shaved. I'll wager that on an average it takes 20 minutes of my time every day. Some days it's probably less, and some days a good bit more. But we'll say twenty minutes, anyhow. Now, I get shaved every day. There are 365 days in the year, and 20 minutes every day would make—let me see—that would make 7,300 minutes in a year. Sixty minutes to an hour would be a little over 121 hours, and 24 hours in a day would make—Great Scott! if anybody had told me I spent over five days every year in a barber shop I would have called him a fool."—Philadelphia Record.

WHERE THE COTTON AND THE SWEET POTATOES GROW.

Scenes Among the Slaves of the Southern Plantations—Life Had Its Bright Side for the Care-Free Negro—Odd Characters Developed.

Befo' De Wa'.

SLAVERY in America is so completely a thing of the past that it is not an easy matter for the younger people of the present day to imagine the state of things that prevailed in our Southern States "before the war." The subject is beclouded by the writings of a certain class of story-tellers and would-be chroniclers of our annals, who take the bold ground that all masters were heartless; that the slaves on a plantation wore chains; and that the whipping post and branding irons were to be found in every neighborhood. There were, no doubt, heartless masters and cruel overseers; there were, no doubt, chains and whipping posts; but it is probably not true that these were so common as many persons suppose, for as a general thing the slaves were treated with some degree of consideration, and in not a few cases the kindest possible relations existed between them and their owners. On the large plantations, particularly in the cotton and rice districts, where hundreds, and, in some cases, thousands of slaves were owned by the same man, much less regard was had for them than when they were employed as house servants. In the former case, the slaves saw little of their master or the members of his family; the overseer represented the master's authority, and often abused the master's power; and, deprived of all intercourse with their superiors, these classes of plantation slaves by no means equaled in intelligence those who served in the households.

Comrades in Boyhood Days.

Few persons have any idea of the pleasantness of the relations existing in many households in the South at that period. For boys, both white and black, there was almost equality. Childhood is democratic, and so far as the sports of the country were concerned they were followed alike by the young slaves and the sons of the master. To each of the latter a negro boy was generally assigned, who was understood to be his, and between the two there was commonly an ardent friendship, with on one side a conceded superiority, and on the other a gracious condescension. The little whites and the little darkies played together, hunted together, together went in swimming and took fever and ague, and together received their thrashings for robbing orchards and melon patches. There are many known instances of friendship thus contracted in boyhood which lasted during life, and not a few cases are recorded of singular fidelity and devotion on the part of the slaves toward their masters

BRINGING IN THE DINNER.

when the war cloud darkened their land. Among the girls it was different, for they were not permitted to share to the same extent in the amusements of the slave children, but even the daughters of the planters generally entertained a warm affection for the old black "mammy" who cared for them during infancy and early childhood, and who commonly felt for them as much affection as she entertained for her own offspring.

Good Old "Mammy."

The "mammy" was a peculiar character, who was as much trusted as a nurse possibly could be. She was always a house servant, and in her girlhood had been given to her young mistress, of about the same age, as a maid. When the mistress married and left the old home she took he. servant with her, and when her children were born the greater part of their care and attention was turned over to the maid. The two grew old together, and when grandchildren came the old mammy took care of them, too, as she had done of the children, and when she herself was too old to work she was cared for by the family, for everyone "thought the world and all" of old mammy.

The next highest degree of respect was felt for the old driver. He, too, was a character, for he had been in the family as long as mammy, and, like the latter, had made himself equally useful and highly esteemed. He was intrusted with the care of the family carriage. He generally had an assistant, the young driver, who, under his superintdence, did most of the work and looked forward to the time when the old man should give up the post of honor and resign the reins into his willing hands. In his province he was absolute. He drove as he pleased, and no word of remonstrance could make him hasten the pace of his horses unless he saw fit to do so. Furthermore, at the foot of every hill everybody had to get out and walk up in order to spare the horses, and many a long, tiresome walk was taken at his command by the members of the family, for the old driver, very often known as "Daddy," but more frequently as "Uncle," was admitted to know what was best in the matter of driving, and his authority was, half laughingly, half respectfully, acknowledged. On the large plantations the word "driver" had a different significance, for there the name was applied to a colored functionary of no little importance who was next in authority to the overseer.

Serving Dinner.

The numerousness of the small colored fry about the home of a wealthy planter gave rise to many scenes that to the eyes of one not accumtomed to witness them were extremely curious. The little darkies were early trained to make themselves useful by waiting on the table, and at a dining every guest had one, arrayed in a white apron that reached to his heels, stationed behind the chair, to attend to every want. Bringing in the dinner on such occasions was a sight never to be forgotten. The cooking was done, as it is even to this day in the South, in a small house some distance from the mansion, and when the repast was prepared and dished up the leading part was taken by the cook, who raised to her head the huge dish containing the turkey and bore it aloft, while behind her came a procession of small boys, each carrying in his hands a dish which he had been cautioned to treat with especial care under penalty of having every bone in his "wuthless karkidge" broken on the spot as a penalty for negligence.

A Wedding in the "Quarters."

The monopoly of life on the large plantations was broken when there was a wedding among the slaves. This frequently happened, as marriage was encouraged by the masters, and in some cases, where the servants were highly esteemed, the ceremony took place in the parlor, with the family and a few neighbors as witnesses. A party dress, low-necked and short-sleeved, was presented to the bride by one of the ladies, the groom being arrayed with equal gorgeousness in the cast-off sporting clothes of his master. A bridal procession from the "quarters" to the house was a solemn affair, and both bride and groom enjoyed the momentary prominence given them by the occasion. In families where the slaves were well treated, a wedding feast was provided, abundant though homely, and the assembled guests of color reveled in as much bacon and greens, 'possum and sweet potatoes, hominy, corn-pone and pumpkin pie as they could stow away, while the pickaninies had corn meal and pot liquor, with an occasional spoonful of molasses. The pot liquor was an indispensability on the plantation, for to raise little darkies without it was regarded as an impossibility. It was the water in which hams or other meats had been boiled, and that contained a considerable quantity of nourishment. Thickened with corn meal and thoroughly reboiled, it was served out to the youngsters by the mammy who had charge of them, with the result that their little ribs were always well covered with fat.

POWER OF BRAINS.

Intellect and Not Capital, the Key to Wealth.

The unthinking advocates of labor often point to the colossal fortunes made by manufacturers, and assume that like results could be obtained by co-operation, says Engineering. But it will usually be found on examination that manufacturing had very little to do with the accumulation of the wealth to which they refer. An example is to be found in the history of the late Sir William Pearce, related by Lord Kelvin at the unveiling of his statue a short time ago. Under his ownership the Fairfield shipyards advanced by leaps and bounds, and in a few years he amassed an enormous amount of money. But it is well known that Sir William was a skillful and most successful speculator, and that without employing a single man, other than clerks and secretaries, he could have gained great wealth. Even in his business the methods were entirely his own and regal in their audacity.

Instead of waiting in the anterooms of ship owners to crave for orders, he put a pressure upon them that could not be resisted. He boldly placed a ship on the Atlantic that eclipsed the renown of all that were then running and announced that he would build others which should run either for or against the existing lines. In the Isle of Man service he forced the running in a similar manner, and, in a word, was a power that some ship owners had to take into their business calculations. His gains were those of intellect—not capital. Of course, capital constituted the tools he worked with as it was also the reward of his efforts. Such gains are as inaccessible to co-operators as the moon to the crying child.

Capital alone has ceased to be a source of wealth. It may produce a moderate return if carefully managed, but the days when it grew like the rolling snowball, by being simply turned over and over, are passed in this country. In the hands of a man of commanding ability, however, it acquires another significance. Just as a crowd of ignorant peasants can be converted into an army and used by a Napoleon to create an enormous empire in a few years, so money can be manipulated by some men to achieve marvelous results. But such men know their worth, and if they are ever co-operators, it is only until they have climbed the first rung of the ladder. The possessor of the philosopher's stone does not need a partner.

A Good Wife for Somebody.

Two up-to-date girls in seal sacks and violets were hurrying up Washington street just as a tremulous old man hesitatingly started to cross the street. A big dray crossed in front of him, and he came back to the sidewalk. He stood looking helplessly about him for a moment, evidently undecided whether to return or try it again.

"Wait a minute," said one of the girls, and she left her companion suddenly.

"Can't I help you to get across?" she said to the old man.

"Thank you, thank you," he said gratefully. "I wish you would; my eyesight is so poor I hardly can venture, and I have just had an operation performed on my eyes."

He took her arm, and she not only took him across the street, but down on Congress street to his destination.—New York Recorder.

Usurped Fashions.

"If there is anything I dislike," said one citizen, "it's to see a man effeminate in his attire."

"It is unpleasant," was the reply, "and yet about the only way for him to keep from being so in these days is to put on petticoats."—Life.

HOFFELDER ON BRIDGES.

The commissioners having become tired of the attacks that are being made on them in regard to those bridge bids, Mr. Hoffelder makes the following statement:

Mr. Wheelock published an article in the Auburn Times of March 23 and in another one before that. And another in the last issue, with the intention to discredit the board of commissioners about the bridge letting But none of them stated the facts In speaking of the St Joe bridge, the advertisement calls for a span of "176 feet from center to center of end pins, divided into 11 panels of 16 feet each. Height of truss, 26 feet; roadway, 16 feet; capacity of strain 100 lbs. per square foot of floor surface on the trusses. and 200 lbs per square foot on floor system; 9 lines of steel joists, floor 3 inch oak plank and to be proportioned for iron throughout in accordance with Cooper's Specifications for highway bridges." There were in all 23 bids, and the board rejected all because they were too high, and Mr. Wheelock's bid was rejected because his specifications and strain sheet were not complete. The board examined six strain sheets including Mr. Wheelock's, and it was found that he had about 45,000 pounds less of iron in his plan than was in the others, and especially was his floor system figured too light. Besides that, there was not a brace on his plan. Now, if Mr. Wheelock forgot them, or if he left them out purposely, we do not know. But we do know that such a long bridge and high truss must be well braced, just as any other building, the larger the building the better the bracing must be. The Times says it looks crooked from their office. Mr. Wheelock was offered $100 to withdraw his bid. Why did he not expose the men who had offered him the money, before the board? But instead of doing this he went before the board and said they must award him the contract, otherwise he would expose them through the newspapers of the county. And one of his friends said if we do not give him the job, then he would restrain the auditor from issuing an order to pay for said work. We think there is more crookedness in that than there is in the $100, when certain men form a lobby and try all means to scare the board who are under oath to do their duty towards the taxpayers. But suppose the board awarded the contract to Mr. Wheelock on his plans which represented about two thirds of that which the board asked in their advertisement. Then certainly there would be a bill of extras, and as far as we know, there was a bill of extras attached to the most of his work that he built in this county in the last five years. And if the board don't pay the bill, the law gives a right to appeal to the circuit court and the county would be dragged into a law suit as was the case with the Auburn Foundry two years ago. And as to the $1,100 profit that Mr. Wheelock figured on his bid, we think that lets the cat out of the sack. Now the bridges are to let again April 16, of which the plans are now on file in the auditor's office, and Mr. Wheelock says that they inserted about 40,000 pounds more iron than necessary. He thinks this was done to keep the price high so that former bids would not be exposed. This is not so. The plans were drawn by order of the board on the same capacity of strain according to Cooper' Specifications, as was required in our former advertisement. And if he don't believe that, we are in possession of a copy of specifications from one of the other bidders, and also a copy of Mr. Wheelock's own specifications, and the plans now on file are to have not a pound more of iron in it than are on the plans that were offered before, or than we asked in our advertisement. And what difference does it make to Mr. Wheelock? He has the right to bid on them just as the other contractors have. But that is what he don't want to do, to judge from the action he takes in the Times. The board built nine bridges last year in this county, of which we think every one is superior to any Mr. Wheelock ever built in this county, and we got them cheap and without his assistance. The Times says if Mr. Wheelock has the lowest bid he should have the job. Does the editor of the Times think the board should let a job on poor designs, after the money is paid on the abutments which cost generally the most on the bridges. and after knowing that the weight of loads will increase rather than decrease and while the difference in price is but little? The board decided to build those bridges durable and they have to be responsible for it, and not the contractors, at least the taxpayers hold us for that. But when an honorable citizen refuses to take money that was offered to him, then "the matter stinks pretty bad." Here we would like to call attention to the Webster bridge, for in that case we know of a contractor four years ago, who sent for an engineer to draw a half dozen plans for him and asked him to make those plans 70 lb. strain, while they would only figure 60 lbs.; and another 80 lbs. that only figured 70; and another 90 lbs. that only figured 80, and so on, in order to deceive the board. He says the commissioners wouldn't know it, and there is a good deal of stink still left on the walls of that bridge, besides other stinks we could mention if we would. And it is rumored that a certain contractor tried to induce two other men to go into partnership with him on the stone work. One should go on the bond and furnish the money, the third man should stay out, publicly, and try to get appointed by the board to superintend the work. We think that would "stink" still more. It looks like the case of the calf that sucked the cow so long that it was hard to wean. The last week's article in the Times reminds us of the kettle calling the pot black.

JOHN HOFFELDER.

COURT.

Thursday's Daily:

Judge Adair yesterday affirmed the judgement against A. J. Baxter in the case Aldrich had brought against him.

Blodgett vs Lockwood is now on, Blodgett ask that taxes he he paid be made a lien on the land. Rose & Rose for Blodgett and Roby, Shuman & Link for Lockwood.

Jud Potts, of Waterloo took some jewelry of J. F. Maxson, and the sheriff has him in limbo.

Saturday's Daily:

The Ralston will case came up before Judge Adair again to-day, when Judge McClellan on behalf of Mrs. Dills, filed 30 interrogatories to be answered by A. J. Ralston the plantiff. The latter moved the court to strike them out for the reason they called for matters concerning which he was not required to answer. The court overruled the motion and requires them to be answered by next Saturday. Nothing further will be done till next term. Judge Adair has finished all his work here and went home at noon. His own court begins Monday. The Kaufman-Baltz case comes up at Columbia City next Thursday. Judge McClellan and Frank Roby are for Baltz.

Tuesday's Daily.

Monday came up a very difficult and interesting case, that of Myers vs Reuben Lockwook, James Provines, John Ashley and Owen Hensinger, as directors of the Monitor Co. The plaintiffs claim that the directors are personally liable for debts of the company because they failed to publish a statement of condition as the law requires. Within 20 days after Jan. 1, each stock company must do this, and the law says that if any one is misled by failure to publish a statement of capital and debts, the directors are liable. Judge McClellan and J. E. Rose are attorneys for the defendant, and Baxter & Brown for the plaintiffs. No such peculiar case has ever come up in this court, and the result will be watched with great interest, especially by attorneys, and the various stock companies. In working up the interests of the defendants, McClellan and Rose ask the court to instruct the jury that the plaintiffs must prove that they were misled or deceived by this failure to publish. That this law creating an individual liability of officers of a corporation, is a wide departure from established rules of law, and that this new liability must depend solely on provisions of positive law. So this statute must be construed strictly, and not be extended to cover anything beyond its plain provisions. Then follows a line of argument that shows the difficulties surrounding a case like this. It will serve, also, to call the attention of stock companies to the fact that they must publish these statements in order to be on the safe side. So far, we remember but one company, the Zimmerman we think, that has complied with this law.

Judge Lowry and some Ft. Wayne parties came up to-day for some court work but probably did not get it done.

Wednesday's Daily:

The jury tackled the case between Myers, the Cleveland firm and the Monitor Co. last evening and staid by it all night till 4 this morning. They send in a very sensible verdict. They find that plaintiff sold defendants $553 in goods, between Jan. 1, 1895 and July 31 of same year, but that they did not rely on the individual responsibility of the defendants, nor did they know that defendants had not published a statement of condition. This verdict so far, is favorable to the Monitor Co, and relieves them of the individual responsibility to pay this, provided the law in its strict construction will admit this view. If on the other hand the law is to be so construed as to make them liable whether plaintiffs depended on this individual responsibility or not, then the debt must be paid by these directors. So that the Judge will have to construe or declare the law, and the final outcome will be as he says the law is. It was probably the only sort of verdict they could reach under the circumstances. There is a Fort Wayne case on now. Charles Pape vs Perry Randall in regard to a $1000 note. Judge Lowry, assisted by J. W. Baxter is attorney for Pape, and Randall & Doughman assisted by J. E. Rose, are attorneys for Randall. Peggy Armstrong's case comes up to-morrow.

W. H. McGiffin, Milo Thomas, Clark Griffith, Ed Gushwa and Henry Keen all went over to Goshen last Thursday evening to the K. of P. banquet. Milo says they just had a "Jim Dandy" of a time.

We made mention in our items last week about Dan. Thomas trading his big team of horses for a smaller one. Well he did make such a trade, and yet he has the same big team, and it happened on this wise. It appears as though there was another trade made which was all onesided like a jug handle, one in which Dan had no say at all. Imagine his surprise when he went to his barn last Wednesday morning to feed, and found the big horses in the stalls, and the little one. Oh where were they? Echo answers, where?

CONCORD.

Jonathan Boyle is quite sick.

G. F. Reed, of South Haven, visited in St. Joe last week.

Mrs. Howey and Mrs Hennessey drove up to Auburn Saturday.

C. Smith and G. W. Draggoo have been putting on airs with rheumatism.

Miss Clara Burley, of St. Joe, visited her cousin Nelia Gibford, a few days last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Morr attended the funeral last Thursday, of Mrs. Mary Brown.

Is. and Lydia Wyatt drove up to Newville Sunday to visit their sick cousin, Mrs. Harrod.

Jacob Baker's lamb record is hard to beat. He had a lamb 24 hours old weighed 12½ pounds.

Geo. Moore returned last week from Illinois where he spent the winter with his daughter Mrs. Shreeves.

Curtis May left last Thursday for Cheyenne, Wyoming, to rusticate, as the measles left him in delicate health.

Miss Minnie Hornberger returned last Friday from an extended visit with her sister, Mas. Myrtle Towsley, of Elkhart.

F. B. Draggoo returned Tuesday from the Surgical Institute at Indianapolis although his work is not yet completed but will be in the near future. It was one of the severest of operation.

Samuel Plotner's funeral sermon was preached at his residence Friday afternoon owing to sickness of the family. His remains were interred in the Newville cemetery. Thus two more old pioneers have passed away.

Miss Mary Morr, died March 25 at Crystal City, Mich. She had been there for her health. It was a sad death, as she was but 18. She selected her pall bearers, from among the girls of her class. She was laid to rest beside her mother and sisters.

If health be Wealth,

Vesta M W. Swartz has returned from Centrallia, Ill, where she was the guest of her son. On her way home she met one of her old patients Mrs. James Brooks, of one of the high schools, in Chicago. She is enjoying the best of health and holds Mrs. Swartz in highest esteem for her recovery.

All diseases of the air passages especially catarrah and chronic, Bronchitis, as well as first stages of consumption can be cured. I am treating these diseases with great success by the use of the latest and most improved medicines and instruments. Dr. W H. Nusbaum, Auburn, Ind. 42tf

The reporter and wife visited the old home south of town Sunday. While there we took a stroll to the sugar camp and when about half way our attention was called to the fact that twelve wind pumps could be counted and of the number eleven were erected by Eugene McDowell, of the Auburn Wind Mill Co. The farmers are fast adding all modern improvements and we are glad, for it shows prosperity and a much needed article when wind pumps are erected.

Saturday was held in the old high school room the regular monthly examination. Fiftyfour applicants were present. Of these thirty three are young people who never taught. DeKalb county's perfected system of graduation, and classification both in the common and the graded school has furnished a host of young people qualified to pass the state examination for common school license.

Prof. J. P. Bonnell of St, Joe was in town Saturday. He is urged by many, in the event of Supt. Merica's declination to be a candidate for the county superintendency. We shall have to say of Prof. Bonnell that he has been a successful school man. He is a scholarly gentleman having graduated with high honors from the scientific course of the Northern Indiana Normal School. The Prof. is a republican but that cuts no figure with us. The welfare of the schools and the advancement of education are the only motives that should prompt any man having anything to do with the election of so important an officer as that of county superintendent of schools.

Excellent Business.

Now, we have a few words more to add to it. We spoke of the large stock he carries. He informs us he has now 100,000 feet of barn lumber in stock. They have their sheds filled with Michigan white pine barn siding which they are offering at a lower price than it has ever been in this market. White pine is the only pine that will hold paint, and keep its place without shrinking badly. Those wishing yellow pine can also be supplied by them. They can furnish it in barn siding at $13.50 per 1,000. Come and examine this stock of barn lumber and house finishing material. Get prices before buying. Lumber all shedded and dry. Yard at L. S. & M. S. railroad.

It may be news to Auburn people to learn that Miss Reba Houser is married, and has been for about four weeks. She married a young man by the name of J. Davis, whose home was formerly at Hicksville, but is now one of the Western Union operators at Chicago. The COURIER extends congratulations, be it ever so late.

April Fool day was not generally "observed" though a fair amount of tricks grew out of it. At school, Della Weaver, and others got each other to tie a string around the bandage that wrapped up a sore (?) finger. At the COURIER office quite a number of the employes tried to wash their hands on a bar of soap made up of a chunk of board covered with printer's ink. Several dropped letters on the postoffice floor were picked up. Everybody read the ghost story in the DAILY and no doubt many more cases occurred that are not made public.

Almost a Fire.

Emanuel Stafford came near losing his dwelling Saturday fornoon. His house is a double one, and occupied by himself and son in-law, Fred Crooks. The latter was boiling down some maple syrup into sugar, on a stove in the main part of the building, when a spark seems to have blown over onto a part of the roof at least fifteen feet away, and it being very dry, with a high wind, soon caught. Mr. Stafford was using a cultivator in a field near by, and saw it. They at once made a strong fight with the flames, and soon had them put out.

Saw the West.

Miss Bertha Shaffer came home yesterday on the afternoon B. & O. train, from the far west. She had been some months with her brother Will, who is at American Fork, Utah, where he has a fruit farm. She has had better health since she was there, but does not like the country well enough to stay. She enjoyed the pleasant climate in general, but on her way home got a taste of the ugly way the weather acts out there when it takes a notion to act bad. She started Saturday morning, and that night, at Newcastle, Colo., they were stopped by a bad washout on the road, and had to go around on a narrow gauge road and got stuck in the big snowdrifts made by the recent storms in that section. It was something of a hardship to the train load of people, and all took severe colds, in consequence of the exposure.

Dog Law not Changed.

Many have asked if the law in regard to the dog tax has been changed, as a bill seemed to have been passed, affecting it. It has not been changed, but it is a joke on the intelligence of the legislature, as well as on the state superintendent of public instruction, for they don't seem to know what the assembly really did. The superintendent thought the law was changed, till he called on the secretary of state, who looked the matter up, and not being able to find, such a new law, concluded there was no change. So trustees can go on handling this fund just as they always have done.

A Happy Mother—$72.50 in a Week.

Mr. Editor:—I feel so happy that I must tell, through your valuable paper, what I did, so others can be happy and make money too. Things looked blue; these hard times had thrown my husband out of work; the interest on the mortgage was coming due and no money. I saw an advertisement, of the Rapid Dish Washer and thought I could sell them. I sent $5.00, got one, and my husband washed the dishes because he did not have to put his hand in the water, and did not have to rub them nor dry them; they came out all nice and clean and ready for the shelf. He also took care of the house and baby.

I got the agency and sold ten the first day, and have cleared this week $72.50 and will by next week have enough to pay the interest, and am sure we will have money all winter. Anyone out of work should send to W. P. Harrison & Co. Columbus, Ohio, and get a circular, have a happy home, and make money too. Times are going to be hard this winter, and much suffering can be saved if mothers and daughters would do as I have.

JAMES A. BARNS, - - PUBLISHER.

The restoration of the whipping post in New York looks like a knout rage.

The death of Worth, the man milliner, will be a heavy blow to "us of the upper succles" here.

A Baltimore paper says that "the demand for money is good." And it might add that the supply is otherwise.

It is well to remember just at this season of the year that winter flannels are better for wear than a shroud.

There seems to be no doubt whatsoever that William Kissam Vanderbilt has been overworking his middle name.

Joseph Cook denounces the Sunday newspaper because it is a "money-making enterprise." Why does Joseph lecture?

It is claimed that Russell Sage gave a Bible to the Castellanes because it contains the golden rule, for which Russell has no further use.

It is said that J. V. L. Pruyn has become Ward McAllister's legitimate successor. New York's highest society, we understand, is full of Pruyns.

Two hundred Chicago policemen have been dismissed for ignorance. It was generally supposed that Chicago had a much larger police force than that.

The tramp who slept in an Astor bed is to have a new trial. What's the matter? Hasn't he been advertised sufficiently for dime museum purposes?

The financial situation of this country never can be considered hopeless so long as a dog show can rake together $417,000 worth of live stock on short notice.

We are pained to learn from the Cleveland Plain Dealer that Prince Achille Murat "shot himself in the Caucasus." It must have been a distressing affair.

A Boston girl has launched upon the literary market a volume of 630 pages on the "Basis of Philosophic Doubt." And yet it doesn't completely solve the hash problem.

A news note says that Russia has a famous ballad singer who, though over 70 years old, is still in the height of her success. Perhaps she is training to enter the ballet by and by.

The charming manner in which Judge Barrett has kept all the nauseating details of the Vanderbilt scandal from publicity ought to assure for him all the divorce business of the "400."

There are New-Yorkers un-Wagnerian enough to insinuate that the productions of "Die Goetterdaemmerung" in the original German had something to do with the fall of two buildings.

The St. Paul Globe says editorially: "We ate $29,000 worth more eggs from Canada in the last four months of 1894 than we did in the corresponding time in 1893." There's an editor with an abnormal appetite, that's all.

It is charged that the Standard Oil Company has spent a large sum of money to get a new pipe line bill through the Pennsylvania Legislature. Here is a case where the people by and by will have to pay the piper.

The tendency of the new woman with millions to regard the United States as a good place to emigrate from has received a check in the Vanderbilt divorce case. The court orders that the children be educated in this country.

A Kansas City theatrical manager has gone at the high-hat nuisance without waiting for legislative aid. He simply posts a notice asking ladies to remove their hats during the play and the request is complied with. No law on the subject is needed.

The jury in the Hayward murder trial in Minneapolis after a few minutes' deliberation and on the first ballot found the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, which in Minnesota carries with it the death penalty. The murder of Miss Ging was peculiarly atrocious and the subsequent developments were most sensational. The whole development of the awful facts, the unfolding of the fiendish plot and the testimony of brother against brother have been carefully watched by the reading public throughout the country, and a popular verdict was rendered against the prisoner long ago. Public sentiment will not be satisfied until both Hayward and his dupe Blixt shall be dropped through the same scaffold trap.

Charles A. Dana, of the New York Sun has been sued for libel by Frank E. Noyes, one of the employes of the Washington Star. This matter grows out of somewhat strained relations between the Associated and the United Press Associations. Editor Dana is one of the leading officials of the United Press, while Mr. Noyes is connected in an official capacity with the rival association. As is well known, a bitter antagonism exists between these two organizations. Mr. Noyes has seized upon certain derogatory statements which recently appeared in the Sun and has used them as a foundation upon which to base an action for libel. But the whole matter is a fight between two great press associations rather than a personal quarrel. Editor Dana is the recognized dean of American journalism. He always has demonstrated ability to fight his own battles successfully and to take care of himself, and he may safely be left to do so in the present instance. But one may be pardoned a regret that a mere business rivalry should have been permitted to degenerate into personalities involving the foremost journalist in America. A certain amount of advertising can be secured by attacking a lion, but it is a questionable proceeding.

Another red-handed murderer has "gone to glory." At least John Milligan, of Oklahoma, who had committed a most atrocious homicide, expressed his conviction that he was ticketed for that uncertain goal. It is a curious fact that of those who die the gentry, dying at the hands of the law are the most sanguine of immortal bliss.

One of the New York papers has an article in which it is sought to show that the young men in that city are the best dressed young men in the world, contrasting them with the young men of Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Chicago, to the disadvantage of the residents of these latter cities. And, apropos, in another column of that same New York paper we read of an auction sale of unpaid tailors' bills against young men in New York who like to wear good clothes, and who either cannot or will not pay for the same. This auction sale of unpaid tailor bills is a regular annual feature of New York life.

While the English press is denouncing German sailors for brutality to passengers of the Elbe, the German press has taken up the cudgels against the commander and crew of the Crathie, the small British steamer that pierced the side of the big ship and sent her to the bottom with 350 souls. Considerable international animosity has been aroused. The contradictory statements made by the Crathie officers warrant belief that they were either as indifferent as the Elbe crew to the consequences of their deed or that the Crathie herself was so desperately injured that she dare not linger to save life lest she, too, should go to the bottom. There ought to be a relentless inquiry into one of the most shocking marine disasters of the age of water-tight compartments and disciplined sailors. Example should be made that will render seamanship on the ocean more mindful of its responsibilities.

The death of Worth, the "man milliner," recalls the fact that the vogue he so long enjoyed was due far less to any extraordinary superiority in his designs than to a clever American woman's unintended advertisement of his establishment. She had accompanied there a friend with a deep purse and an intense love of finery. The novelty of finding a man taking the measurements for a young woman's gowns and mantles filled her with astonishment, which she expressed in a brightly written letter to a London newspaper. That was the beginning of Worth's international fame, and almost the foundation of his fortune. His lead in the world of fashion was due in large measure to his sense of composition in costume. He "saw" every feature, every detail, and harmonized them. With every order for a gown were designed all the accessories—numbers of pairs of gloves, slippers or shoes, hosiery, handkerchiefs, parasols, fans, bonnets, wraps, etc., according to the use to which the gown was put. Even to jewels and card cases his aesthetic sense extended. So much a fad did he become that the trademark on the belts of his mantles and gowns has been cut from cast-off garments and placed upon articles made in inferior establishments in order to delude buyers into paying fancy prices.

W. R. MORRISON'S COOLNESS.

Somehow Did Not Make the Impression on His Wife He Expected.

A gossiper in the Washington Post tells a story on Col. William R. Morrison. The colonel believes thoroughly in the efficacy of discipline. He has spent a great part of his eventful career in hotels, and one of his theories has always been that the mind can be so trained that the biggest sort of a hotel fire is powerless to sidetrack the reasoning faculties on occasions when presence of mind is needed. He impressed this theory very strongly upon Mrs. Morrison by conjuring up a variety of critical exigencies and instructing her how to act in given cases. Fate would have it that the colonel should be put to the test. He and his wife were aroused from their slumbers one night by an alarm of fire. The hotel in which they had their rooms was afire and great confusion and tumult ensued among the guests. "Now is the time to put into practice what I have always preached to you, my dear," said the colonel. "Don't get excited. Put on your indispensable apparel and take your time. Don't lose your head. Just watch me." He calmed Mrs. Morrison's anxiety, handed her the various articles necessary to her toilet, put on his collar and cuffs, took his watch from under his pillow and placed it in his vest pocket, put on his hat, packed a valise of valuables, and, taking his cane, walked with Mrs. Morrison out of the burning building into the street. "Now, my dear," he said when they were safe, "don't you see what a grand thing it is to keep cool and act with a deliberate purpose in an emergency like this? Here you are completely dressed as though you were going out for a walk, and over yonder are several ladies in complete dishabille." Just then Mrs. Morrison for the first time glanced at her husband. "You are right, William," she said, "it is a grand thing to keep cool and act deliberately, but if I had been you I would have stayed in the room long enough to put on my trousers."

Delicious Corn Pone.

The ingredients are two coffee-cups of cornmeal, one quart of milk, four eggs, one tablespoonful of drawn butter, one teaspoonful of salt and one teaspoonful of sugar, writes Mary Safford in Ladies' Home Journal. Beat the eggs thoroughly; add the meal, butter, sugar and salt, and scald the whole with the milk, which has been previously set on to boil. Have ready a buttered "turk's head," or, failing that, rather deep pans; pour in at once and hurry into the oven. Do not let the thin appearance of the batter tempt you to add more meal—as has happened more than once when this receipt was being tried, to the serious injury of the pone. The four eggs will stiffen it sufficiently, and the richness and delicacy of the cake are largely due to the small proportion of meal. The "turk's head" is preferable to the ordinary pan because the hole in the center, which permits the hot air to rise, diffuses the heat more equally through the mixture. Bake in a quick oven.

WE have so often discussed the modern young woman in her varied and varying phases that it seems right and proper that we contemplate the modern young man, for he appears in as many guises, which, if perhaps not quite as pleasing to study, are at least worth a little time in being dissected by the pen.

To begin with, there is the heavy creature of putty countenance who wishes to pose as a litterateur. He writes abstruse articles that are never published; he haunts the society of those who have found a literary footing and to the circle where he genuinely belongs he descants of upper Bohemia and tries to be as mystifying and dense as possible. As a rule he succeeds and by the truthful is dubbed tiresome, by the sycophantic learned.

Then there is the bustling young business man, who is the direct opposite of the owl-like personage just described. He blusters, he boasts, he talks shop, but he generally succeeds. Time tones him down, but in his first effusiveness he is wearisome to all save his proud parents or an employer that recognizes in the bluster that real energy that will bring more money into his own pockets.

The cynical creature of 24 who sneers at all that is good, tries hard to appear blase and is in reality not half bad is quite amusing in his endeavor to impress the world with his over-weening wickedness. If he were one-fourth as bad as he would have you suppose, there would be no parade of his misdeeds, but a sincere desire to hide rather than flaunt his peccadilloes. It is the pleasure that he takes in posing as a deep-dyed villain that proves more than all else that he is not what he would have you think.

That distressing type, the lady-like young man, need not be dilated upon at length. He is too silly to be taken seriously and too serious to be treated frivolously, therefore we dismiss him with a sigh that such a type should exist. But when all others have passed in review there is one that comes under no certain type, is not classed with any other man that ever lived, and though he has many faults he is perfect in our eyes, for it is love that makes us blind to his foibles and alive to his virtues.

Don't Worry.

Worry is killing. It is bad management that kills people. Nature will let no man overwork himself unless he plays her false, unless he takes stimulant at irregular times, smokes much or takes opium. If he is regular and obeys the laws of health and walks in the way of physiological righteousness Nature will never allow him or any other person to work too hard. I have never yet seen a case of breaking down from overwork alone, but I admit that it is necessary above all things to cultivate tranquility of mind. Try to exercise your wills in regard to this—for will counts for something in securing tranquility to accept things as they are and not to bother about yesterday, which is gone forever; not to bother about to-morrow, which is not ours; but to take the present day and make the best of it. Those women who will continually peer into what lies beyond never have any present life at all—they are always grizzling over the past or prying into the future, and this blessed to-day, which is all that we are sure of, they never have.

Cure for a Broken Heart.

A Louisville girl has discovered a novel panacea for a broken heart, which common humanity demands should be given widespread circulation at once for the benefit of a suffering world. The story was overheard in that queer but popular public confessional, a street car. The clever creature said to the other girl: "Oh, Louise, I felt perfectly dreadful all day yesterday. Harry and I have fallen out, and we are both so obstinate that we will never make up—never! My life is a perfect wreck, I cried until I couldn't cry any more, and was just desperate to know what to do with myself, when suddenly I heard a hand-organ out on the street—the first of the season. I rushed out and brought the man into the parlor—monkey and all—and kept him all the afternoon—the antics of that monkey nearly killed me. Of course, it ruined me financially, but, goodness! when one has a broken heart something has to be done."

Major Belle Reynolds.

Living quietly at Santa Barbara, Cal., is Dr. Arabella Reynolds, the mention of whose name is sufficient to kindle the eye of many a veteran of the late war. She is the only woman ever commissioned in the United States army, she having been raised to that honor by no less a person than "Dick" Yates, the war governor of Illinois. Mrs. Reynolds was born at Shelburne Falls, Mass., but removed with her parents to Iowa when 14 years old. Her father was Dr. Macomber, the family having included seven members of the medical profession. After teaching school for a while in Iowa Miss Macomber in 1860 married Mr. Reynolds and removed to Peoria. When the war broke out her husband joined the Seventeenth Illinois, and was sent to Birds Point, Mo., whither his young wife accompanied him. After a month or so garrison duty at Cape Girardeau came the battle of Fredericktown. Mrs. Reynolds remained in the rear until the struggle was ended, and then ministered to the dead and dying. Following this she saw numerous battles, always doing Red Cross service where possible and making no discrimination between blue and gray. She was an eye-witness of the battle of Pittsburg Landing, her description of which so delighted Gov. Yates that he exclaimed:

"Why, this woman is more deserving of a commission than half of the men who have them."

"Why not give her a commission then?" asked Dr. Colburn, who had come from Springfield with the Governor.

Gov. Yates called for a blank commission and for a pen and ink. In a few minutes he had written out a commission for Mrs. Belle Reynolds, said commission having been granted "for meritorious conduct in camp and on the bloody field of Pittsburg Landing."

WHAT THE REPUBLICAN PAPERS SHOULD DO.

Constantly Repeating False Assertions—Wail of a Poor Man from Maine—Wages Here and in England—The Outlook Is Encouraging.

A Comparison.

We find in the Cleveland Leader, the newspaper which represents McKinley and his ambition, the following assertion:

"The tariff law which took the place of the McKinley law is full of favoritism to the trusts."

The official copies of the two tariff laws show the following duties imposed upon products which are now or recently were controlled by trusts or similar combinations:

	New Tariff.	McKinley Tariff.
Steel rails, ton.....	$7.84	$13.44
Steel beams, ton....	$13.44	$20.16
White lead, lb.....	1½c.	3c.
Linseed oil, gallon..	20c.	32c.
Ingot copper.....	Free.	1¼c.
Sheet copper.....	20 p. c.	35 p. c.
Boracic acid, lb.....	3c.	5c.
Refined borax, lb...	2c.	5c.
Card clothing, foot..	40c.	50c.
Refined sugar, cwt..	42½c.	60c.
Starch, lb.....	1½c.	2c.
Cordage, lb.....	10 p. c.	1½c.
Binding twine, lb...	Free.	7-10c.
Cotton bagging, yard.	Free.	1 6-10c.
Harrows, etc.....	Free.	45 p. c.

The estimate of the sugar trust's protective duty in the new tariff, 42½ cents per hundred, is that of Mr. Aldrich, the Republican leader and expert in tariff legislation in the Senate, whose comparison of the two duties is expressed in the words "42½ as against 60 in the law of 1890."

The paragraph which puts harrows on the free list is as follows: "Plows, tooth and disk harrows, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills, and planters, mowers, horse rakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, and cotton gins." If the Leader knows that the manufacture and sale of any one of the other farm implements or machines here mentioned are controlled by a combination agreement, the example can be added to the list. Concerning the harrow combination the New York Supreme Court has said: "It is hard to conceive how a monopoly could be more firmly intrenched, or how competition could be more effectively strangled." The combination of steel beam manufacturers has been dissolved; the steel-rail combination controls the rail industry; for some time past the producers of ingot copper have had no effective agreement.

A majority of the reductions would have been larger if the original Wilson bill had been passed. The combinations were assisted in the Senate by a little group of men who were Democrats in name, but Republicans in sympathy and purpose, so far as "favoritism to the trusts" was concerned, and by an alliance of these men with the leaders of the Republican side.

We advise our McKinley contemporary in Cleveland and other Republican journals which are repeating the assertion we have quoted above to read the new tariff act and compare the duties imposed by it upon the products of combinations with the corresponding duties in the McKinley act, which they profess to regard as "the wisest and bravest of tariff laws yet framed."—New York Times.

A Suffering Citizen.

A poor man in Maine writes in complaint of the income tax law. Not having an income of $4,000 he says he is deprived of the privilege of contributing to the support of the Government the same as his more fortunate neighbor. He demands to know what right Congress has to put him in a position where he "cannot look the proudest plutocrat in the eye and let him know that I am as good a citizen as he."

It is so odd as to be funny to find a Down-East citizen who is angry because he is not taxed more. If the income tax were the only source of the Government's revenue his patriotic pride might be comprehensible. But if this suffering citizen really wants a basis of equality from which to "look the proudest plutocrat in the eye" let him study the internal revenue and the customs taxes.

If he and his plutocratic neighbor both smoke pipes and drink beer or whisky to the same extent he pays as much toward the support of the Government as his neighbor who may have an income a hundred times greater than his. Should not this glaring inequality cause the proud plutocrat to avoid the eye of the prouder son of poverty?

If this be not enough to minister to the injured citizen's vanity let him buy any of the two thousand necessary articles taxed by the tariff and he will again pay just as much on an equal consumption as does his rich neighbor.

We suspect that if this suffering citizen's town assessor were to be interviewed they might have another story to tell of his tremendous anxiety to be taxed.—New York World.

An Encouraging Outlook.

The signs of the times grow daily more favorable for a safe and considerable business revival. Like the incoming tide the waves of returning prosperity advance and recede, but each succeeding one apparently raises the general level. The improvement is not felt uniformly by any means, and in some lines of trade it is not sensible as yet, but the course of the staples and of the stock exchange, the bank statements, and those of transportation companies seem to warrant solid hopes of a return to normal business conditions in the near future. The advances witnessed during the past week have been quite marked. Our market reports show the rise of cotton and of raw silk. Wool is at least steady and the strength of the foreign market, together with the employment of our woolen mills here, forecasts a rise in that commodity. Wheat is up a little, and the iron situation may be safely said to be one of hopeful expectancy. Imports are very heavy, and while a gloomy view of this circumstance is taken by those who hold the position that all such imports are at the expense of American industries, they at least show that our people want the stuff and can pay for it. Our various market reports reflect conditions of each department more in detail. The whole effect of them, however, is hopeful to bouyant, and the general outlook seems to us better than any time since the spring of '92.—Dry-Goods Economist, March 22, 1895.

Our Future Possibilities.

In a recent address to the Boot and Shoe Club in Boston, Mr. U. D. Eddy expressed the belief that the industry he represented would be able to build up an enormous foreign trade. There was nothing, he said, in the way except the higher wages paid here, and he did not believe that they would be an obstacle, as our labor is more productive. The truth of this contention is strikingly illustrated by recent statistics of the coal trade of the world. In Great Britain the average production per capita of those employed was 296; in Germany, 260; in France, 198; and in the United States, 453 tons. Thus, while wages are higher here than in any other country, the production per man is more than twice as large as it is in France, and more than 50 per cent. above that in England. What is the result? The average price of coal in England is 8 shillings per ton; in Germany 8 shillings; in France 10 shillings 8 pence; and in the United States 5 shillings 3½ pence. With the highest wages in the world we have the cheapest coal, simply because our labor produces more coal per man.

There is another interesting fact in this connection. In late years the wages of British coal miners have been advanced. It was predicted that this would ruin her export trade, yet last year she exported forty million bushels of coal, against 5,500,000 for Germany, her next competitor. Moreover, the cost per ton of producing coal in Great Britain has been reduced nearly 20 per cent. in two or three years.

It is obvious that we shall have a good deal to do "with abroad" in the years to come, if our economic policy shall be reasonable. The markets of the world are open to us if we have the sagacity to take possession of them. The pauper labor of Europe can not compete with ours, which is high-priced on account of its higher productive power.—The New Age.

"Perverted History."

The editor of the American Economist (organ of the Protective Tariff League) has made a great discovery. He has not only discovered the cause of the overthrow of the Roman Empire, but he has discovered that every careful student of history knows of this cause. The editor of the New York Evening Post seems not to have been a careful student and to have "perverted history," as the Economist puts it, by stating some other than the true cause. He is therefore "called down" by the editor of the Economist in this classic and decisive style:

"Everyone who has studied the history of the Roman Empire with any care knows that the calamity which overthrew that empire was caused by free wheat. The free and lavish importation of wheat drove the Roman farmers from the Campagna and filled Rome with the very rich, their sycophants and slaves. Rome went the way England is going. It is the free-trade way."

Rome was inundated with free wheat—buried under the cheap stuff. Of course, such a catastrophe would sink any nation. If England had only stuck to her corn laws and dear bread she would not now be going the way of Rome. Germany is wiser and is giving her farmers protection and her people dear bread. The only salvation for the United States is to increase the duty on wheat and to stop the heavy importations from Europe and Asia. Now that we know exactly what overthrew Rome there is no excuse for any nation making the same mistake. Up with the wheat duty and save the republic.

A Lesson Taught.

The movement in woolen circles has been somewhat sluggish this week and has shown unmistakably that the end of the fall order season is drawing near. The claim is advanced on all sides that it has been a trying time, but it has also been a period of instruction and encouragement.

One lesson has been taught to the trade very decidedly, and it is that European competition need not trouble the American manufacturer who is equipped with the latest machinery and is determined to be up to date in all his productions. With the powerful backing of free raw materials there are domestic manufacturers who are surprising themselves with the quality and salability of their products, and it must be borne in mind that the present is simply the commencement of these efforts.

Neither England, Germany, nor France built up their woolen industries in a year, but attained their respective positions by long periods of persevering work and after many costly failures.

The American manufacturer has to travel the same road, but has some circumstances in his favor that the others had not.—Dry Goods Economist.

Wages Here and in England.

The big shoe strike in England has brought out some interesting statements in regard to the tariff question. The British employers claim that, although American wages in the shoe business are about twice as great as those in England, the Americans make shoes cheaper than they can. This is exactly in line with Mr. Blaine's statement in regard to the difference of wages in the cotton manufacturing industry. It will be found generally that where American wages are materially higher than English wages it is due to the increased product of the American workingman or his longer hours of service.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

France's McKinley.

It will be quite interesting to watch the progress made by M. Meline, the McKinley of France, in his efforts to induce the French people to pay a higher price for meat as the result of excluding the American supply. It will be hard to convince the average Frenchman that cattle-raising is an infant industry which needs protection, or to make him believe that the foreigner pays the tax when the price of meat goes up. Some of our McKinleyites should take a trip to France and help M. Meline out.—New York World.

Irons.

Smoothing irons were first used in France, and are supposed to have been a French invention, being introduced in the sixteenth century. After the introduction of starch, linens were first made smooth by pressure, being starched and placed between two boards. This being found not to give the best results, resort was next had to pressure with a cold flat-iron, and finally the iron was heated to impart the polish now considered indispensable.

Weak Nerves

indicate as surely as any physical symptom shows anything that the organs and tissues of the body are not satisfied with their nourishment.

They draw their sustenance from the blood, and, if the blood is thin, impure, or insufficient, they are in a state of revolt. Their complaints are made to the brain, the king of the body, through the nervous system, and the result of the general dissatisfaction is what we call Nervousness.

This is a concise, reasonnable explanation of the whole matter.

The cure for Nervousness, then, is simple. Purify and enrich your blood by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and the nerves, tissues, and organs will have the healthful nourishment they crave. Nervousness and Weakness will then give way to strength and health.

That this is not theory but fact is proven by the voluntary statements of thousands cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Read the next column.

Right and Left.

In the Rochester Democrat a Judge of the Supreme Court thus explains why in England vehicles turn to the left in passing each other: "The foot traveler passed to the right that the shield on the left arm might be interposed to ward off a treacherous blow, and the right, or sword arm, free to strike. Horsemen, however, usually had mail to protect them, and there was more safety in being near the antagonist than in having to striking across the horse, as would have been necessary had they turned to the right. When vehicles came into use later the drivers instinctively followed the old horseback custom and turned to the left. In this country horses were scarce for several generations after the first settlers, and the rule of the foot passenger. "Keep to the right," was the only one that obtained. When conveyances became common they still followed the more familiar custom of the pedestrian, instead of the forgotten tradition of the mother country."

What a Blessing

It is to have strong nerves, and how many are denied it. They to whom nature has been niggard in this respect can enjoy nerve vigor and quietude if they use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, one of the finest nervines and tonics in existence. Dyspepsia, a prolific source of nerve inquietude, is invariably overcome by this genial medicine, which is also potent as a remedy for malarial and kidney trouble and constipation.

Cleverly Parried.

A bright woman who has said good-by to youth, but is making out extremely well on the aftermath, has successfully solved the problem of quenching other women's inquiries as to her age. "Whenever a woman has the assurance to ask me what my age is," she explained, "I always beam upon her and immediately exclaim, 'Oh, my dear girl, I am a great deal older than you are—a whole year at least.' And then, before she can find time or breath for another question, I add, 'And, by the way, what is your exact age, dear?' The woman, taken by surprise, lies heroically, of course, and consequently makes me out at least five years younger than I would have dared to make myself."

THE Russian government expects to complete the great Trans-Siberian Railroad by 1901.

A BOSTON GIRL'S LIFE

Saved from Ruin and Despair by the Timely Aid of a Noted Woman.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

IS there anything more truly pathetic than the cry for help that springs from the anguished heart of a young girl—a beautiful girl who sees ahead only suffering and uncertainty?

But oh, what joy and gladness her young heart pours forth when she realizes that her dreaded enemy, the blasting influence, is gone,—banished forever.

This sunshine and joy is now the happy portion of Miss Florence ——— of Beacon Street, Boston.

She often tells of her suffering from the suppression of the menses. The pain was excruciating. The doctors, instead of removing the cause of her ailment, plied her each month with morphine to prevent convulsions; but the trouble was permitted to exist.

When she could endure no more,—prostration was imminent and future hopeless,—her family procured a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which, surprising to all, rapidly and permanently cured her.

In writing to Mrs. Pinkham, pouring forth her gratitude and happiness, she says: "Oh! that I could make every suffering woman try your valuable medicine! How they would bless you!"

Skirts for Men.

We must protest against Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson's proposal for men to wear skirts. It is all they can do to buy trousers.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson advocates a dress reform by putting men in skirts. This is almost as objectionable as putting women in trousers.—Denver News.

A Chicago "lady" reformer declares that men ought to wear skirts. The coming woman is coming with a briskness that almost takes an old timer's breath away.—Kansas City Journal.

A Chicago woman doctor suggests that men should wear skirts. She will find a field of useful endeavor in attempting to persuade the women to keep on wearing them.—New York Press.

Harriet Hosmer may call our modern statues "betrousered obituaries," but how does she suppose our statues of Oliver P. Morton and Thomas A. Hendricks would look in short skirts?—Indianapolis News.

A Chicago dress reform woman wants to shorten the skirts of the women and put the men into petticoats so as to establish the equality of the sexes. The men may wear knee breeches, but they are not to have the advantage of women there either.—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Heaps o' Trouble.

Queen Lil and Minister Thurston can commiserate with one another. Like the parrot, they both talk too much.—Omaha Bee.

Uncle Samuel's fist is doubled up in spite of himself. These foreign fellows are getting too "sassy" for any living use.—New York Recorder.

We cannot shoulder Nicaragua's responsibilities; there is nothing in the Monroe doctrine which requires anything like that of us.—Springfield Republican.

If, to an abject apology for their wanton attack upon our merchant steamer, the Spaniards should prefer recourse to war, they can unquestionably get their fill of it.—New York Sun.

Hawaii should give Mr. Willis his passport. If Minister Thurston is persona non grata with the Cleveland administration Mr. Willis certainly must be with the Hawaiian republic.—Cincinnati Gazette.

If England were to attempt to absorb the whole of Venezuela, in other words, to destroy its government, it would be the duty of the United States to interfere. To refuse to do so would be to abandon the Monroe doctrine.—Denver Republican.

Strong-Minded Ohio Women.

Ohio women are different from Ohio men. Four of them have refused nominations.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Four Ohio women have declined to be candidates for office. This constitutes a great surprise in Ohio.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Ohio idea is that women who are brave enough to acknowledge that they are over 21 ought to be allowed to vote for school directors.—Exchange.

The women of Cleveland, Ohio, are beginning to take a genuine interest in their limited franchise. They loudly protest against the rule requiring voters to disclose their ages.—Kansas City Journal.

Now that the Ohio women are actually participating in politics the Ohio man will be deprived of the time-honored excuse for staying out late at night. His wife will also attend the caucuses.—Exchange.

This dreadful question confronts the women of Cleveland: Does the privilege of voting repay us for the humiliation of telling our ages? In about 99 out of 100 cases it has been decided that it does not. To make a woman tell her exact age is against the Constitutional provision forbidding cruel and unusual punishment.—Kansas City Star.

Oppressed Cuba.

Before Cuba can ever hope to become an annex to the United States it will have to cure itself of the revolution habit.—Kansas City Journal.

Cuba is probably the most tax-ridden spot on the earth, the "mother country" being solely to blame for the home rule spirit there.—Boston Globe.

In sentiment and patriotism it is almost an alien island. Spain cares for Cuba only for the money there is in it and Cuba cares little for Spain.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

If the island is for sale there can be but one purchaser—the United States. And it is very certain that if Spain ever chooses to risk a war with us she will do so with the certainty of losing Cuba forever.—Minneapolis Journal.

There is no doubt but a majority of the people of Cuba are anxious to put an end to Spanish domination on the island. For half a century Spain has practically subsisted upon the revenue derived from Cuban industry.—St. Paul Call.

The National Game.

The mind that can be kept from care by baseball is not the best kind of mind to have.—Exchange.

The City Council is getting decidedly goody-goody when it suppresses baseball.—Atlanta Journal.

Politics will have to get a good deal livelier if they expect to keep up with the interest in baseball.—Exchange.

Northern baseball players are starting to come South before the wild geese have commenced to fly North.—New Orleans Picayune.

Baseball managers have found out that the player who holds out for a higher salary is something like a woman—he may be won by perseverance.—Baltimore American.

Our Dried Apples.

This is too much. Uncle Sam could perhaps stand Germany's prohibition of our beef, but when it comes to stigmatizing the innocuous dried apple of our commerce it is high time to talk to the young kaiser.—Boston Globe.

This time it is American dried apples that the German authorities find deleterious to the public health. How long will the administration permit these discriminations against American products to continue?—Boston Journal.

Photography.

The "Photoret" is an apparatus formed like a watch, and is perhaps a trifle larger both in diameter and thickness than a railway time-keeper. Its duty is not to mark the flight of time, but to take photographs. This is brought about by a simple slot movement to change the position of a circular film of sensitized celluloid inside the apparatus; and pressure upon the knob of the handle gives a rapid exposure while the Photoret is held in the hand. Six exposures can be made on one film, each little picture being about half an inch square, but capable of after magnification.

THE CARE OF THE HANDS.

Some Simple Means of Keeping Them in Good Condition.

Though nature may not have gifted a woman with hands that it would be a joy for art to depict, yet she may keep those she has in such condition that it will not pain her friends to look at them, says the New York Recorder. They may be as soft and white, as dainty and feminine, as she will take the pains to make them.

She must have good digestion, or her hands may become mottled and purplish. She must not lace or they will be swollen and red. She must not go ungloved, or they will be rough. And she must not wear too tight gloves, or her hands will be inert, lifeless, and discolored.

Warm water must be used for washing the hands and plenty of good soap. They should not be rubbed hard, but softly. Then they should be lightly dusted with oatmeal or almond meal. Sometimes oatmeal may be used instead of soap with good results.

At each washing the skin about the base of the finger nails should be gently pushed back and loosened with a stick, but it should not be cut. If the nails are too hard, they may be softened by having vaseline rubbed into them. If they are yellow, alcohol will help to whiten them, and if they are blue the friction of a chamois polisher will do as much for them as anything short of the improvement of the entire circulation can do.

If gloves are worn much at night they are apt to yellow the hands. A large hole should always be cut in the palms to admit air. A pure cold cream is the best softener. Vaseline yellows the skin. An occasional massage with almond oil is excellent for improving both shape and color of the hands.

Prices in the Menagerie Market.

Few people have any idea of the market value of the various animals shown in zoological gardens. It seems that the top price at the present moment would be that for the purchase of a giraffe. The price is steady at £1,200, and at that figure the demand exceeds the supply. A hippopotamus is worth £800; a 2-horned rhinoceros is of more value, the second horn making a difference of £200. Elephants range from £300 to £800, temper and size being considered. Lions range from £160 to £240, and a lioness costs £200. Tigers are quoted at the same figure. A really fine specimen of the grizzly bear is worth £200. Polar bears cost £160. Camels go by the hump; one having one hump is worth £70, and two humps bring the market value up to £80. Ostriches are valued at £160 apiece. The American buffalo is worth £100. The Rocky Mountain goat is quoted rather high, £100, while panthers and leopards are plentiful at £50 each, and hyenas and pumas go for £35.—London Court Journal.

ACUTE DYSPEPSIA.

SYMPATHETIC HEART DISEASE OFTEN ATTENDS IT.

The Modern Treatment Consists in Removing the Cause.

(From the Republican, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.)

Mrs. V. Curley, who has resided in Clarence, Iowa, for the past twenty-two years, tells an interesting story of what she considers rescue from premature death. Her narrative is as follows:

"For ten years prior to 1894, I was a constant sufferer from acute stomach trouble. I had all the manifold symptoms of acute dyspepsia, and at times other troubles were present in complication—I did not know what it was to enjoy a meal. No matter how careful I might be as to the quality, quantity and preparation of my food, distress always followed eating. I was despondent and blue. Almost to the point of insanity at times, and would have been glad to die. Often and often I could not sleep. Sympathetic heart trouble set in and time and again I was obliged to call a doctor in the night to relieve sudden attacks of suffocation which would come on without a moment's warning.

"My troubles increased as time wore on and I spent large sums in doctor bills, being compelled to have medical attendants almost constantly. During 1892 and 1893 it was impossible for me to retain food, and water brashes plagued me. I was reduced to a skeleton. A consultation of physicians was unable to determine just what did ail me. The doctors gave us as their opinion that the probable trouble was ulceration of the coats of the stomach and held out no hope of recovery. One doctor said, 'All I can do to relieve your suffering is by the use of opium.'

"About this time a friend of mine, Mrs. Symantha Smith, of Glidden, Iowa, told me about the case of Mrs. Thurston, of Oxford Junction, Iowa. This lady said she had been afflicted much the same as I had. She had consulted local physicians without relief, and had gone to Davenport for treatment. Giving up all hope of recovery, she was persuaded by a friend to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The result was almost magical.

"I was led to try them from her experience, and before many months I felt better than I had for a dozen years. I am now almost free from trouble, and if through some error of diet I feel badly, this splendid remedy sets me right again. I have regained my strength and am once more in my usual flesh. I sleep well and can eat without distress. I have no doubt that I owe my recovery to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I only wish that I had heard of them years ago, thereby saving myself ten years of suffering and much money."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50c. per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

Formal.

An American finds the etiquette of French dinners rather formal. In Paris, which is all France, one must never betray any admiration of any effects evolved during the dinner, gastronomic or decorative, much less speak of them. In New York, which by the same token is all America, it is rather remiss not to express, in some uneffusive way, one's pleasure of taste or sight. "What a charming arrangement of flowers!" "This salad is something to remember!" and others like these, are phrases which no New York hostess thinks of resenting; indeed, rather hopes for. Many French dinner notions are, however, copied here, notably that of serving unbroken dishes.

Progress.

The economists who in the early part of this century feared a growth of population which could only be checked by war, pestilence, and famine, took no cognizance of agricultural chemistry. Apparently no limit can be placed to the product that may be put at the disposal of man, providing he keeps pace with the methods of science.

THE Soudan is so called from the Arabic word Belad-ez-Suden, "the land of the blacks."

ABSOLUTELY PURE

A SHARK HUNTER.

The Sport of Ancient Hawaiian Kings Revived.

There was probably no man among the natives who inhabited the Hawaiian village at the World's Exposition who attracted more attention, individually, than Kohana Maka, the farfamed diver, long-distance swimmer and shark hunter of the Hawaiian Islands, remarks the San Francisco Chronicle.

It is said of Kohana that he can remain under water for from three to four minutes with ease, while there is absolutely nothing in the way of swimming that he cannot do.

He was not able to kill any sharks in the pool for the simple reason that there was not any there, but such arrangements were made as to enable him to show how it was done. This matter of shark hunting was a great national sport in the time of ancient kings of Hawaii. Then it was the custom when great feasts were held to celebrate victories to fling the mutilated carcasses of slaughtered foeman into the sea on purpose to attract the great man-eaters to the spot where the sports were to be held. Then a chief would dive into the midst of them, knife in hand, and rising beneath one of the monsters he would with one slashing sweep of his weapon directed at the shark's belly fairly lay it open. Kohana went "through the motion" of doing this in a very realistic way at the exposition and also performed any number of aquatic feats.

Drilling for the Kaiser.

One of the most useful, as it certainly is one of the most interesting of all the exercises in the German army is the swimming and diving drill as it is practiced at the military swimming baths during the summer months. It is compulsory only on the pioneers, but privates of all arms are encouraged to practice it by small money prizes and prospective promotion. The diving takes place from a considerable height. The men taking part in it are clothed in uniforms of the oldest and least valuable description, and accoutred with dummy kits of precisely similar size and weight to their ordinary equipments.

Under the direction of the military swimming-master the men mount the steps leading to the diving-platform in rotation, and at the word of command each takes a header. After a more or less prolonged interval the pioneer private bobs up serenely, and generally without having lost his helmet or rifle and without having disarranged his accoutrements, strikes out across the bath for the landing stage. The pioneers are also instructed in the towing of piles, stakes, baulks of timber and trunks of trees into position for bridge construction.

Drain Tile.

This is the time of year to lay down the drain tile. A single tile across a wet field may add 50 per cent. value to the land. The proper way to tile the land is to have it surveyed, so as to be sure of the level of the soil, and use the tile wherever draining is necessary. The spring will find the tiled land dry when other portions of the farm are too wet to plow.

Reforming the Men.

Anna Jenness Miller, who travels around telling women how they should dress, is headed this way. No one ever considers it of enough moment to go around lecturing to the men on how they should fasten up their socks and keep their pants legs down.—Atchison Globe.

The Proper View.

"I used to feel a little mean at robbin' the beehives," said the tender-hearted farmer, "but sence I got to thinkin' it over I see that I am doing 'em good. Ef it wa'nt fer me takin' the honey all them bees would be out of work all next summer."—Indianapolis Journal.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

Another One Gone Right.

"GENTLEMEN: Regarding prospects for the coming year, I would say, we hope to double our last year's output of Aermotors, or, at least, as we have done in the past, put up four out of every twenty-five windmills that are sold. Since commencing the sale in 1888, WE HAVE SOLD ABOUT

500 AERMOTORS

We do not attribute this fairly good record entirely to our efforts, but to the superiority of the goods which you manufacture. BUSSIN & DAVIS, Urbana, Ill., February 18, 1895."

GENTLEMEN: We bought and put up Aermotor No. 2, out of the first fifty which you made we had thirteen. Since that time we have sold about

400 AERMOTORS

In our small territory is represented the history of the Aermotor and the Aermotor Company from the beginning to the present hour. That history is one of unbroken success. Aside from the Aermotor there have been but few windmills put up in our territory, enough with which to show the infinite superiority of the Aermotor in design, finish (all galvanized steel), and ability to run when all others stand idle for want of wind. We should have sold more, supplied with wind power, but, it being only 65 miles away, has been the battle ground for ten or twelve of the strongest windmill companies, all being located within 30 miles of us. HAS COME FROM OTHER UNSATISFACTORY AERMOTORS. You may have during the past year surpassed any previous year's record by about one-half, and just as sure as the sun rises you expect to double your output for our portion of it the coming year. Count on us the Aermotor never stood further above all competitors in merit than now and in fact than to-day. SAUNDERS & BARNEY, Kansas City, Mo., February 25, 1895."

Our next Aermotor ad. will be of pumps. We shall offer the three way force pump. All dealers should have it or use and to sell at that price. All Aermotor men will have it. The world following will appear our advertisement of galvanized steel tanks at 2½ cents per gallon. They neither shrink, leak, nor make water taste bad. Aermotor Co., Chicago.

To-morrow—Which To morrow?

Why do you delay? You are likely to be worse to-morrow than to-day, for there is be no standing still of nature or of sickness when fastened on the system. A chronic headache, dull pain at the base of the brain, frequent darting pains through the body or steady backache, pain or burning sensation in stomach after meals, specks before the eyes, frequent dizziness, heart palpitation, loss of memory, difficulty in fixing mind on your work, listlessness, lack of usual ambition, worn out, all run down feeling, sleeplessness—which is it? No matter which, but yor feel the warning nature sends over the nerve telegraph system of your body when repairs are needed on the line.

Delay to heed the message increases the damage to be repaired. Dr. Wheeler Nerve Vitalizer repairs, restrengthens and restores lost nerve force. It is so made that it cannot fail to help any and all nerve diseases—and nine-tenths of diseases are or are attended by nerve troubles. Dr E. Greenamyer, East Palestine, Ohio, says that Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer has been remarkably effective in cases which have come under his observation. It can be relied upon to be always effective as represented to restore lost or weakened nerve force and bring back full healthful vigor." Sold by Davenport. 14-17

Obituary.

Enoch Garman was born in Lehigh Co Pa., Jan. 28, 1824 and died at his home near Collingwood Allen Co. Ind, March 27, 1895. In early life his father moved to Seneca Co. Ohio, and in 1846 he moved to his present home, and in 1850 he was married to Mary Warner. A family of eleven children survives him.

Saturday's Daily:

JAMES H. UMBER.

Word came up town this morning that Mr. Umber was dead, having passed away last night. It had been known that for some time past he was in delicate health. Mr. Umber was born in Clinton Co. N. Y. June 11, 1833, making his age 61 yrs. 9 mos. 14 days. He moved to Berea, Ohio, near Cleveland, and was married to Mary Brown, who with their two only children, the sons Albert and Udelmore survive him. Later they moved to Jackson Mich. and in the spring of 1877 came to Auburn which has since been their home. The funeral will be held at the residence on west 9 h street, Monday at 2:30 p. m. services by Revs. J. D. Brosy and F. W. Hart.

Read it in the Paper.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., Iowa, who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Ft. Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own: "It cured me right up" He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 14 17

Cures permanently.

Our better halves say they could not keep house without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is used in more than half the homes in Leeds. Sim Bros., Leeds, Iowa. This shows the esteem in which that remedy is held where it has been sold for years and is well known. Mothers have learned that there is nothing so good for colds, croup and whooping cough, that it cures these ailments quickly and permanently, and that it is pleasant and safe for children to take. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 14-17

No Better Liniment Made.

I recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm for the rheumatism, lame back, sprains and swellings. There is no better liniment made. I have sold over 100 bottles of it this year and all were pleased who used it. J. F Pierson, druggist, South Chicago, Ill. It is for sale by Robbins and McCord. 14 17

$500 Will be Given

A Household Treasure.

D. W. Fuller, of Canajoharie, N. Y, says that he always keeps Dr. King's New Discovery in the house and his family has always found the very best results follow its use; that he would not be without it, if procurable. G. A. Dykeman, druggist, Catskill, N. Y., says that Dr. King's New Discovery is undoubtedly the best cough remedy; that he has used it in his family for eight years, and it has never failed to do all that is claimed for it. Why not try a remedy so long tried and tested. Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1. 3

Had Killed 'Em Off.

Tuesday's Daily:—

The pupils in Miss Servoss' department in the school, are required to write compositions,—an excellent plan, by the way—and last week, these compositions had to be "stories." The length had to be 500 words. They could write about "boys," or about "girls" or about both. Paul Wooton wrote about "both" and had his story finished and the last chapter properly closed in due time, and brought it to his teacher. She made the remark that it was "all right, except as to length" for Paul admitted it contained only about 200 words. She asked him to make it longer, but he objected, and finally said he couldn't. After a little argument over the matter, the teacher asked, "But why can't you?" She received a clincher for an answer, Well, you see I can't because both of 'em are dead." He had killed off both hero and heroine in the most approved and deadly fashion.

IN MEMORIAM.

One of the old settlers of De Kalb has passed away. Anthony Dodge, father of Mrs. B. F. Blair, died at home in Newville, March 15, 1895. He was born in Madison county, New York, June 24, 1805, his age being 89 years, 8 months and 21 days. He was married to Abigail Thomas, November 7, 1836. She was a sister to Rev. Ladd Thomas, a well-known pioneer. Five children were born to them, all of whom survive. Mrs. Dodge died, December 20, 1866. A few years later he was married. But in a few years was again bereaved, since which he has made his home in the family of B. F. Blair. He lived here since 1839, 57 years He came to this county in October 1838 and was more or less identified with its interests. He was one of the many who have preceded him to the spirit land who endured the privations of pioneer life in a wilderness with a small family to provide for and encounter the hardships that were so prevalent in this county in those days. But he bore them bravely and lived to a good old age. A few years ago that dreaded monster (cancer) preyed upon his worn out frame and wore his life away. His friends, neighbors and relatives were all good and kind to him. Everything that could possibly be done for his comfort was done, but could not battle against the decree that had gone forth from on high, saying "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter the joys of thy Lord." Last Friday morning about six o'clock his spirit took its flight and winged its way to the blissful land where pain nor death are feared no more.

His funeral took place on last Saturday, the 17th, at the M. E. church, at Newville, of which deceased was a member, conducted by Rev. Whatman, and he was laid to rest in the Newville cemetery, followed by a large concourse of neighbors and friends.

All the relatives of deceased desire to express their heartfelt thanks to all their neighbors and friends who so kindly tendered their services during the sickness, death and burial of their beloved father.

THE FAMILY.

A Traveling Man.

Mr. B. C. Wolfe, of Washington, Mo., writes that after taking Drummond's Lightning remedy for rheumatism for one week, the pain had almost left him entirely. He slept better, had no more night sweats, and appetite was good He also wrote that he would not take $100 for what the remedy had done for him. There is no waiting weeks and months to get satisfaction. The remedy attacks the disease at once. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co, 48 Maiden Lane New York, and the full month's treatment of two large bottles will be sent to you by return express. Agents wanted. 14-15

WANTED !!

DAVID SHEAR BY MARSHAL OF ANTWERP OHIO.

Marshal Baker Gets him at the Junction last Night.

Marshal Baker received a letter, from O. S. Applegate, marshal, of Antwerp, yesterday giving the description of David Shear, whom he says had broken jail about two weeks ago, but did not state where. It was first thought he was at West Unity, and the marshal of that place said he probably was at Auburn Junction as he had some relations there who he thought, "was not what they might be." It seems there is a house at the Junction known as the Robbins house, and has a bad reputation. Mr. Baker had a confidential friend who had been about the Junction at nights and he had noticed a gentleman enter the house quite frequently between ten and eleven o'clock. Mr. Baker gave the description of the man and it seemed to fit him. Mr. Baker laid for him last evening and about eleven o'clock he entered the house and he was there arrested, and brought to Auburn and placed in jail, This morning Marshal Baker telegraphed to Antwerp that he had the man.

Later: Marshal Applegate arrived in town on the 12:25 B. & O. train to-day and in company with Mr. Baker they went to the jail. Mr. Applegate, at once saw that it was not the man wanted. We were not able to learn his name. He was let out of the jail at once and went on his way rejoicing.

The man wanted broke out of the Paulding county jail. He had been given a hearing and could not give bail and was sent to jail. He claimed it was making him sick to be in the jail and he was let out to carry wood, etc, when he took to his heels and ran.

AN OLD FRIEND CALLS.

Benjamin Wise, of Troy township, dropped in to day to see the publisher, but was sorry to learn he was not in the city. He came over to pay his taxes and attend to some other matters. In a conversation the reporter had with Mr. Wise he related his late experience with three masked men who entered his residence last Friday night. The same gang also visited the home of Thomas Leason. It seems that while Mr. Leason and wife were sitting quietly at their home, the men entered the house and presented revolvers and demanded his money. Mr. Leason was not quick to respond when they commenced beating him and continued until he gave them $20. They then went to the home of Mr. Wise and entered the house in the same way, and as the family had all gone to bed except his daughter, they told her they would not harm her if she kept still and then proceeded to his room and made him give them $5. Mr. Wise says he is going to have the fellows caught if it costs half he is worth. He said it was not a very pleasant scene to wake up and see two men holding revolvers at him.

DIDN'T WANT TO BE POLITE.

And He wasn't Ashamed to Acknowelge it.

Queer things happen on railway trains. One is continually jostling against odd specimens of humanity. Yesterday some ladies took the south bound train at the west Seventh street station on their way to Ft. Wayne. Two of them got a seat together, but the third was obliged to take a seat on the opposite side of the aisle. But, sitting in front of the two, was an old gentleman. He waited a little and then seemed to have thought that perhaps the third lady would like a seat nearer to the others. So he got up, turned his seat over, so it would face the two, invited the third lady to take, it and he then went forward and took a seat near the door. The ladies, were, of course duly thankful for his politeness and fore-thought, and were soon engaged in conversation, when suddenly the old gent left his place, came back and spoke confidentially to the third lady, then returned to his seat near the front. Of course the other two ladies wanted to know what he said, and went into a convulsion of laughter when they heard it. He had came back to explain to her "I did not do this for politeness, but for the reason that I wanted to be near the front end of the car, in case anything should happen" Having thus eased his conscience, he returned to his place, and came no more. It will strike the average reader that his frankness was of an uncommon sort.

Much for Little.

We cannot refrain from further mention of that most beautiful of all monthly publications, Sarony's Living Pictures. It is so highly meritorious and so fitly calculated to afford to its possessor the greatest amount of entertainment for the smallest outlay, that we are doing our readers a kindness in again calling their attention to it. Compared with its real worth, its cost, 25 cents, is but a trifle.

THAT'S QUEER!

You say a collar and cuff that are waterproof?

Yes.

And perspiration will not affect them?

Yes.

And when dirty you need only wipe them off with a wet cloth or sponge?

Yes.

Wonderful! How are they made?

A linen collar covered on both sides with waterproof "CELLULOID." Looks exactly like a linen collar.

Is it the only waterproof collar and cuff made?

No, but it is the only one made with the linen interlining and consequently the only one that can give entire satisfaction, because it is the best.

How can I know that I get the right kind?

Because every piece is stamped as follows:

TRADE CELLULOID MARK.

Inquire for that and refuse anything else, or you will be disappointed.

Suppose my dealer does not have them?

He probably has, but if not, send direct to us, enclosing amount. Collars 25c., Cuffs 50c. State size, and whether collar wanted is stand-up or turned-down.

SAY : :

HOW MUCH DO YOU OWE?

Who holds your mortgage? How much interest are you paying? Do you owe a building loan association anything? If you do, how much interest are you paying them? Unless you are better posted than the majority of people who have such loans, you cannot tell. You think you are paying 6 per cent. Do you know (of course not) that you are paying at least 12 per cent. If you think not, just figure it out yourself. Now then, are you not paying 6 per cent interest and 6 per cent premium? Certainly. Well now don't you know that premium and interest are the same thing—its all interest. Can you afford to pay 12 per cent interest to a loan association when even your banks only charge 8 per cent and you think they are charging too much, and when do you expect to have your loan canceled or paid off in full? You have been told 72 or 78 months. Now then, we undertake to say that it will take you 100 months, if you will call on us we will show you so you will be satisfied that we are right. Now then, we are prepared to loan you money on monthly installment plan for 8 per cent, we charge you no membership fee and you do not have to make three or more payments in advance so that if on account of insufficient security or bad title your loan is rejected you will not lose one cent. You pay nothing unless your loan is granted. We are making farm loans at from 3 to 5 per cent with privilege of partial payments.

ANOTHER THING!

There is scarcely a day but what there is some traveling agent for some building loan association in Auburn soliciting business, selling stock upon which they charge you a membership fee of from 50 cents to $1.00 per share, which amount goes to the agent and you never get back this money thrown away. If you will call on us we will take your application for all the stock you want in the BEST (we can prove it) building loan association in the state the INDIANA MUTUAL OF INDIANAPOLIS, and charge you NO MEMBERSHIP FEE AT ALL. This is certainly fair. If you have any investment stock in any association just write them a letter and ask them the withdrawal value of same, their reply will probably open your eyes. What would you say if you would deposit $8.00 per month in your bank for one year and wanted to withdraw the same and they would offer to pay you only about $80? The bank would only have to do this in one case to be compelled to retire from business. Now you pay ten dollars membership fee and 8 dollars for 12 months making 108 dollars, you lose the 10 dollars membership fee and 10 cents per share each month for expenses, making 12 dollars, or a total of 22 dollars loss upon which you would receive 6 per cent interest for average time on 96 dollars, making 2 dollars and 88 cts. from 22 dollars would leave you a loser of 19 dollars and 12 cents. In our association your stock is worth all you have paid in, with its interest added, so that upon withdrawal you do not get less than you paid. We want the people of Auburn to become familiar with this matter, and would like to have any that are interested to call and talk with us, we can give you some pointers.

We are still in the Real Estate, Insurance and R. R. Ticket business.

VERY BOLD!

Three South Side Business Places Robbed.

Nill's Grocery, Leighty & McNabb's Meat Market and Frederick's Saloon.

No Clue as Yet to the Robbers But is Supposed to be Home Talent.

Friday's Daily:

The south side was again visited by burglars last night. This time they visited three places, viz., Nill's grocery, Leighty & McNabb's meat market and Frederick's saloon. Judging from the way they gained an entrance, the burglars were quite familiar with the places visited. It is not known at what time the deed was done, nor how many persons were in the gang. Which place was entered first is not known but it is supposed that it was the saloon. They did not get any money there, and then tried the other places. They gained an entrance to the saloon by taking out a pane of glass in one of the rear windows. They did not get any money in the saloon, but took about four gallons of liquor, 150 or 200 cigars and a lot of tools that were used in the saloon, such as a hatchet, mallet, chisels, etc. A trunk belonging to a Mr. Wood was also broken open. It only contained an Oddfellow's regalia. This was not disturbed, however, any further than the breaking of the lock. In leaving the saloon they unlocked the back door and passed out.

Nill's grocery stood adjoining the saloon. It was next visited. Here they first tried to get in the back window but failed and then took a knife and cut a hole in the panel of the back door, reached in and unlocked it. It was also bolted by two crosspieces. These they were able to reach and hence made their entrance quite easy. About $1.50 in small change was taken, tobacco, pipes, cigars, perhaps two dozen cans of fruit, a few pairs of ladies' hose, most of Mr. Nill's fishing tackle and a hat belonging to his clerk, Artie Beaty. This was about all there was missed in the grocery when the reporter visited it, but they expected they would find other articles later on that had disappeared.

Leighty & McNabb's meat market seemed to be less fortunate at the hands of the robbers. Here they raised the south window. It was nailed down, but they forced it up and crawled in. They broke the money drawer open but only got about fifty pennies. Then they left the room by opening the back door and walking out.

It is thought by the proprietors of the places visited that the work was done by parties who are acquainted with their places of business. And it is true that they thoroughly understood the situation.

Sheriff Stroh and his deputies were out a few hours this forenoon but found no trace of the men. One man was taken from a box car on the Lake Shore local. He was searched but they found nothing on his person and let him go. They say that the burglars probably took the Wabash train west this morning and so they went to the Junction but no persons got off there. They took a drive this afternoon but we have not been able to learn if any clue was found or not.

The Maccabees.

Last evening, was the public evening, or rather the entertainment of the ladies of the Maccabees. It was held in the pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. Parrett in the Gandy building. The attendance was mostly members of the order and their families, with a few invited guests. There was first, a literary program, begun by a duet by Ivy and Pres. Wilcox on mandolin and guitar, and followed by a very able prayer by Mrs. Trover. Mrs Henry Mader recited a poem in excellent taste, and this was followed by another piece by Ivy and Pres. Wilcox, Mrs. Small read excellently, a choice selection, and so also, did Mrs. John Keeran. This was followed by a vocal solo by Miss Maude Trover. She has a remarkably fine voice, and has it well under control. Mrs. W. I. McClellan read a choice selection in a very effective manner, and this closed the literary part of the program. Mrs. John Picker was in charge of the program here announced that a lunch was next in order. It was a very fine one, including ice cream, cake, coffee, etc. The occasion will be pleasantly remembered by the fortunate 95 who were present. Mrs. Alva Potter has thanks of the COURIER folks for an invitation to enjoy the meeting.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

OUR NEWSBOYS.

THREE INTELLIGENT LADS WITH A PRETTY DELICATE JOB ON HAND.

SOMETHING new under the sun, is the presence of newsboys on the streets of Auburn, and it gives our town rather a citified air. At 5 p. m. they come rushing in, fresh from their studies at school, and ready to make a brisk run to every part of town. Each street has customers for them and their arrival is looked for at that hour, with as much interest as the bread wagon or the milk man. And it is a pleasure to see with what eagerness the little paper is caught up and read. It is becoming a household necessity, and though it is but little more than a month old, if it should suddenly "shuffle off its mortal coil," it would be greatly missed. People who take it are also kind enough to call attention to it of the neighbors who have not yet become regular subscribers, and in this way a new subscriber is often secured, and in this way the friends of the paper materially assist in keeping up the circulation. We said the boys are intelligent lads. Intelligence is essential for a newsboy, and we are pleased to know that the lads have done their work well. Of course, it has now and then happened that a patron has been missed, or that a paper left outside when no one was home, has been blown away and lost. But this has not occurred often, and in all cases, the carriers took extra pains that it should not happen again. So, we have heard but few complain. There is a "business end" to their duties, also, for on Saturday evening on taking out the last issue of the week, they have the very important duty of making the weekly collection of ten cents. This is the life blood of a daily for the hands and other expenses, must be cared for each week. We are gratified to see how many of our patrons, religiously lay aside the needed dime, to hand to the newsbody Saturday evening. The boys feel as happy over its receipt as if it were a dollar. At present, we have the same carriers we began with, viz, the manager, Harry Trentman and his helpers, Paul Wooton and Frank Walter. But our readers are already acquainted with them and no further introduction is needed.

GIBBS PLOW CO.

SHALL WE HAVE A BRANCH ESTABLISHMENT AT AUBURN?

Thursday's Daily:

One of the original members of the Gibbs Plow Co has been here a day or two and has been talking to our business men about the chance of locating a plant at this place. He is especially impressed with the convenience of the various railroads at this place, giving facilities for sending goods away in six different directions and with the least possible expense of drayage. He would probably want a small bonus at the start, but would guarantee to employ about thirty men from the first. Our people would do well to investigate this newest proposition to add to our manufacturing interests.

He is a son of the Gibbs who first started the business at Canton, Ohio, and has been in the business twenty-five years. It might also be mentioned that he is a man of means, so that abundant capital will be at hand if the plant is started.

An Odd Journal.

The oddest journal in the metropolis is the so-called newspaper published by the Mongolians of Mott street, New York. It is written with a camel's hair pencil upon vermillion paper, and is pasted upon the wall of No. 16 of that thoroughfare, and on the two telegraph poles which stand between Chatham Square and Fell street. All day long it is read and studied by almond-eyed crowds. Even in the evening a belated laundryman can be seen running his eyes over its tea-chest characters. The editors are called scribes, and write at the order of their customers, charging a good figure for their skill and brush. The favorite editor is said to make as high as $20 00 a day; but, beyond his editorial work, he writes cards and prayer tickets for his customers.

One feature of this journal is commendable. If one of their members is thrown out of employment, he puts up a notice to that effect, and every other member assists him.

JOHN NICHOLS DEAD.

Mrs. Swineford and her sister, Mrs. Forkner, received a telegram Monday morning, that their brother, John Nichols had died suddenly at his home between Newville and Hicksville. They at once went down there and remained till the burial which was on Tuesday. Mr. Nichols had a severe sickness about two years ago, and had not been very robust since. But at this time, he was not sick long, but it proved to be neuralgia which suddenly went to his heart. He was a man highly regarded for many good qualities.

Saturday's Daily.

More Robbers!

This Time the L. S. Depot is Robbed.

The Money Drawer Relieved of $14,73.

And as Usual no Clue to the Robbers.

Between eleven and twelve o'clock today the Lake Shore depot was broken into by some unknown persons and relieved of its money. A number of boys were playing ball just south of the depot and saw two men walking around there, and later one of them went into the depot while the other remained outside and pretended to be washing his hands. The boys knew nothing of the robbery, of course and did not pay much attention to them. Ed. Rommes, who generally does the ticket selling went home to dinner and when he returned found both outside windows to the office open. When he entered he also found that the money drawer had broken open and the money taken out, amounting in all to $14.73 in hard money. It is not known how they got into the office as the door was locked and also the windows. But it is supposed they had a key that fit the door. The reporter being there to meet the 12:29 train, he immediately came down town and notified Deputies Platter and Small who at once began to look for the fellows. They were also accompanied by one of Mr. Refner's boys who was playing ball and thought he could identify them.

Up to the time we go to press no one has been captured.

Later: As we go to press we learn that the two men have been caught over at Garrett. They are held there on suspicion and Deputy Sheriff Platter is over there. But it is not certain yet whether they are the right men.

He is Needed Here

Prof. O. W. Nottingham was here yesterday. Our people will remember him as the very efficient teacher of penmanship who had classes here a few years ago. Lately he has been teaching half the time in the schools of Coldwater, and the other half in the schools at Van Wert Ohio. We are glad to hear that our people are talking up the matter of getting him to devote a half of his time to the Auburn schools. This would be money well spent. The two things of greatest value to a person, are an ability to read well and an ability to write a good, plain hand. But we are aware that many teachers cannot, at least do not, teach these two branches well. This fact has compelled all the most thorough graded schools to employ specialists for these two branches. Our board is now seriously considering the same thing. If we do not feel able to get a half of his time, we might at least put the work under his supervision, following an outline of work, such as he is abundantly able to prepare. We have excellent teaching in the main, but we feel that these two branches should receive more attention. Let us try on the penmanship now, and perhaps later we can do something for correct reading.

Fatal Runaway.

Yesterday afternoon Eugene Aldrich, who resides at Pleasant Lake, started to drive to Angola, having his wife and child with him. A little north the fatal crossing on the railroad, where Mrs Anthony was killed by a train a few years ago, his horse took fright at the train and ran away. Mrs. Aldrich was thrown out with such violence that she was picked up in a helpless condition, and her husband got her into the buggy and held her in his arms and drove home two miles, but she expired just as he got home. There seems to be a fatality about that crossing. The sad news of Mrs. Aldrich death reached here this forenoon, in a letter to Doc Hendrickson.

For Marshal.

A week or two ago, we mentioned the names of those who had so far expressed an intention of coming out for marshal. They were Ed. Metcalf John Picker and Charles Reesch. Now, we have authority for statement that G. A. Mader, is being urged as a candidate for the place. Mr. Mader is a man well known to all our people, and one highly regarded. He is a careful and safe business man and has many qualities to commend him to the voters and taxpayers. Our people should get a list of these names and study them over carefully. Remember one of the caucuses comes off next Thursday evening.

PROMPT PAYMENT.

W. H. Kuhn assistant Supt. of Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. was at Garrett Tuesday and paid the first lost in this district. It is doing good business and is the leading company.

The Decision of the Supreme Court Will Decrease the Income Tax One-half—Japanese Getting Ready to Assault Canton—Terrible Explosion in a Coal Mine—A Father Murders His Son.

NULL AND VOID.

Such is Certain Portions of the Income Tax Law.

The anxiously waited-for decision of the United States supreme court in the income tax case was rendered Monday by Chief Justice Fuller. The court knocked out the law so far as it taxed incomes derived from rents and also from state, county and municipal bonds are concerned. By a tie vote of the court the law was sustained in other respects.

The effect of the supreme court decision on the income tax law so far as the treasury department officials can determine after a hurried estimate, will be a reduction of about one-half in the revenue originally estimated as obtainable from that source, thus making the annual revenue to be expected about $15,000,000. The original estimate of $30,000,000 per year was based on the assumption that the law would be held to be constitutional in all its provisions. Collectors of internal revenue will be notified of the decision and instructed to make whatever corrections may be necessary to conform with the decision, in the blank forms furnished them by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. No new forms will be issued, and the work of preparation for the collection of the tax will proceed without delay.

TEN ARE DEAD.

Another Frightful Mine Explosion.

A special dispatch from New Whatcom, Wash., says: News of a terrible explosion in the Blue Canon coal mine has reached here. There were twenty-five or thirty men in the mine at the time of the explosion. Ten dead bodies have been taken out up to the time the word was sent, and it is supposed that the rest of the miners have met death.

The mine is on Lake Whatcom, nearly ten miles from Whatcom. Every effort is being put forth to rescue the imprisoned men. A steamer has left New Whatcom with Superintendent John Donovan, two company physicians and other doctors for the scene of the disaster. A corps of miners also accompanied the expedition and the work of rescue will be begun at once. The mine was inspected a few weeks ago and pronounced safe. There is no telegraph communication from this city to the mine and the telephone wires are down, owing to the explosion.

No Faith in Banks.

The other night five masked men entered the home of Jonathan Stiles, a wealthy farmer, living thirteen miles northeast of Sidney, Ohio, with the intention of robbery. Two of them covered the younger members of the family with revolvers and the other three bound and gagged Mr. Stiles. He fought bitterly, and only gave up when he found it necessary to save his life. They then started to ransack the house, but were frightened away before getting anything, the little son having slipped over to a neighbor and given the alarm. Mr. Stiles was seriously beaten over the head. The robbers evidently knew Mr. Stiles' disposition, for he is known to keep large sums of money at his home, not having much faith in banks.

No Extra Session.

The President, on being asked whether, in view of the decision of the supreme court on the income tax law, an extra session of Congress would be called, said that neither he nor the Secretary of the Treasury saw any necessity for such action and unless there was an unexpected change in conditions, he had no idea Congress would meet again before the time appointed for its regular session.

Vessels Collide.

The schooner Josiah R. Smith collided with the steamer Lone Star, at Vineyard Haven, Mass., and was sunk. She had 1,000 tons of coal from Baltimore for Boston. The Smith's crew were rescued. She was valued at $30,000 with but little insurance. The Lone Star was considerably damaged, but was prevented from sinking by a water-tight bulkhead.

Two Mangled Corpses.

The bodies of two well-dressed men, who are believed to have been William Merchant and James E. Lutton of East Liverpool, Ohio, were found lying by the side of the railway at Ashland, Ohio, in a badly mangled condition. It is impossible to tell how they happened to have been killed, and there are suggestions of foul play.

Planning an Attack.

Hong Kong special: Forty Japanese transports are anchored off the Pescadore Island. It is rumored that an attack upon Canton is contemplated. Torpedoes have been placed in the river for the defense of the city.

May Soon Secure Peace.

Yokohama special: Native papers state that peace negotiations are likely to be concluded this week. Seven of the eight conditions imposed on China by Japan have already been settled.

Troops for Cuba.

The Spanish steamer Ignacio De Loyola, conveying 1,100 soldiers to reinforce the government troops in the island of Cuba has arrived at Havana.

Death of Gov. Marvil.

The illness of Gov. Marvil of Delaware, terminated in his death at 9:15 Tuesday night.

Murders His Own Son.

John Stephens, a farmer residing in Marion Township, Noble County, Ohio, murdered his son by striking him on the head with a club. The son refused to give his father two dollars upon demand and this led to the crime.

Fell on Some Scissors.

The 5-year-old son of David Bepler, while playing with a pair of scissors at the home of his parents, near Flat Rock, Ind., fell on the point of the scissors, which penetrated his brain. He will die.

Express Train Held Up.

Five men stopped a Rock Island train near Dover, I. T., and made a desperate attempt to secure the contents of the safe in the express car. Express Messenger Jones bravely refused to open the door, and was shot through the door, sustaining a serious wound. The robbers went through the cars, which were well filled with passengers, and compelled them to empty their pocket-books, securing in this way about $350, six watches, two diamond rings, and other articles of value. After getting all the passengers had, they apologized with the remark that times were hard, and made their escape. They neglected to go through the sleeper.

A posse of determined citizens of Kingfisher, under the direction of Deputy United States Marshal Madsen, mounted upon horses capable of standing a protracted chase, are now in hot pursuit of the train robbers and but an hour and a half behind them. The railroad authorities at Kingfisher are positive that they know two of the robbers and they expect soon to have all in custody.

UNDER WALLS.

Many Lives Lost by an Explosion at New Orleans.

An explosion of powder took place in a ship chandlery establishment run by Charles Salathe, New Orleans. The store was located in a three-story building which was completely destroyed. Salathe, together, with his wife, one child, three servants and a clerk were caught in the falling walls and killed. A saloon run by Emile Bonlet, situated next door, was crushed by the tumbling ruins and five or six fishermen, who were in the place at the time, were buried in the debris, together with several persons who were sleeping up stairs over the saloon. The ruins caught fire, but the fire department soon succeeded in extinguishing the flames, and the search for bodies was commenced. Two children belonging to the Salathe family, who, fortunately, were in a portion of the building remote from their parents, were saved.

As no sound can be heard from the ruins, those buried are supposed to be dead. A late estimate of the killed places the number at fifteen.

The force of the explosion was terrible. Drivers were hurled from their vehicles and the wares on the market stands across the street were blown to the four winds.

The explosion is thought to have been caused by gun powder, twenty or thirty pounds of which was always kept on hand by Salathe for sale to hunters and fishermen who makes their headquarters in the neighborhood of the French market.

A CLASH.

Desperate Battle Between Strikers and Workmen.

One of the most desperate street fights ever seen in Muncie, Ind., occurred the other evening between employes of the Indiana Iron Company. About thirty men were engaged, and one, Roy Parkey, foreman of the cutting department at the mill, was probably fatally injured. The trouble was caused by ten heavers who struck for an advance in wages. This was refused, and the men were given their time. They tried to induce the other men to go on a strike with them, but were unsuccessful, and they then went to a saloon across the street from the mill, and waited until the change of shifts was made. When the men from the nut and bolt department came through the gates, they were set upon by the strikers and horribly beaten. Stones and clubs were used, and had it not been for the intervention of peaceful citizens the melee would have involved 500 men, and great loss of life would have resulted. The fight lasted almost an hour, and when it was over Parkey was found in an unconscious condition. He had been beaten and trampled upon until he was a bleeding, pulpy mass, and his recovery is hardly possible.

Stole $50,000.

Assistant Cashier Frederick Griffin of the Northwestern National Bank at the corner of La Salle and Adams streets, Chicago, walked into the vault where the money is kept recently, and took therefrom a package containing $50,000 in currency. Another employe saw him come out and noticed he was ill at ease. After thinking the matter over all night, he went to Vice President Drummer's residence and related what he had seen. On being questioned about the occurrence, Griffin made a full confession, although there was at the time not the slightest particle of evidence against him, beyond the suspicion of his fellow clerk. Bank Examiner McKeon was at once called in and an examination showed the books had been tampered with so as to cover the amount missing, the peculations extending over a period of six months. Griffin took the money in a vain effort to conceal his crime from the bank officials.

His Reply Evasive.

Madrid special: Admiral Beranger, Minister of Marine, in the Chamber of Deputies, replying to a question as to whether or not the commander of the warship Conde de Venaditto, which fired on the American steamship Alliance off cape Maysi, had been tried by a Court-martial and cashiered, denied the report. He said that the commanding officer of the Conde de Venaditto was not in Cadiz at the time of the trouble between the Spanish warship and the American steamship, and that in reality the first officer of the Conde de Venaditto was in command of the vessel. The question asked Admiral Beranger is similar to that asked of Senor Castellanos, Minister of the Colonies—a question that Senor Castellanos declined to answer.

The news received here that bands of insurgents have appeared in the center of the Island of Cuba is disquieting, as it was thought that the rebellion was confined to the eastern coast.

A Mine Disaster.

Prescott (Ariz.) special: A courier has arrived here bringing meagre details of an explosion of giant powder in the Ohio mine of the Mescal Mining and Milling company. Five men were working in a drift where 100 pounds of giant powder was stored. Three men had been rescued, seriously injured, when the courier left. James Newlin, the foreman of the mine, was the most seriously hurt. The explosion caused a cave of 100 or more tons of rock, and whether the other two men were killed and buried beneath the debris or in the drift behind the cave-in of rock could not be determined when the messenger left. The miners set at work immediately to remove the rock from the drift to reach the imprisoned or buried men. The mine is situated ten miles from Prescott.

Fatal Railroad Wreck.

At Whigville, a small station four miles from Zanesville, Ohio, on the Bellaire, Zanesville & Cincinnati railway, an awful wreck took place recently. A coach on the west bound passenger train jumped the track just before reaching a trestle which spans a small stream. The structure is built on a curve, and the coach after running along the ties until almost across it, dragged the engine from the rails and the trestle went down. The engineer was instantly killed and the fireman fatally injured. The engineer was Eli Lucas of Zanesville. A wife and several children survive him.

Nicaragua Canal Commission.

The president has selected under the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation bill the following persons as a board to investigate and report upon the feasibility, permanence and expense of the Nicaraguan canal on the route proposed by the construction company: From the army, Maj. William Ludlow, corps of engineers; from the navy, Commander U. T. Endicott, civil engineer, and from civil life, Alfred Noble, of Chicago, member of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

Fasted Forty Days.

Mrs. Henry Burgess of Hebron, Ind., died recently. She had been bedfast for over eight weeks, and for forty days she was unable to take any nourishment. During all this time she only drank a cupful of water. Her case baffled the skill of numerous physicians who were called to attend her. Before she was taken sick she weighed 180 pounds, but at her death she weighed only 65 pounds.

A Schooner and Crew Lost.

Gloucester (Mass.) special: The schooner Mildred V. Lee, one of the staunchest vessels of the New England fishing fleet, with a crew of sixteen men, is now to be added to the already large number of Gloucester's lost fishermen. She sailed from this port on a fresh halibut fishing trip to the Great Banks January 30, and it is supposed was lost in the great storm of February 8.

Fatally Burned.

Fire broke out in George Hubbard's residence at Corunna, Mich. Mr. Hubbard succeeded in rescuing his wife and one child uninjured. Then he went back to rescue his other child, who slept on the second floor. The house was all ablaze, and Hubbard was gone so long that his friends rushed in to find him. They stumbled over his inanimate form at the foot of the stairs, and dragged him and the child out. The child was safe, because Hubbard had wrapped the little one in a flannel blanket, but Hubbard himself was insensible from smoke, and so fearfully burned that he cannot possibly recover. His hands and arms were literally charred in keeping the flames away from the blanket wrapped around the little one.

Attempt to Rob a Treasurer's Office.

The door in the vault in the County Treasurer's office at Elyria, Ohio, was plugged with nitro glycerine the other night by robbers, who then attached a fuse. The floor was covered with half a dozen horse blankets. The outer door and window had been forced and a complete kit of tools was found near the vault, which contained $17,000. The fuse appeared to have been lighted. The Sheriff telegraphed for an expert to open the vault, being afraid that the nitro glycerine will explode if tampered with.

Frightful Fate of a Lad.

Eddie Coy, 10 years old, was literally torn to pieces at a sawmill, in Fairfield, Ohio. He and a playmate were under a rapidly revoling shaft about 7 feet above them. A rope was being used by the boys to pull themselves up and lower them by means of the friction on the rope. In some way the rope became fast and, as Eddie had it tied around his boots, he was whirled around at a terrible rate. One leg and arm were torn off and the leg thrown 150 feet away. He only lived a few moments.

A Riot at Chicago.

A small sized riot occurred at the corner of Twenty-second and Grove sts, Chicago, caused by the General Electric Street Railway company attempting to run a car across the tracks of the Chicago City railway company. Over 200 employes of the latter company seized the car, and, after derailing it, chopped it to kindling wood. None of the participants in the roit were seriously injured.

Carl Browne Arrested for Libel.

Carl Browne, the Coxeyite, was arrested at Massillon, Ohio, on the charge of criminal libel, and after appearing in court, was held under bonds for his appearance. He tried to indulge in one of his harrangues in court, but Judge Folger suppressed him, saying: "The court does not propose to indulge any man in his desire to pose as a martyr."

Express Robbers Captured.

The two men who on the night of March 29, robbed the express office at Arroyo Grande, were captured at Salina, Cal. The robbers, with two tramps, were caught in a box car headed south. A fight ensued in which one of the robbers was wounded and died three hours later. He claims to have been Harry Bishop of Cincinnati.

Tuscany Racked by an Earthquake.

Rome special: Tuscany has been shaken by an earthquake. At Tredisio a dozen houses collapsed. Seven dead bodies have been removed from the ruins and eight persons are missing. At Montepulciano, in Central Italy, roofs were shaken down and three buildings wrecked. Two persons were killed and ten or twelve injured.

Mexican Editor Sentenced.

City of Mexico special: Don Carlos Gavino, the editor who was arrested and tried for publishing an article attacking the Guatemalan minister, has been sentenced to imprisonment for seven months and to pay a fine of $200. M. Albert Samson, editor of L'Echo di Mexique, has been released on bail.

Colonel Lawton Goes to Santa Fe.

Orders have been received from Washington by Colonel Lawton, inspector general of the department of Colorado, to establish his headquarters at Santa Fe, May 1. This means the reopening of Fort Marcy.

No Gambling on Military Reservations.

The War Department has been informed that Major General McCook has prohibited gambling within the limits or in the vicinity of any military reservation in the military department of Colorado.

New Postmaster General.

Hon. William L. Wilson assumed the portfolio of Postmaster General at 11:10 o'clock Wednesday. The oath of office was administered by Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller.

Killed on a Bridge.

James McMechen was caught on a bridge west of Bellaire, Ohio, by a Baltimore and Ohio train and killed. The body was badly mangled. He leaves a wife and five children.

Two Babes Burned.

The house of Henry Hayden, colored, at Pettit, Ky., burned. The family barely had time to escape. Two children were badly burned, one of whom, it is thought, cannot recover.

Killed by a Fall.

While walking on a porch Mrs. George Anderson of Morgantown, Ind., aged 92, fell, her head striking a stone, crushing her skull.

REUNION AT SHILOH.

GREAT GATHERING OF VETERANS ON THE HISTORIC FIELD.

Famous Battle Ground Now Turned Into a Fine Park—Some Account of a Memorable and Bloody Conflict—Gen. Johnston's Death.

Story of the Fight.

The recent reunion of the survivors of the battle of Shiloh, or Pittsburg Landing, on that historic field, was the largest gathering of veterans held in the South since the war. The reunion was under the auspices of the Shiloh Battlefield Association, which was organized three years ago to purchase and turn into a park the historic ground where the great conflict took place. Col. E. T. Lee, of Monticello, Ill., is founder of the association and has worked most successfully in its behalf. The recent gathering was for the purpose of marking the positions of the various commands during the fight.

The account of the battle of Shiloh is one of the most exciting pages of the civil war. It was not intended to fight a battle there, but Col. Albert Sidney Johnston determined to surprise the Federal troops, encamped on the spot, and so precipitated the struggle. Gen. Grant was eating breakfast at Savannah, seven miles away, in the Cherry mansion, when he heard the first cannon that opened the battle. Mrs. W. H. Cherry was in the act of handing him a cup of coffee at the time. He immediately arose, saying: "We must go to the front, the ball has opened." Gen. Johnston had made his order of battle, and had formed his army in three long parallel lines.

GENERAL JAMES R. CHALMERS.

GRAVE OF THE DRUMMER BOY OF SHILOH.

The Confederate army moved forward in solid column under the personal command of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, striking Gen. Sherman's division at the Shiloh Church. He struck Sherman like a cyclone, rushing his line of battle right on to the batteries and throwing many of the new troops who had never been in battle into great confusion, capturing several pieces of artillery and the camps of the Union army, with all their provisions. The tide of battle rolled on, striking Prentiss and McClernand and driving them back to the line of battle formed by Gen. Hurlbut at Peach Orchard and Hornets' Nest. About 10 a. m. there was a concentration of the Union forces under the direction of Gen. Grant, who arrived on the battlefield about 9 a. m., and the further progress of the Confederates was stopped.

GENERAL DON CARLOS BUELL.

Death of Gen. Johnson.

A terrible struggle took place later on the crest of a hill at the Hornets' Nest. For five hours brigade after brigade was in vain led against the Union forces stationed here. When Gen. Johnston came up and saw the situation, he said: "They are offering stubborn resistance here. I shall have to put the bayonet to them." He sent Gov. Harris, of his staff, to lead the Forty-fifth Tennessee Regiment. Gen. Johnston rode out in front and slowly down the line. His hat was off. His presence was inspiring as he sat on his thoroughbred bay. His voice was persuasive. His words were few. He said, "Men, they are stubborn. We must use the bayonet." When he reached the center of the line he turned and said: "I will lead you," and moved toward the Federal lines.

With a mighty shout the line moved forward with a charge. A sheet of flame and a mighty uproar burst from the Federal stronghold. The Confederate line withered, but there was not an instant's pause. The crest was gained, and Gen. Johnston had his horse shot in four places. His clothing was pierced with bullets and his boot soles cut by minie balls. The Federal soldiers kept up a continuous fire as they fell back on their reserves and delivered volley after volley as they suddenly retired.

A minie ball from one of these did its fatal work. As he sat there after his wound, Gov. Harris returned and finding him very pale asked him, "General, are you wounded?" He answered in a very deliberate and emphatic tone, "Yes, and I fear seriously." These were his last words.

All next day the roll of artillery and infantry was heard all along the lines, and every foot of ground was being contested, as the Confederates were being pressed back from the battlefield. The losses had been fearful on both sides. The Confederates were driven from every position until they reached the old Shiloh Church where the battle had commenced on Sunday morning. They still held the ridge which had been charged and recharged time and time again. Gen. Grant came up and, seeing the situation, he selected Veatche's brigade of Gen. Hurlbut's division, with other regiments, and formed them in line for the final charge. "Well do we remember," writes Col. Lee, "when they took off their hats and gave three cheers for the Union and the old flag. Then sweeping up the slope and over the ridge, they disappeared down the decline, carrying everything before them and driving the Confederate army from the field. Cheer after cheer went up as the last shot died away in the distance and Shiloh was won."

Gen. Beauregard, in his report made after the battle, places the Confederate loss at 10,699. From later facts derived from the regimental, brigade and division commanders, it has been ascertained to have been much larger. Gen. Grant placed the Union loss at 13,047, which in the judgment of many is far below the actual loss.

There are buried in the National Cemetery at Pittsburg Landing, Tenn., almost 4,000 Union dead, besides the great number that were taken north by their friends and buried in the cemeteries at home or who died at the various hospitals and were buried in the National cemeteries in the North. The correct figures will show a loss of killed and wounded and died of wounds of not less than 30,000.

SHILOH SPRING NO. 2.

This is one of the Shiloh Springs near where the battle opened and where wounded from both armies gathered in large numbers for water.

TWO FATAL WRECKS.

Four Persons Killed by an Accident at Summerfield, Ohio.

Four persons were killed outright and a fifth fatally injured in a wreck on the Bellaire, Zanesville and Cincinnati narrow gauge at a trestle five miles west of Summerfield, Ohio. A coach jumped the track as the train was approaching the trestle, which is situated on a curve. The coach ran on the ties half way across, and then the engine also left the rails, carrying down five bents of the trestle to the ravine fifty feet below.

A fearful wreck occurred at Wood river bridge, on the Chicago and Alton cut-off, about half a mile north of Alton, Ill. A long, heavy freight train was coming down the grade when the middle of the train bulged out, and fifteen cars were piled on top of each other. Four men were killed outright and two fatally injured. None of them were known, but are supposed to be tramps who were stealing a ride. The wreck was caused by the train being too heavily loaded behind, and when the brakes were put on the front cars the weight behind was thrown on to a flat car in the middle of the train, crushing it to atoms and wrecking the other cars.

Maj. Moses Austin Bryan, who died recently at Brenham, Texas, at the age of 77, was a veteran of the Texas war of independence, and was present at the meeting between Gen. Houston and Santa Anna after the capture of the Mexican General at the battle of San Jacinto.

This European interference in Central and South American affairs is becoming a nuisance. It's time for Uncle Sam to stop all debate and convince the lesser powers that they can't play in his back yard.

BLOW TO TAX LAW.

SUPREME COURT MANGLES THE INCOME STATUTE.

Rents and Bond Interest Declared to Be Exempt—Business Men Must Pay—So Must Employes, While Big Trust Companies Escape.

Vast Changes Decreed.

A special dispatch from Washington says that the United States Supreme Court in the income tax case has reversed the decision of the lower court. The income tax law as a whole is upheld, but only by a divided court. Two important portions of the law, however, have been decided to be unconstitutional, and they are so serious as to affect materially not only the revenues of the Govtrnment, but the estimation in which the income tax will be held by the people. Under the decision, as reported, all incomes derived from rents are exempted from taxation by the Federal Government and all incomes derived from State and municipal bonds are similarly exempted. In other respects the income tax stands as it was passed last August, but the result of the consultations in the Supreme Court shows very conclusively that the law can easily be picked to pieces, provided suits are brought to contest each particular point as it comes up.

It is a curious fact, but none the less true, that the law which was passed at the dictation of the Populists has been distorted by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in such a way that it will absolutely protect the class of capitalists most offensive to the Populistic element. The landlords of the country will pay no income tax. The owners of bonds of almost any kind, either Federal, State, county or municipal, will also be free, while the business man, the manufacturer and the salaried employe will, for the present at least, be compelled to contribute to the treasury of the United States Government 2 per cent. of all incomes in excess of $4,000 per annum.

The decision of the Supreme Court is a matter of deep annoyance. Collection of the tax has begun; the Government budget was made out with regard to the $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 expected to be derived from this source. The exemption of great fortunes and great estates, the sweeping away of a large part of the expected revenues, is bound to create a situation in the treasury that will be embarrassing, to say the least. Further cause for dissatisfaction will be given to persons who think they see a menace to the rights of the people in the frequent interference of Federal courts in legislative concerns. It is said that one learned justice even attempted to "legislate" building associations into the act.

The first meeting of the Supreme Court was held March 16, two days after the conclusion of the argument, but no decision was reached, and it was not until March 30 that they succeeded in agreeing upon the outlines of a decision covering the opinion of the lower court. The court was evenly divided. Justice Jackson was too ill to take part. Chief Justice Fuller and Justices Field, Gray and Brewer were opposed to the law. Justices Harlan, Brown, Shiras and White voted to sustain the law.

MORE STAMPS ARE SOLD.

Postoffice Officials Assert that Times Are Improving.

The auditor's division of the Post Office Department has just completed the settlement of accounts of post offices for the last quarter of the calendar year, 1894, and the figures, as compared with those of the same quarter of 1893, are viewed with much satisfaction by the officials, says a Washington dispatch. The volume of business transacted by the postal service has long been considered a reliable index of the condition of trade and commerce of the country. When the recent panic began to affect the business interests of the country that fact was at once shown in reduced receipts at the post offices. Now that the figures show an increase the officials feel justified in arguing that the bottom has been touched and that the country is on the upward grade. The sale of stamps for the quarter was $19,405,571. This is said to be the largest sum received from that source within the same period in the history of the postal service. The receipts for the last quarter of 1893 were $18,199,729. The following table shows the total receipts at eighteen of the principal post offices in the country for the last quarter of 1894 and 1893, respectively. In every case an increase, varying from about 2 to 19 per cent., is shown, Charleston having the smallest and Indianapolis the largest rate of increase:

FREE PEWS

A Failure, Because We "Smile and Are Villains Still."

It was a painful confession of the failure of the free-pew system that was made on Sunday in Brooklyn by the rector of St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal Church. After a free-pew experiment of nine years Rev. Dr. Parker admitted that he had gained a larger knowledge than he ever before possessed of the sinfulness, or we may say the wickedness, if not even the viciousness, of some of the people who are church-goers. He declared that some of the men who occupied the free pews had no regard whatever for the moral obligations involved and seemed to him but as religious vagabonds. He told of men who would drop a cent in the box, and of others who would break their promises, and of more who seemed to be destitute of shame. One man, for example, who had hired a pew in another place of worship, cleared $250 a year by sub-letting it to another party, while he himself took a seat in Dr. Parker's free-pew church.

It was a melancholy sermon of Dr. Parker in which he announced the free-pew failure. He spoke of another church in Brooklyn which had tested the free-pew theory with the result that the deficit in its treasury had to be made up by the rich members. St. George's Church, in New York, is still experimenting with the system; but he said that the shortage there was to be made up by the many millionaires who belong to it. He did not know of a single case in which it had been successful. After appealing to his listeners to "pay up this time," he made a startling remark: "I notice," he said, "that some of you smile, which reminds me that some can smile and smile and be villains still."

JUNE 18, 1889, Gertrude Alpaugh, a handsome young woman of Andrews, put a slip of paper in a bottle and hurled it in the foaming Wabash. The slip asked the finder to write to her. Two days ago a young man of Lockport found the bottle and sent Miss Alpaugh the requested missive.

WHILE Frank Knotts, an employe of the plate-glass factory at Elwood, was assisting to carry a large plate of glass from the horse to the bench it suddenly broke and a large segment fell on him, ripping open his scalp from the top of his head to the base of the neck, inflicting a dangerous wound.

CHARLES CASSIDY of Jeffersonville, aged 71, was struck by a suburban train of the Pennsylvania road and fatally injured. Cassidy was deaf and failed to here the approach of the train. He was one of the oldest steamboat engineers in the country, and retired two years ago on account of his hearing. He leaves a wife.

THE famous Howard county ditch case of Lee vs. Rarey that has been in court about ten years was tried again last week, at Kokomo, resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff. The litigants are wealthy residents of Howard township, living on adjoining farms. The contention is over a small ditch. The costs of litigation have already exceeded the value of both farms and there is no telling when the contest will stop. The case will again be sent to the Supreme Court.

DEPARTMENT Commander Shiveley, of the G. A. R., requests a correction of the statement that he intended removing the headquarters of the order from Indianpolis to Wabash. He states that he had appointed Adjutant-general Smock to serve as adjutant-general during his incumbency, and the headquarters are located at the home of the Adjurtant. The banner and colors of the State organization were taken to Wabash, but he wishes it understood there will be no change otherwise.

THE ladies of the First Presbyterian Church of Kokomo, caused a slight commotion in religious circles by giving a minstrel preformance in the opera house. About thirty of the most prominent church members appeared on the stage in burnt cork and gave an excellent entertainment netting the church a handsome sum. Rev. R. G. Roscamp, the pastor, was consulted by the more diffident ladies, who hesitated about applying the cork. He eased their consciences by the jocular remark that some of them appeared on the street daily with powdered face, and even wore them to chuch, and he saw no difference from a moral standpoint whether the powder used was white or black.

JEFFERSON CALHOUN, a farm hand, aged 30 years, met his death at Peru by the running away of his team, which had scared at a train of cars, and as he could not manage them he jumped from the wagon, landing on his head and shoulders, which caused his death.

FARMERS in Laporte County say a large part of the wheat is killed there. The cold weather and the absence of snow from many of the fields resulted in weakening the roots and the dry weather and winds of March completed the work so the entire tops and roots of the wheat are dead. It is now thought that much of the wheat will be plowed up and put in spring crops.

WHILE digging an excavation for a parsonage in conection with the Westminster church at Fort Wayne, last week, one of the workmen made a singular find. He had gotten about four feet below the surface, and nearly under the wall of the church, when he struck some hard substance with his spade. Investigation followed, and the object proved to be a tiny coffin, about two feet long, eight inches wide, and hewn from solid marble. The top was fastened by metal clasps. On opening the box, the remains of a child were found. The coffin had no doubt been in the ground for many years. The Mayor has orderd the casket to be reburied as near the original spot as possible.

VENGEANCE BY VERA ROSEBERY.

A Story of a Briton in American Society. Written for This Paper by A. Oakey Hall.

CHAPTER I.

"And so, yonder lies 'the home of the exile, downtrodden and free'!"

These words, muttered rather than outspoken, were addressed by one passenger to another on board of the steamship Gallia, as a few years ago she was steaming about sunset time along the southern coast of Long Island, and making for Sandy Hook. Both were John Bulls to their very phlegmatic cores.

The speaker was a handsome young man of athletic form, of refined features and aristocratic presence, on whose face rested shadows of ennui ill-assorting with his age.

The addressed passenger was a thickset, pudgy man, with Hebraic cast of countenance, whose looks bore an impress of cynicism. They had struck acquaintanceship in St. George's Channel, and, both being good sailors, had been in every respect "fellows" during the passage.

"Yes, those are outlying shores of the Empire State. Home of the exile, it has been, as the shades of Emmet, Louis Phillippe, Louis Napoleon and Garibaldi could bear witness; home, too, of the downtrodden; but how much longer America will continue to be such a home depends upon politicians and labor socialists who have already begun to exclude nationalities and artisans. But yonder is not what may be called a home of the free. The mob and the press have reduced Americans to a sort of servitude."

The pudgy passenger spoke hesitatingly, as if weighing his words, as a coinmonger would weigh half sovereigns or quarter eagles of gold. The youngster seemingly half listened only as if weighing his own thoughts instead of his companion's words. Yet he responded: "And yet it is to be the home of my exile, and where I shall be freed at least of suggestive misfortune."

The pudgy passenger was a keen observer. He had not been a Wall street broker for fifteen years without acquiring a detective faculty, a judgment of men, and becoming an assayer of motives. He had, without attracting much attention, studied the youngster, and had molded much of the latter's observations into a fancied story as to his past.

"We shall soon go our various ways. You already have my card. Do not fail to call and see me as soon as you find it practicable. I may be useful to you, an exile, and perhaps save you from being downtrodden in this land of the 'free and easy.'"

The other slightly shrugged his shoulders, perhaps from habit, but he accepted the guerdon of courtesy with a pleasant smile, and turned toward the cabin.

Reaching his state-room, he encountered in the passageway his body servant, still pale and weak from mal de mer, yet wearing a self-satisfied grin as he found the vessel nearing port.

"Is your lordship ready to be vaccinated? I hear we are soon to be in quarantine, where the doctors get fees for plugging your arm with——"

"Hush, Mivins, you forget. There is to be no lordshiping over here. You have stowed that stuff all the voyage—not a soul on board knows who I am, and no one in America shall ever know. To you and everybody I am plain Mr. Carson, an old name in our family, and the moment you offend we part company and you return home for all your seven years of excellent service in our knockings about the world."

The body servant touched his forelock, and admitted that in the joy of coming near land he had "slipped his memory." It was plain to see by the dialogue which followed as to directions and acceptances of orders that master and servant had been on terms of intimate understanding for a long time. There were few points in Europe, Asia and Africa accessible to tourists that they had not visited. Milord held a courtesy title as the younger son of a deceased duke, and brother of the living successor whose two sons seemed to be a perpetual bar against any hopes of the younger brother succeeding to the family honors. These were impressed at present upon impecuniosity. There were historic titles, domains mortgaged to the last rookerie, and there was a husbanding of every shilling beyond the law of waste. Milord, who at Cambridge had been crack oarsman, unrivaled cricketer, well up on the list as a wrangler and the best boxer, fencer and athlete of his college, had for some time enjoyed a goodly income. But, although no gambler nor a bookmaker at races, nor given to gross vices, he had been no saver of money; and when the family crash came he found himself with a world-wide experience of men, languages, climes and manners, but the possessor of only a small annuity—the legacy of a dowager aunt, and of amount just sufficient to keep him on the living list for necessities, and with the only real luxury left him in the aid of a faithful servitor who blended the faculties of friend and body servant. Caring not to be prodded by social bayonets in the "battle of life" on English soil, he had preferred emigration to America rather than to Australia, where English gossip was as busily rampant as in Mayfair or Scarborough.

In a few days Carson had accepted the post of private secretary to the banker, and found himself installed at a fair salary in an occupation which gave him all his hours after 4 o'clock of each day. His easy manners, his imperturbability and curious patience made him in only a few weeks a great favorite with his employer, who treated him more as a friend than as a subordinate. Carson also won upon the habitues of the office. In a few months he became well known on 'change, and was often invited to dinners and evening entertainments. At the former he seldom ate or drank. His soup spoon and fish knife became mere toys then, but his conversation was frequent and attractive. He knew the art of the talker in sinking self and starting topics that interested the self-love or sympathy of listeners. He took conversation as a game of rhetorical battledore and shuttlecock, neatly returning with interested stroke a delivered topic. But he never betrayed deep interest. His throws were cynical, but never offensively nor drearily so. There seemed to be a subtle mystery about him that was implied only. He had a personal magnetism which especially attracted women. He baffled the curiosity of matrons in the most teasingly indifferent manner. The chatty American girl would often be piqued at his want of enthusiasm. His expensive tastes in carriage hire, change of dress, books, and in menus that rather gratified the eye than impressed the palate, all kept his purse thin, but he had learned how to marry thrift to desires. He suffered only one extravagance—the hire of the faithful Mivins.

Time hung heavy around the latter's neck. He could not, like Mark Tapley, become jolly under adverse circumstances. He missed his music hall of the evening. By day, his old nook in a "pub" was exchanged for the noisy tipple amid a crowd of strugglers at an American "bar." These shocked his traditions. He missed his lounge among the railings of Rotten row in Hyde Park. "Everybody is so busy here," he would remark to his incognito lordship; "I have been through Central Park this afternoon, and the carriage folk and equestrians seem from their look to be doing the park only under medical advice."

Thus, suffering ennui that as often visits "high life below" as above "stairs," there came one day to Mivins a curious incident. Several months after the exiles had exchanged Astor House comforts for apartments, one of the newspapers that originate rumors for other papers to deny contained an article of which the following is an extract:

"There also recently arrived an eccentric nobleman, who intends to "do" our country without divulging his identity. He affects the disguise of a valet and courier, and it is said plays his part with a perfection of acting that would do honor to any theater," etc.

This extract fell under the notice of Mrs. Mortimer Merton, a widow of fortune and social cleverness, who was known in New York society as its Mrs. Leo Hunter. Celebrities—especially from "foreign parts"—formed an element of her social craze whenever luncheons, dinners or receptions were to occur at her hospitable menage in "Upper-tendom." She read the reference over and over with sparkling eyes, and called her daughter—in her tenth season of bellehood—in consultation. They conversed of how to obtain a clew. "Yet the masked nobleman must come into evidence somewhere."

So for at least a fortnight Mme. Mortimer Merton converted herself into a detective at all social gatherings, asking pertinaciously, "Have you, my dear, heard anything about an eccentric nobleman who——" etc., etc. Soon chance threw into her way a clew that diligent search had failed to evolve.

CHAPTER II.

Mivins was cooling his ennui by violating an ordinance of Central Park in exploring its thickets and treading its verdure with all the quietude and stealthiness of a poacher, when he heard a half stifled shriek proceeding from the neighboring bridle path. Gaining its skirts, he saw a young girl clinging to her saddle pommel, while her horse—quite a docile looking animal—was running away with a portion of the bridle unbuckled. Meanwhile a dazed looking groom was coming up behind. Mivins, who, in halcyon days gone by, had in many seasons ridden to hounds in attendance on his master, and was himself a cool hand with restive horses, instantly ran onward until the excited steed reached him. While the animal was still running he seized the curb rein and soon had the animal in check. He then disengaged the affrighted lady and laid her upon the side of the bank as the stupid groom came up, to whom the rescuer dealt a few sarcastic remarks with allusions to the groom's better horse and his want of presence of mind.

They found that the young girl soon recovered from the shock. Taking Mivins' hand she began to pour out her heart in thankful words. She asked for his card, and the groom shyly added something about her father, "who would be happy to know who had been so heroic." Mivins merely said: "I have been something of a groom myself, and am now only a body servant. Wherefore, my name can be of no service, and I am only glad to have accidentally proved of aid." Thus saying he touched his hat—Mivins had caught graces and such magnetic assistances as residence amid good breeding inspires—and disappeared in the bushes. But not until he had unknowingly dropped from his pocket an used envelope postmarked from England and bearing his address. The young girl's sharp eyes saw it, while the dull vision of the groom missed it, and in a moment it was in the pocket of her riding dress.

Naturally the incident soon became a family topic, and the story was duly told the next evening at one of Mrs. Mortimer Merton's stereotype receptions, to the great delight of that lady.

"What luck!" she exclaimed, "and an ex-groom? And he claimed to be a body servant? Have you not read about the disguised and eccentric English noblemen? What luck indeed! It must be he. But," she added under her newly bridged teeth, "I shall be the first to take advantage of the lucky discovery."

Before the "lights had fled or the garlands were dead" the scheming hostess had duly written to the address copied from the truant envelope her compliments. Her R. S. V. P. card requested the pleasure of the company, etc., etc., on Wednesday evening fortnight to dinner. She sealed it with her crest, as befitted the destiny of the missive—the motto being, "Fortuna Juvat Audaces."

Meanwhile "Mr. Carson," solely to oblige his employer, had compromised with his dislike of society, and accepted an invitation to a large evening party, and while the Central Park incident was actually in progress, had been gossiping with one of his fellow banking clerks who eagerly coached the "Britisher" on the methods and characteristics of New York society.

In the evening after his little coaching he made his debut at the reception of Mrs. Judge Stevens, a friend and banking client of his employer. Her exactions as hostess were few and simple, but rigid. Her talkers and dancers must be fine-looking and graceful, with morals not too plainly stained with naughtiness, and they must wear unexceptionable evening dress. Mrs. Judge Stevens as a hostess knew the value of tasteful toilets in the background when differentiated against a background of black coats and white linen. Her husband, who had died of gout, induced by the prime old Sercial that has as utterly disappeared from the face of the earth as has the mastodon, had left her a large fortune and the knowledge of how to nurse and use it to advantage. Childless, she became a social mother-in-law to her guests of young women and young men. She had lived in many lands, and had skimmed the creme of the best societies abroad. She was a typical hostess in knowing how to drown her self-consciousness in the industrious streams of caring for and promoting the comfort and joys of her friends. No one sent other than a sternly necessary regret for invitations to her dinners and entertainments.

"You are very fortunate, Mr. Carson," said a sparkling young beauty to him on an introduction, "in being as a stranger so soon invited to Mrs. Judge Stevens' house. Now, if these were Mrs. Mortimer Merton's drawing rooms, I might say you were a nobleman. She is as fond of celebrities as is your London World newspaper."

Carson's face flushed slightly at the unconscious hit, as he retorted: "Are noblemen, then, so much sought after as our Welsh saddles of mutton?"

"Yes, we have a craze on noblemen. For instance, look at that group under the Millet picture yonder. Matrons and daughters are clustered around that recently arrived baronet, Sir Frederic Murray."

Carson looked in the direction, and his imperturbability slightly faltered in look and tone, for the personage in process of being adored was not that baronet, whom he well knew. "Rich, I presume, and marriageable?" he interrogatively answered.

"Oh, yes, and he brought splendid letters. Besides the baronetage tells all about him."

"And do letters and a printed book constitute all that American families accept as social vouchers?"

The tete-a-tete was interrupted by the polite "beg pardon" and an introduction to the chatty beauty, while Carson passed over to the group around the baronet and soon obtained an introduction. "Shall I roast, or roost and play the detective," he thought to himself.

"You also, I hear, are from England; are you much acquainted there?" said the "baronet," with a faintly suspicious falter in his tone.

"No, indeed, for I am only of the middle class—a banker's clerk—and, of course, go little into such society as yours, Sir Frederic."

The latter put his glass to his eyes, gave a haughty stare, and seemingly relieved stonily said: "Quite so. I fancied as much. Of course—of course," and turned away to pose before a matron and two daughters garlanded for any chance matrimonial sacrifice.

Carson soon took occasion to rejoin another young chatty American to whom he had been presented, and whom he had graciously asked to point out a few of the noted guests.
